Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth boards, bevelled, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is 'to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry,' and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

"The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is worthy the most liberal support of the public. It has done, is doing, and is likely to do, we believe, a grand work among our fishermen at sea."—The Yarmouth Independent.

"I look upon the Mission Vessel as a blessing to the trade of the Port."—The Mayor of Great Grimsby.

"It is indeed an advantage for our fishermen at sea by means of these vessels to enjoy the same privileges as we ourselves do on shore.—The Mayor of Great Yarmouth.

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with EVERY FLEET.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge).

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

HELP TO JESUS.

A Way of Helping a Seeking Sinner to the Saviour. By B. T. V. Price One Penny.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., 9, Paternoster-row, London.

necessary to invent the name "dust-holeing," for the peculiar descriptive faculty of the writer in question, and those of the disgusting French school who have set the ungodly fashion.

There is, however, a still deeper source of regret. Although the existence of this foul danger is now well known, there are parents who do not hesitate to give their sons and daughters the run of circulating libraries, where the works of such degrading writers are to be obtained, and who rarely give a thought to the literature with which the senior members of their families "kill time." Such neglect is simply sowing the wind, and the result is frequently reaped in a harvest of depraved imaginations and ruined lives.

Some words of an address to theological students by Rev. Newman Hall, and recently published, deserve attention. The common people crave the Gospel. They are weary of listening to scholastic essays, to arguments in proof of what they do not doubt, and to replies to objections which they either do not know or despise. In a village chapel we lately heard a lay preacher retailing the sceptical opinions which he daily heard in a large workshop. The villagers had never heard them, and their ignorance of them was better than their knowledge.

Mr. Hall, speaking of theatres, said in his student days a visit to one of them would have caused exclusion from College; to attend them to learn oratory was to learn the habit of pleasing instead of profiting men, which was fatal to good preaching. He said churches would refuse to invite a student who went to theatres. But might they not also refuse to hear a preacher who not only went to one, but invited the two leading actors to dinner with him on the Sunday?

A singular and novel argument in favour of extempore preaching is suggested by an article in The Lancet. It seems that other speakers do not suffer from relaxed throats so much as ministers of religion, and that because they do not give the aperture of the throat free play by holding up their heads. Nature herself seems to protest against the habit of reading sermons.

One of the most unpleasant pictures in the last Paris Salon represented two richly clad women under the influence of one of the drugs, the use of which is stated to be becoming very wide-spread in French society, and already French literature is beginning to be coloured by studies of the effects of this new feminine vice. The painting was singularly repulsive, although the highest efforts had been made to make it attractive, for the two women were nothing more nor less than wretched inebriates, as deeply enslaved to the drug as the most besotted drunkard to alcohol, and the spectator could not help picturing the result of that terrible weakness of the will which is inevitably induced by such indulgence.

Unfortunately, it is asserted that, in another shape, the drug is being largely used by women in England, who take it in the first instance as a sedative or a remedy for nervous complaints, and gradually yield to its baneful seductive influence, until they become its victims. We do not know how far the statement is accurate, and we trust that the matter has been exaggerated; but we would earnestly caution our readers against the use, except under medical advice, of the sedatives, and opiates, and "brain foods," now so freely advertised as remedies for nervous prostration, and weakness, and other kindred ailments. In many cases these remedies are worse than the disease; and in sleep and rest will be found the restorative agencies which God intended to be used in such cases of mental and bodily weariness.

If we have to look aright at the painful problem of the condition of our midnight streets, we must carefully bear in mind the fact that the temptations to evil come almost exclusively from one sex only. If it had not been for the state of the labour market, insufficient wages for wearing toil, defective education, and the loss of motherly influence, most of the victims who are a disgrace to our civilisation and our Christianity would still have been happy in purity. No man who remembers Christ will cast a stone at one of these, and every man who reflects that he may be to some extent responsible for the economic conditions which have forced many of the lost ones into their fatal position will be disposed to creep away ashamed.

Father Anderdon, S.J., who of late has been instructing the people of Manchester with regard to Protestant misrepresentations of Roman Catholic beliefs and doctrines, preached upon devotion to the Virgin "as one of the most prominent amongst non-Catholic difficulties." It is remarkable that, in asserting that devotion to the Virgin had nothing akin to idolatry, Father Anderdon qualified the statement by limiting it to "devotion to the Blessed Virgin in its highest expression," certainly a noteworthy limitation. He went on to add, however, that Mary was "a creature redeemed in a nobler way than all other creatures by the blood of her Son, inasmuch as the precious blood was applied to her by anticipation, not to cleanse her from sin, but to preserve her from it." !

Dr. Arnold's beautiful prayer, in committing, day by day, eye, ear, and thought to the keeping of God, which we recently quoted in our notice of the late Samuel Morley, reminds us of one in verse by Thomas Ellwood, the Quaker friend of John Milton. The poem commences:—

> Oh, that my eyes might closed be
> To what becomes me not to see!
> That deafness might possess my ear
> To what concerns me not to hear.
> That truth my tongue might always tie
> From ever speaking foolishly!
> That no vain thought might ever rest
> Or be conceived within my breast, and after other devout and longing aspirations, it concludes:—

> Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
> And make it clean in every part;
> And when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it so,
> For that is more than I can do.

A correspondent of The Record states that an image in stone of the Virgin and Child has been erected at the entrance to the north transept of Westminster Abbey now undergoing restoration, and asks by whose authority and at whose cost the image has been set up.

The Baptist denomination, in the year 1821, numbered about 40,000 members in Great Britain and Ireland, and in 1885 the number had increased to 215,000. The Sunday-school scholars now number 472,000 with 49,440 teachers.

It is stated that, as the Duke of Hamilton adheres to his resolve not to permit the United Presbyterian body to erect a place of worship on the Island of Arran, the people have made arrangements for a floating church, which will be moored in Lamlash Bay, and to which the congregation will be conveyed in boats. We could understand opposition to a public-house, but it is difficult to comprehend the grounds upon which a devout body of people are thus refused permission to meet together to worship God according to their convictions.

Of the myriads of people who are lovingly familar with that noble Gospel hymn, "Rock of Ages," which for a hundred and ten years has had a prominent place in every collection, few are aware of the deeply interesting fact that its author, Augustus Toplady, after having for years attended the means of grace in various churches in England, was brought to Christ in a barn in Ireland, where an illiterate poor man, scarcely able to spell his own name, was preaching on Eph. ii. 13, "Made nigh by the blood of Christ." And what encouragement there is in this wonderful circumstance for all those who are disposed to despise the day of small things. "Simply to thy cross I cling," was the trustful expression of the redeemed soul in the Ballynaslaney barn; and the words have echoed in thousands of hearts year by year since, and doubtless will continue to be the utterance of loving, childlike faith, until the Church militant is merged in the Church triumphant.

The Italian Minister of Worship is preparing a Bill on the reorganisation of ecclesiastical property. It is stated that the measure will render it illegal to receive new subjects in either monasteries or convents in the kingdom of Italy. Inquiries have been ordered to be made as to the number, condition, and establishments of the Jesuits, with a view, it is believed, to the expulsion of the members of that body. Legal proceedings have been taken against the Superior of a convent in Milan, where some girls took the veil recently, and the Minister of Justice has already expelled the Jesuits from San Gaetano, and taken possession of their temporalities, on the ground that there have been grave irregularities in the exercise of their ministry. Unfortunately, England affords an asylum to the priests who are sent out of other lands as being enemies of the State; and there is, therefore, reason to fear that this threatened action on the part of the Italian Government will result in a further flock of plotting Jesuits being cast upon our shores.

TOTTENHAM, N.—A mission has been held by Mr. C. King, at the Gospel Temperance Hall and the Girls' Orphan Home (Dr. Laseron's). There were crowded meetings night after night. Mr. King most faithfully preached the Gospel, with many useful illustrations from his own life. Mrs. King sang Gospel hymns with true feeling, which touched the hearts of many. She also spoke with power, and many were led to confess Christ as their Saviour. The meetings were intended for the poorest class; they came, and paid the closest attention. Souls were saved—among others one who had only just returned from five years' penal servitude.

DUNDEE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

THE annual Christian Conference was opened in Kinnaird Hall, on Tuesday forenoon, when there was a large attendance. Rev. W. J. COX presided, and called attention to the purpose of the meetings, which was to stimulate and increase the spirit of true Christian joy. Believers greatly add to their influence and usefulness by exhibiting cheerfulness and gladness. The special topic under consideration was and it was looked at from two points of view. Rev. N. K. MACKENZIE, Longforgan, spoke about our Lord as an object of Divine delight. He showed how the Father took delight in the Son because of their unity of heart, for God can rest only in that which is like Himself, and also on account of his mediatorial work. Rev. THOMAS CHAMPNESS, of Bolton, treated the other object of Divine delight—his people. His address was lively and vigorous. Some of his racy remarks provoked a broad smile. He stated, for example, that many people seemed to think that Christians should all be like so many spoons, with no difference in them, except occasionally in the stamp. God did not want his children to be all alike, but He did desire that they should all be one in love. The true workman found pleasure in his work, and God took delight in contemplating his saints.

At 2 p.m. a conversational meeting was held, the subject being "The Word of the Lord our Daily Bread." It also was largely attended. Rev. A. H. REID, the chairman, mentioned the following conditions for profitably reading the Scriptures: (1) a healthy appetite; (2) a stated time for reading the Word; (3) a study of it in all the variety it contains; (4) a good spiritual digestion; and (5) reading with the practical aim of serving the Lord in view. After several Christian workers had given their opinions on this most important topic, Mr. CHAMPNESS spoke of the Home Mission agencies he carries on in England. He has twenty-five evangelists, principally of the working-class, assisting him, and much blessing accompanies their labours.

At 7.30 the hall was crowded. Rev. JAMES WELLS, Glasgow, addressed himself chiefly to young men, of whom a large number were present. He made the command given to the widow of Nain's son, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise," his starting-point. Christ's Church is, in relation to many of her sons, like the widow; she is bereaved indeed, and all she can do is to carry them forth weeping in the direction of the Saviour. Many of our young men grow old in youth, and die in middle age, because of the vices in which they have been ensnared. The companions of our boyhood and those who used to sit beside us in college are now outcasts from society, and hastening to a dishonoured grave. We should have the spirit illustrated by the weeping widow; if we had it, we should have our young men restored to the Church, living souls. Mr. Wells then proceeded to give an account of the last winter, in which he took an active part. Large meetings were held in his church. Some merchant-princes of the West-end, full of zeal and of the Holy Ghost, were the speakers. Inkermann was a soldiers' battle; so long as the officers guided it, it was a failure. So the Glasgow meetings were not a success till the hearty co-operation of the young men already on Christ's side was secured. They drew their companions from the athletic clubs and warehouses. Then the Spirit of the Lord was poured forth. The audiences grew larger instead of smaller as the weeks rolled on, and the interest deepened. Often 250 or even 300 young men remained for conversation and personal dealing. Ministers should learn a great deal from the revelations of their modes of thought made by these young men, who belonged to cultured and wealthy families. Not one of them said that intellectual difficulties kept him from Christ. Their general experience was that they had striven against the light they had, fought against their convictions, and by so doing had lost self-respect. They felt that if they were to be true men they should accept the Gospel. It is not scepticism or doubt that keeps men in our day from decision; it is the lack of honest manliness. Mr. Wells was struck with the strong testimonies given as to the unsatisfactory nature of a Christless life, and to the heart-felt satisfaction found in the service of Christ. Those who bore these testimonies had every opportunity money and position could afford for enjoyment; yet they could get no true joy in pleasure. When they decided, they had, in some cases, to stand the chaffing of their friends, but they had their compensations. A fine young fellow told Mr. Wells, his minister, what his compensations were. First of all, he had never seen his mother so happy; in the second place, he could for the first time in his life look his faithful minister right in the face; and in the third place, he now lived with complete self-respect. These were certainly compensations worth having. The work went on without any excitement or sensation. The addresses were characterised by solid expositions of the Scriptures, and by the emphasis laid on such foundation truths as the Atonement. Mr. Wells concluded his interesting address by drawing the attention of his hearers to the fact, that between a willing sinner and the willing Saviour, there is not the breadth of a straw of real obstacle to present salvation.

Rev. THOMAS CHAMPNESS spoke of

THE CHURCH'S TRIUMPHS IN CHRIST.

Triumph is the programme word of believers. Paul, in 2 Cor. ii. 14, says: "Now thanks be unto God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place." That Saul, the persecutor, should write such words is as remarkable as that Charles Bradlaugh should deliver an evangelistic address. The hand that was nailed to the cross guides the helm, let wicked men row as they please. Christians should be more enthusiastic and hopeful in their service. They are excited enough in elections, but very cool and calm in serving Christ. In reading the pages of memory, we find that when we were weakest and felt baffled, God did his work; in the place where there is least hope, there God's strength is shown to the best advantage. He makes us to triumph in every place. Mr. Champness sought to stir up his hearers to fresh energy, by picturing the glorious triumphs Christ is to achieve in the days when, as he quaintly put it, one policeman will do for all England.

SECOND DAY.

The deliberations of the Conference were resumed on Wednesday forenoon, when Rev. C. M. GRANT presided, and the topic of "The Delight of Believers in the Lord" was under consideration. Rev. JAMES WELLS, Glasgow, spoke of Moses' prayer, "I beseech Thee show me thy glory," as showing the Christian's delight in God for what He is. Glory baffles us, and eludes the subtlest power of logical definition. Moses sought a soul-satisfying revelation of the glory of God. That glory consists in his greatness and in his goodness. His greatness is made manifest in the name Jehovah; and believers delight in the greatness so revealed. The other source of their delight is his goodness, which is grace in action pouring itself on every heart ready to receive it. Grace is often compared to the sun. It is the genius of the sun ever to give, and yet with all its giving never to exhaust itself. The specific form in which grace manifests itself is the forgiving of iniquity. Iniquity is that which is crooked. No theology will satisfy thoughtful men unless law and justice are considered, and the needs of an awakened conscience met. Through the Gospel dispensation that which is crooked is made straight, and grace reigns by righteousness. In Rom. vii. 27, Paul says: "For I delight in the law of God after the inner man." We do not wonder at delighting in the Gospel of God, but we do not wonder when a man gets the length of delighting in the law of God. Have you got that length? Young Christians find pleasure in the promises but not in the precepts of the Gospel. We may have a great deal of emotional religion, and yet lead an unsatisfactory moral life. To be strong and real we must have an increasing delight in the law of God.

Rev. MATTHEW GALBRAITH, Aberdeen, basing his remarks on Psalm xviii. 1, 2, dwelt on the Divine love as expressed in what God did for us, and showed how we should delight in the Gospel of grace. His address was made bright and interesting by the liberal use of pleasing illustrations.

ENCOURAGEMENTS TO PRAYER.

In the afternoon the area of the hall was well filled. Rev. Mr. BLACK opened up the subject of conversation which was, "Encouragements to prayer." He emphasised the truth that delay is not denial, and found a guarantee of the acceptance of our petitions in the fact that God is the God of grace. Delayed answers should be looked on in the light of a stimulus to larger and more intense desire. Several other ministers spoke wise and helpful words in the course of the discussion which followed. All that they said may be summed up in the old dictum, which is as new as the sun that has been shining for 6000 years, yet rises with fresh lustre this morning: "Men ought always to pray and not to faint."

In the evening, Mr. ROBERT WILSON, the energetic superintendent of the Edinburgh Drill Hall Free Breakfast Mission, delivered an evangelistic address on the righteousness God has brought near to us in the Gospel, to an audience which more than taxed the seating accommodation of the large hall. His vivid and impressive pictures of man's degradation, and the thunders of Sinai which echoed through his address, admirably prepared the way for the declaration of the Saviour's love which followed from Mr. GEORGE CLARKE. Hundreds remained to the after-meeting, and it is believed that very many decided for Christ.

THIRD DAY.

On Thursday forenoon the subject of "Zion's Peace and Prosperity" was under consideration. Rev. R. WATERSTON presided. Rev. JOHN FORDYCE, late of Simla, India, speaking of the source of Zion's peace, lamented the divisions in the Church, but admitted that they were for the present inevitable. Fuller light and harmony would come, yet even now greater union should exist among Christians. In India they were further advanced on this point than at home. There believers had to be out and out in their decision; and that helped to band them together. Besides, in the presence of the hoary rites of heathenism members of different sections of the Church lost sight of their petty differences and magnified the great realities they held in common. His prayer for Zion was that there should be such Christian co-operation that the world would say, Behold how these Christians love one another!

Rev. JOHN RIDDELL, Glasgow, dwelt on peace with God and peace of conscience as elements in Zion's peace. Both rest on the blood of Jesus, but the former is the expression of God's estimate of the efficacy of that blood, and the latter is the expression of the estimate of the believer's conscience—a widely different thing. Perennial peace of conscience is through the atoning blood, and is enjoyed in the proportion that we abide in Christ.

HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

In the afternoon addresses on home and foreign missionary operations were given. The charm of hearing about service for Christ drew many men and women to the hall, the area of which was comfortably filled. Mr. ROBERT WILSON, superintendent of the Edinburgh Free Breakfast Mission, was the first speaker. He ran over some of the special features in the important enterprise he is connected with. It originated in the impulse to fuller activity on behalf of the lapsed in Edinburgh, which sprang out of Mr. Moody's mission in 1874. The aim steadily kept in view is to bring outcasts under the power of the Gospel. Each week-night during the winter months has its own meeting. The classes thus reached are those resident in the slums of Edinburgh, who have sunk into the ranks of the lapsed, and are beyond the touch of other agencies; the tramps who come to the capital from all parts of the country; the criminals of the city, and most degraded women. The results of the movement cannot be measured, but its conductors hear from time to time of souls saved and lives filled with a new purpose through its instrumentality. Its workers recruit the mission field, and so a close bond of union is formed between home and foreign missionary operations. The account of this wonderful evangelistic and philanthropic agency was full of inspiration, and produced a marked impression.

Rev. Dr. VALENTINE, Agra, India, who has been engaged in Indian mission work for a quarter of a century, said that there are more gods worshipped in India than there are people to worship them. These gods are vengeful, and the incarnation of everything that is vile. There are 52,000,000 Mohammedans in India. Queen Victoria is the greatest Mohammedan sovereign in the world. In Lower Bengal, round about Calcutta, there are 30,000,000 people, and not one Christian missionary able to preach the Gospel in the Arabic tongue! Throughout the whole Empire there are 689 missionaries, which is something like six and a half missionaries for every population equal to that of the whole of Scotland. Dr. Valentine laid special emphasis on the value of medical missions in opening up fields of labour, and in getting an entrance into the hearts of the natives. He also pointed out the importance of training native agents who knew the language, were conversant with Hindoo religions and customs, and were climatically suited for the work of evangelisation.

Mr. FRASER, of the Indian Civil Service, followed with a glowing testimony to the success of Indian missions, and Rev. H. L. MACKENZIE, Swatow, spoke about work for the Lord in China.

In some respects this afternoon was the most interesting sederunt of the Conference. The attention was most lively, and the enthusiasm broke out more than once, and expressed itself in hearty applause. A fresh stimulus was given to home and foreign missionary operations in Dundee, the outcome of which, by God's blessing, will be the bringing of light to those who sit in darkness.

In the evening the good tidings of salvation were preached once more. The Spirit of God was present and the word was with power.

A CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCE.

A CIRCULAR is being distributed among all the Congregational ministers in Sussex, and to a limited extent elsewhere. We make the following extracts:—

HASTINGS AND ST. LEONARDS' CONFERENCE.

In March, 1853, what has since been designated "The Chester Conference" was held. A report of it was sent out by the last of the undersigned, which recorded that among the ministers present were Rev. Drs. Raffles and Redford, and Revs. John Angell James, Thos. Stratten, John Kelly, James Griffin, Richard Knill, J. Gwyther, Edward Jukes, J. Spence, Alex. Raleigh, John Raven, and Jon. Glyde. Some of these honoured ministers had assisted in the formation of the Congregational Union, and it was in perfect loyalty to it that they met at Chester. They held, however, that meetings of pastors or confession, prayer, and consultation in relation to the more successful discharge of ministerial duties, demanded a more private Conference than could reasonably be expected during the assemblies of the Union. The result met their expectations. The Spirit of Christ came near. His presence was felt in a marked and extraordinary manner. "Our hearts are too full to speak," was the language of Dr. Redford. "How shall we retain the blessing?" was that of Mr. Griffin. Undoubtedly the hallowed refreshment and quickening of that time were retained, and spoken about years after.

It has been thought that in these times, at once anxious and hopeful, a similar Conference might be held this Autumn. But the brethren who have wished this reside in the South. It is, therefore, thought desirable to hold one at the Robertson-street Institute, Hastings, on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of November next, and chiefly, though not exclusively, for ministers in the Southern Counties. The topic of the "Revival of Religion," which will occupy the attention of the Autumnal Session of the Congregational Union, will prepare for the more private application of the subject.

The circular is signed by Revs. James Griffin, Charles New, Archibald D. McMillan, William Bolton, W. Porter, C. R. Howell, Alfred Cave, Clement Clemance, J. B. Figgis, Edward Storrow, William Crosbie. Rev. William Guest, Ling Holme, Tunbridge Wells, is Hon. Secretary. Among the subjects of conference will be "The Present State of the Churches," "Conversion of Souls to God, with the Hindrances and Encouragements of the Times," &c.

POULVER, RINGWOOD.—Mr. Opie Rodway has been conducting services here. This being the first visit of an evangelist to Poulver, we had good congregations; and we trust many will be brought from the kingdom of Satan into the kingdom of God's dear Son. We were glad to see several young men and women impressed.

THE CHURCHILL RESTAURANT AND HOME for women should be better known by young women engaged in London, and also by those who visit the Metropolis. Situate at 77, Chiswell-street, E.C., near the great business centres, it provides the comforts of a home, and meals at a rate lower than that of ordinary coffee-houses. It has now accommodation for seventy-three young women. The Lady Superintendent would forward particulars on application.

PARKHALL CONVENTION.

THIS annual Convention was held in Mr. Livingstone-Learmouth's grounds, at Parkhall, Stirlingshire, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th inst. Mr. H. F. BOWKER, of London, presided. The Convention was opened by an address by the Chairman, on the Syrophenician woman. Very pointedly he appealed that every Christian would empty himself, and lie low in the dust, as this woman was willing to do.

Dr. ELDER CUMMING, of Glasgow, spoke from John v. 3—9. How many Christians, he said, were sick, blind, halt, and withered, unfit for service. Many had infirmities, known to themselves and to their friends. Too many were quite satisfied in retaining their infirmity, and had no desire to be healed.

Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM followed with an address on the blind beggar (Luke xviii. 37). The first thing is for men to know their need. If they know this, and the willingness and ability of Christ to supply, they will not be long before they cry out. But do not end there; follow Jesus; live the Christ-life, that through your life God may be glorified.

In the evening Dr. Elder Cumming and Mr R. Stewart, Glasgow, addressed the meeting.

ON THURSDAY MORNING

the proceedings were opened by an address by Mr. BOWKER on Psalm lxxxix. 15. He spoke of the year of Jubilee, with its threefold blessing—freedom from slavery, rest from labour in the field, the redemption of the mortgaged inheritances.

Rev. JOHN RIDDELL spoke from Eph. i. 3, on the wonderful richness of the Christian. In this chapter there is an inventory of the blessings: they were chosen to be members of his body; to be children to Himself; accepted in the Beloved as eternally, as unchangeably as the Beloved is accepted; they have redemption according to the richness of his grace; they are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise; the earnest is given for their own enjoyment, a foretaste of the full inheritance. Christ is all to the Christian; what is the Christian to Christ? "I am glorified in them." He is the Shepherd, but they are the flock. He is the Vine, they are the branches. The Church of the redeemed is his bride, his crown jewels. What marvellous possibilities there are for the Christian! Let everyone remember that he is Christ's, and that it is theft to live to the world or for the world—to use for oneself the hands, the feet He has purchased at such a cost.

Rev. JOHN SLOAN, Glasgow, selected as his subjects Ezek. xxxvi. 25 and Deut. xxx. 6. Many are like the Samaritans who "feared the Lord, and served their own gods." Unless the life is cleansed it is useless. If the heart is impure, all the grace that enters it goes to cleanse it. None can come out until the uncleanness is taken away. Until this is done the Christian life cannot but be disappointing. How selfish Christians are, satisfied to live in the enjoyment of pardon and peace! Each man knows what is between his soul and Christ. Let him take it away. The operation may be painful, but trust the surgeon. He will circumcise the heart, cutting round and round, taking away all the tendrils that are growing downwards, setting us free from the world, giving us grace to grow upwards, clinging round the heart of Jesus.

ON FRIDAY MORNING

Rev. WILLIAM HASLAM spoke from 2 Kings ii. 9: "Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee." Elijah and Elisha set out from Gilgal, the place of turning, and went to Bethel, the house of God. After conversion we are brought to our Father's house, into the family of God. They came to Jericho, the city of the moon, or the place of budding forth. God's people have no light in themselves, but they are bound to reflect the light of heaven. They crossed the Jordan, the place of death. We must die to self, that we may live to God. He brings us out of Egypt into the promised land, the state of heavenly life upon earth. Faith is doing God's will, whatever it costs. Conquering faith laughs at impossibilities. Elisha saw his master going, and, full of faith, grasped the fallen mantle; it was his. Following his master's example he smote the Jordan that his master's God might reveal Himself to him. Christians are only to be the channels of the blessing, and witnesses of the risen, mighty Saviour, the Conqueror of sin and death and Satan.

On Friday evening the Convention was closed by a heart-searching practical address by Mr. WILLIAM SLOAN, of Glasgow. It was the "moderate" who was to be feared—the Christian who contented himself with his own respectable moral life. The profligate was a beacon—a warning to all. The Christian without the Spirit was a dangerous light, alluring the sinner, and wrecking him upon unseen rocks. Mr. Bowker, in closing, emphasised Mr. Sloan's words, by pointing out that, under the Jewish dispensation, the leper was allowed to go at large, the manifestation of his disease being a sufficient warning to those with whom he might come in contact. It was when it was doubtful whether the man was clean or unclean that he was considered dangerous.

The attendance was larger than on previous occasions, and intense earnestness pervaded the meeting. Mr. and Mrs. Livingstone-Learmouth deserve cordial thanks for their kindness in providing such a rich, spiritual feast, for throwing open their grounds to all present, and for their generous hospitality to those who came from a distance to attend the Convention.

WITH EMIGRANTS AT BLACKWALL.

(By our Special Commissioner).

I visited the Emigrants' Home at Blackwall on Monday, September 20, and found that on the following morning 500 souls were to leave for Queensland.

The Home, which is just outside the railway station, comprises two large buildings, one of which was a large hotel, but is now the headquarters of the Home.

Between these buildings is an open quadrangle, and in this some of the emigrants were pacing to and fro, others sitting down as far from the bustle as possible, while near the smaller building was a number of young women waiting their turn to see the Queensland Government doctor and despatching officer. As time passed, and every train added to the numbers, the scene became very animated, many preferring the bright sunshine to remaining in the house. Entering from the quadrangle the loftier and more substantial building, the old Brunswick Hotel, we are in a long corridor. On our left is the entrance to the large dining-room, which will accommodate three hundred and fifty people, and round its walls are hung bags, with Gospel texts worked in coloured letters on them, containing various periodicals. On the right of the passage is the superintendent's office and the store, beyond this the staircase, and at the further end the entrance to the servants' apartments and scullery. At the store the emigrants can obtain anything they are likely to require on the voyage at a low price. Passing upstairs, on the first floor we come to the single women's sitting-room—a large, cheerful apartment, with a balcony overlooking the Thames; on the second floor are the single women's dormitories. This floor is entirely shut off from the rest of the house by a partition and door, which is locked at night. On this floor there is accommodation for one hundred and forty young women, each of whom has a separate bed.

In the other house the young men are quartered. Their sitting-room is on the ground floor, and is furnished with tables and benches. A staircase leads directly to their dormitories, which have beds for 220 men. Passing up another staircase from the entrance are the apartments of the married people. They are similar to the others described, only the families have more space, and each family is partitioned off by curtains from the rest of the apartment. At the further end of the building is a large enclosure, where all the luggage is received, examined, and thence embarked.

But now dinner time has arrived, and the young men having had their meal in their own quarters, the bell summons the others to the large hall, which is speedily filled by the expectant crowd. Mr. Wilke, the kindly superintendent, says a few words to the people here and there. He asked those who had friends in Queensland to hold up their hands, and in an instant a forest of hands are upheld. This was followed up by a question as to the reports from Queensland, which brought forth from many the response of "Very Good" and "First Rate."

In the afternoon I met Captain Almond, the Queensland Government despatching officer. I found him a courteous English gentleman, willing to give me what information he could. He said that the Government is very careful as to the emigrants, and very few turned out badly. Those that did were generally men and women who were sent out by people in England who wished to get rid of them; ne'er-do-wells, who were untrained and vicious, and useless alike in Queensland as in England. He always rejected them when he found them out.

By his courtesy, I spent some hours in his room, while the intending emigrants passed, and were appointed their berths. After having seen Dr. Woodward, who will have charge of them on board the ship, the emigrants file into the room. The Captain is very considerate in dealing with them, berthing friends and relations together, and inquiring about their prospects in Queensland. Certainly the reports they have received are of a land much to be desired. Here is a young woman from Scotland, going out to join an aunt who has been out four years, and who had obtained a house in two years.

Now a little girl, six years old, is brought forward. She is going out to her parents at Brisbane. The difficulty is to find somebody to take charge of her. However, after some trouble, Captain Almond gives her in charge of a motherly woman who is going out with two German girls. Here is another girl, going out to a situation at £25 a year, having been engaged by a colonist on a visit to England. Then a girl of thirteen years of age comes. She was left in England by her parents fourteen months ago. They told her they could not take her. "They should not have gone without you, if I had known it," remarks the Captain. So it continues until all the intending emigrants have passed, and then there is a lull.

In the evening a meeting is held in the large hall, to which the emigrants are invited; at the same time in other rooms there are meetings for Germans and Scandinavians. A large number of the people gathered, and a Gospel address was delivered by Mr. H. W. Maynard, and Messrs. T. A. Denny and Revolta also spoke. There was plenty of lively singing, and at the after-meeting much spiritual blessing. Thirty-five of the girls banded themselves together to start a meeting on board the ship, as did also a number of young men. Some of the emigrants gave their testimony, while the workers gathered out the anxious ones from the meeting. In times past God has wonderfully blessed his work here—indeed, some of the instances related by Mr. Wilke would seem incredible but that we know all things are possible to God. Let one example suffice. A short time ago, twenty girls were left behind, as the vessel was full. They had to wait four weeks for another ship, and during that time fifteen of them were converted, including two who decided before leaving.

Since the Home was established in 1883, the number of emigrants passing through have been as follows: In 1883, 4302; in 1884, 11,186; and in 1885, 17,763.

That the Home is a boon to the emigrants, and that they appreciate it, is evident. The Christian influence which permeates the whole must commend it to all Christians. The good that it effects, even in a negative manner, by keeping the emigrants out of the hands of the unscrupulous people who abound near the docks, is great, and this is enhanced by the direct spiritual results. Clergymen and others who know young people coming to London to embark should send them to this Home. Arrangements have been made whereby emigrants can book direct to Blackwall without any additional charge, and cards, giving full instructions, may be obtained on application from the superintendent, Mr. A. Wilke, who also takes care that the young women passing through the Home have information respecting the depôts and institutions at their destination, to which they can go, such as the Lady Musgrave Lodge and Training Institute at Brisbane.

A CHURCH IN THE HIMALAYAS.—A new church was lately opened at Mussoorie, as a memorial of Lilly, the daughter of Rev. Dennis Osborne, the well-known Indian missionary. It seats easily about 400 people. Large numbers of Europeans resort to this town during the hot season.

THE PORTSMOUTH PROTESTANT INSTITUTE was opened in February. It contains two fine halls, seating 1600 and 500 people respectively. The committee are organising an aggressive work for the winter, and hope, by means of Gospel services, systematic lectures, library, reading-room, and the distribution of anti-Romish tracts, to counteract the Romanising influences in the borough, now containing a Roman Catholic Cathedral. Mr. James Manning has been engaged as an evangelist, and the committee require aid to enable them to carry out their proposals, and will also be glad to receive Protestant books for the library, which may be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Mr. J. A. H. Marcus, at the Institute, Commercial-road, Portsmouth.

CONFERENCE IN GERMANY.

Attracted by the description of the beautiful scenery surrounding the Vereinshaus, in Blankenburg, established by Fräulein Von Weling as a centre of Christian mission work in Thüringen, we resolved to spend our holidays there. The Vereinshaus offers to English tourists good accommodation and genial Christian society at a small expense. The work here is purely evangelical, and we were pleased to see a great number of both young and old at the Sunday and other Gospel meetings.

From the 13th to the 15th of September a conference of Christian workers was held at the Vereinshaus. Clergymen of the Church, pastors of different denominations, and laymen met here on neutral ground. A spirit of Christian unity and love prevailed. The subjects considered were, "Christian life: how to maintain it: its hindrances," "Separation from the world," "Service for God," and "The Coming of the Lord." The early morning hours were spent in prayer and seemed the most precious of all.

Dr. Ziemann presided. He strongly reminds one of Mr. Moody in his punctuality and tact in bringing a lengthy address to a timely end. Herr Pred. Gebhardt (compiler of "Frohe Botschaft" containing many translations from English besides his own compositions) brought his power of poetry and song to the service of God, singing with spirit, fervour, and sweetness. All the guests, among whom were Dr. Baedeker and Pastor Rohrbach, were entertained at the Vereinshaus. The weather was glorious. On the morning after the Conference, the brethren who remained rose early and walked to the Griesbachfels, a lovely mountain height. There, after refreshments, the last few words were said, and the last few prayers offered. The happy gathering closed with the singing of a translation of "Will you meet me at the Fountain?" God grant that a river of blessing may flow out through Luther's land from this Conference.

MISSION TO GIRLS.

Some six months since a band of Christian workers met at 114, Crawford-street, Edgware-road, to devise ways and means of reaching the girls who parade our London streets on Sunday, after evening service has commenced. After prayer and consultation, it was decided that the workers should visit the most frequented thoroughfares in the vicinity at the time specified with tracts and cards of invitation to the Mission Room, where a bright service would be held.

Although the number brought in was comparatively small, yet a large percentage were brought under conviction of sin, and were made happy in a knowledge of sins forgiven. The names and addresses of converts were in all cases taken, and they were visited in their homes, and introduced to a Bible-class of their own choice near their homes. The majority of these girls were respectable servants, who, perhaps through no fault of their own, were (in their opinion) too late to attend the ordinary service; but a kind word and pressing invitation had constrained them to hear the way of salvation.

Those who are familiar with rescue work know that the ranks of the fallen are recruited in part from those who spend their time in this way. The Y.W.C.A., 470, Edgware-road, having kindly placed their rooms at our disposal, we shall have the privilege of holding a similar service on Wednesday evenings. We hope to commence our work there on Wednesday, October 6. Any who sympathise with the object in view should communicate with me.

THE LATE MR. SAMUEL MORLEY.

HIS COUNTRY LIFE.

AN exceedingly interesting conversation between a representative of The Christian Commonwealth and Mr. John Maxted, of Leigh Chapel, near Mr. Morley's country home, is published in that journal. In the course of the interview, Mr. Maxted said:—

"I have known Mr. Morley intimately for the last fifteen years, and felt it to be an honour to be associated with him in Christian work. His business and public engagements were so numerous that even his own family were accustomed to speak of him as a lodger, so that his most intimate neighbours would see comparatively little of him. He would say, "I am a Congregationalist, but I am weary of mere denominationalism." It was evident he longed for something more Christlike. While his sympathies were very broad and liberal, he was always ready to assist every good cause, whatever party it might be connected with, so long as he believed they were working in a right spirit for the one great and blessed end, the salvation of souls and the uplifting of the people. I have tried to get him to take a service, or to come and help me on the platform by reading, but never succeeded. He would very modestly decline, and say, "Perhaps I may some day." In presiding at some of our meetings—say a Temperance meeting, when it was usual to read a portion of Scripture, his voice would soon falter, showing his deep feeling. Some of our meetings, such as prayer meetings and the Lord's Supper, are always open for any brethren present to take part, and while his servants would frequently do so, he himself was always silent and retiring. At first he, with Mrs. Morley, used to drop into any seat. At the Lord's Supper this would be embarrassing to such of his servants as might be sitting by his side, and received the bread and wine first, and felt as if they ought to pass them to him first. When I called his attention to the matter he at once said, 'Oh! but we are all one here." I pointed out that it would be to the comfort of all if he would keep to one seat for the sake of the feelings of the servants. After a time he yielded to my persuasion, but his servants always took part with freedom, and he seemed always pleased to hear them.

"When Mr. Morley purchased the estate, the only other place for worship beside the church was a small room, formerly a slaughter-house, in which the Association Methodists met, though not as a church. Mr. Morley's eldest daughter was a very devoted Christian, and at once got among the people, seeking their spiritual and general good. A tent was soon obtained from Mr. Hurditch for evangelistic services, in connection with which I was invited down to take some of the meetings. This was the commencement of my relation to the place. The work grew, and seeing the need of a suitable building, Mr. Morley had the present chapel erected. The spacious schoolrooms were completed within two years after the chapel. We use them for our Sunday-schools and week-night meetings.

"Mr. Morley has generously erected six preaching-rooms for us, five of which have been enlarged lately at his expense also. Not less than £2000 a year, for many years, have passed through my own hands in support of the work. Frequently in sending me a remittance he would say he felt it a privilege to be "a partner in the concern," and considered his was but a small part compared with the devoted efforts of those who laboured daily among the people. He was much interested in the progress of the work, and always regretted his inability to see more of it. I should say the total number attending these places every Sunday would probably be over 1000. Besides these many others are reached by house-to-house visitation. We have over 700 in Church Communion, and about 1000 children in the Sunday-schools, besides other agencies for benefitting the people—total abstinence meetings, mothers' meetings, with coal and blanket clubs, penny banks, the deposits in which amount to £700; three libraries and a reading-room for the villagers generally. In all of these Mr. Morley sympathised in a very practical way. He was also the chief supporter of the village National Schools, and several times paid the whole charge for additions to the buidings; besides this he contributed freely to the expenses and repairs of the church. We see a marked improvement in the condition of the people since Mr. Morley's residence here. We have now comparatively little drunkenness and immorality."

In a letter to ourselves Mr. Maxted says:—"We feel that having known Mr. Morley so intimately makes our sorrow deeper than is possible to those who had less intercourse with him. I can confirm in my experience all that the papers say of his excellent qualities, and think that it is impossible for his grace to be so well known as I have seen evidences of—it was simply beautiful.

"Our work here is peculiar, but thoroughly according to his own mind. He saw that to build a Congregational chapel here would only lead to other denominational buildings, even in a small village like this. And he saw with pleasure and admiration the simple unsectarian line of action taken by his dear eldest daughter fifteen years ago, and which I was privileged to follow up and carry on up to the present. If at first he had any preference for Congregationalism as such, he was glad to forego it for the sake of union, and his thoroughly Catholic spirit met with entire satisfaction in seeing the friends here of whatever denomination uniting together. Mr. Morley called ours true Congregationalism.

"While submitting humbly to the Lord's will in removing him, we are all very sad, for we deeply loved him. We feel we have lost a very dear and kind friend and wise counsellor. I was permitted to see a little of his inner life, which is too sacred to speak of, but he would seldom let me leave without asking for a few minutes in prayer together."

MISSION WORK AT HAVRE.

MISS S. L. BURGESS writes:—Having, with a friend, seen the work in this place amongst both French and English, we are anxious to testify to its intense interest and reality. The Lord is doing a wonderful work amongst the French through Rev. George Whelpton, Wesleyan minister. Drunkards have been reclaimed, and many lost ones brought in; they are being carefully tended and instructed in God's Word.

We attended an experience meeting, when several men and women testified to the power of Divine grace in their hearts, and spoke of their trials and difficulties. Their devotion to their pastor is very touching; and the seriousness and even solemnity of their piety are in striking contrast to the usual frivolity of the French character.

We also attended a most interesting meeting at the Sailors' Home, conducted by the superintendent, Mr. Hermann, when several ladies spoke, urging those present to make sure of salvation. In the audience were several fishermen, whose boats were detained in harbour by the French authorities; also some Hungarian, Scandinavian, and Swedish sailors, two or three of whom gave their testimony. There is a branch of the Y.W.C.A. at Havre, conducted by Mrs. Whelpton, who has a Bible-class for English girls every Sunday afternoon at her own house.

OBITUARY.

REV. JOHN MACLEAN, D.D., LL.D.,

THE ex-President of Princeton College, died at Princeton, N.J., on August 10. He was nearly 89 years of age. Dr. Maclean had been continuously connected with Princeton College for more than seventy years, and thousands of Princeton students will be saddened by the tidings of his death.

M. MILSAUD.

Le Christianisme records the death of M. Milsaud, one of the editors of the Revue des deux Mondes, and also of some other able journals. By birth a Roman Catholic, reflection and force of conscience led him to accept the evangelical faith. He believed that Ultramontanism and free thought were the two great perils which now threaten France, and so used his talents and influence on the side of Protestant Christianity.

LEICESTER Y.W.C.A.—The progress made by this branch of the Y.W.C.A. is remarkable. The house was opened in December, 1885, and is now full of boarders, while the membership is already over 300. Miss Royce, of Newcastle, conducted a series of services recently. The hall was packed repeatedly, and the expectations of the committee were more than realised in the blessing received through her instrumentality. The Association is about to open Girls' Parlours in various parts of the town.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

HAMPSTEAD.

THE new building at Willoughby-road will be opened on Tuesday, October 12. Public meeting at 8 p.m.; Mr. H. M. Matheson in the chair. Revs. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Gilbert S. Karney, and William Brock will address the meeting.

HAMMERSMITH.

A sale of work in aid of this branch will be held on October 27 and 28 at St. Mary's Iron Room, Edith-road, Hammersmith-road. Further particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Wycombe House, 263, Hammersmith-road, W.

BRIGHTON.

Mr. John Watts, the open-air missionary, is leaving for work at Hammersmith. A meeting to bid him God-speed was held at the Friends' meeting-house on Monday week. Rev. J. Turner Smith will give a series of Bible studies on Friday evenings in October.

BATH.

We have concluded a series of over fifty open air meetings in the courts and alleys surrounding our rooms. During the winter our workers would much have liked to have held Gospel meetings on our premises, but we have no provision. Perhaps some of the Master's stewards who have benefitted in health by visits to our renowned city may help us to obtain new premises.

LONDON.

Last Thursday evening the members of the Metropolitan Y.M.C.A.'s held their first United Conference at Exeter Hall. Mr. George Williams presided. The first half hour was given to prayer, and then Mr. C. M. Baker introduced the subject, "What is the special work of the Y.M.C.A? is it being done efficiently, and what can be suggested to improve the work?" He maintained that the work of the Association was purely, spiritual and deprecated any divergence from the original constitution. Mr. A. C. Furse followed, and stated the case from the opposite point of view; a general discussion ensued, and was vigorously maintained.

MELBOURNE.

The thirteenth annual Christian Conference was held from August 10 to 12. The subject was "The Power of the Spirit." The afternoon meetings were held in the Association Hall, and the evening gatherings in the Temperance Hall. Much blessing was experienced, and the halls were filled to overflowing on the last day. At the closing meeting Rev. J. G. Paton spoke of his labours in the Hebrides, and Rev. J. S. Shiels on mission work among the Santhals. On the following day the president, Mr. Gillespie, gave his annual breakfast, at which 211 guests assembled. Addresses were given by Rev. J. G. Paton, Rev. J. F. Ewing (from Glasgow), and the Hon. James Balfour. The Association, besides the work in its rooms, holds three services weekly in the Sailors' Home, and a Sunday service in the Theatre Royal.

NORWICH.

On Wednesday, Sept. 22, the formal opening of the new premises (recently acquired and adapted at an estimated cost of £6000) took place. The proceedings were of an interesting character, commencing with a prayer and consecration meeting at 10 a.m. Rev. W. A. McAllan presided, and an earnest address was given by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun. In the afternoon a large audience assembled to witness the formal opening by the Mayor of Norwich (Mr. John Gurney), who afterwards presided at a public meeting, when he said he should prize the silver key just presented to him as one of the most interesting mementoes of his Mayoralty. Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P., president of the Association, also spoke, as did Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Canon Patteson, and Dr. Geikie.

At the evening meeting the chair was taken by Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P., who was supported by Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, Mr. E. J. Kennedy (Exeter Hall), Mr. Cole (Y.M.C.A., Canada), Mr. Campbell Frazer (Aberdeen), and a number of local ministers and other friends. Resolutions affirming the principles of the Y.M.C.A., and pledging the meeting to its support, were carried by acclamation. Amongst the visitors there was a concurrence of opinion as to the complete and homelike arrangements of the magnificently suitable premises, and it was mentioned as an interesting and significant fact that the recently vacated habitation of the Y.M.C.A. has been taken over by the Y.W.C.A. a literally "sister" society with kindred objects and aims.

Letters to the Editor.

THE MANHOOD OF CHRIST.

Sir,—The very great importance which the subject is to young Christians must be my excuse for troubling you with a few words on the letter in a recent issue headed, "The Manhood of Christ."

Surely "W. F. B.'s" friend was rightly pained at the statement made by Mr. Gibson that the Lord Jesus Christ "is the Believer who heads the list."

In the same address Mr. Gibson used these words, "I am right in calling the Lord Jesus a believer. He passed a life of separation to God here as a believer by personal decision."

It is to me intensely painful to hear God the Son thus spoken of.

Let us reduce it to a simple question—What is a believer?

I think I am right in saying that a believer is one who knows that he is entirely and utterly sinful by nature, and that the one and only way in which he can purge himself of sin in the sight of God is to believe that the Lord Jesus Christ, the son of God, co-equal with God, died on the cross to atone for the sins of all who believe on Him, and who thus, under conviction of sin, becomes (to use Mr. Gibson's words) "a believer by personal decision," i.e., he receives, depends, and relies upon the Lord Jesus Christ for life and salvation.

Surely, then, to speak of God the Son as being "a believer by personal decision" conveys the sense of his having had original sin in Himself to be atoned for (I shrink with pain as I write the words), and is a most appalling statement, the more appalling when we remember that no one can become, or be, a believer, except under conviction of sin. We shall do well to bear in mind the only words Thomas could find to say to his Risen Saviour—"My Lord and my God."

This error in doctrine seems to me so dangerous that I would have said much more but for the fear of encroaching too much on your space.

H. Stuart Wortley.

Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W.

Sir,—In reference to the letter of "W. F. B." in The Christian, may I ask those who think it "derogatory to the Lord Jesus to speak of Him as a believer" to ponder what is said of Him in the Psalms and Epistle to the Hebrews?

Those who see "Christ in the Psalms" find in almost every verse an outbreathing of confidence and trust in God. The whole life of Jesus, the Son of Man, was, according to this book, an expression of faith and dependence on his Father in heaven, even to the last expiring words upon the cross.

The keynote of the Epistle to the Hebrews lies in the words: "Made like unto his brethren." "He learned obedience by the things which He suffered."

Nay, even from the mouth of his enemies themselves we have the testimony, "He trusted in God."

The word "believer" is so often used in a conventional sense, that it is well for us to return to the plain Scriptural meaning, viz., one who simply trusts and confides in God. That this trust was pre-eminently the leading principle of our blessed Lord's life and character, it is impossible, in the light of Scripture, to doubt.

And is it not the supreme blessing of the Gospel that it brings men back to that restful, loving confidence in God which they had lost, and which can be regained only in the acceptance of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? I. S.

Dear Sir,—In a recent Christian, under the heading, "The Manhood of Christ," I see a letter from "W. F. B.," asking confirmation or otherwise of Mr. Gibson's expression about the Lord Jesus being the "Believer who heads the list." Now I am not a scholar, but an old soldier; and if Heb. xii. 2 does not set forth Jesus as Mr. Gibson describes Him I do not know what it does set forth. I have one translation of the New Testament which puts "leader" for "author," and in R.V. (margin) it is "captain."

For years I have rejoiced in the fact that the deeds referred to in Heb. xi., as having been accomplished by faith, are all just put in the shade when the faith of Jesus is contrasted with theirs. The company written about in Heb. xi. would not be cut short, but for the division of Scripture into chapters and verses; and are they not a company of believers? and the captain of a company is always supposed to be the best man, and I am sure in this case Jesus, the incarnate Son of God, as the Son of Man, is the best Man of his company.—I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

An Old Soldier.

Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich, Sept. 16.

Dear Sir,—With regard to the inquiry of your correspondent "W. F. B.," it seems to me that no one who has thoroughly studied the Scriptures can doubt that the Lord Jesus, in the days of his humiliation, walked by faith and not by sight, even as his servants do.

In Heb. xii. 2 He is called, "the captain and perfecter of faith." The Authorised Version has "our faith," which is unwarranted, and leads the reader quite astray as to the meaning. The New Version has "the faith," which is literal and grammatical, but gives no clear and appropriate meaning. If we translate simply "faith," we are quite warranted grammatically in so doing (those who are not good Greek scholars may observe the use of hé agapé in 1 Cor. xiii.), and we obtain a meaning which is exactly what the context requires. In Heb. xi. the persecuted Hebrew Christians are encouraged to exercise faith by the remembrance of the long array of preceding saints who by faith fought and conquered: then the list is closed by the crowning example of the Son of God Himself; "who for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame." How was this joy set before Him? Not in open vision, but in the written promises of his Father's Word.

If Christ had walked by sight, and not by faith, during his sojourning on earth, he could not "have suffered being tempted," nor have been "in all points tempted like as we are." It is upon the faith of God's servants that the pressure of temptation falls. Let open vision be substituted for faith, and temptation would scarcely be felt. We know that, under special illuminations of the Holy Spirit, some of God's people have been so lifted up that outward trials seemed like nothing to them. What would trials then have been to the Son of God, if He had lived with all the glories of heaven continually visible to his mental sight?

Again, in Heb. ii. 13, we have the prophetic words: "I will put my trust in Him" (Isa. viii. 17, LXX.) attributed to the Messiah; and the Messianic Psalm (xvi.) begins with the words: "Preserve me, O God, for in Thee do I put my trust." Those, indeed, who would rightly comprehend the position of the Saviour whilst on earth need especially to study the Psalms in which his sufferings are foretold, and where we see how He "offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto Him that was able to save Him from death."

There are a number of passages also in the New Testament of which no satisfactory interpretation can be given, unless we believe that Christ when coming into the world laid aside for the time, not merely his external glory, but likewise the exercise of his Divine omnipotence and omniscience (as the faculties of an ordinary man are suspended in sleep), and thus brought Himself into a state of entire dependence on his heavenly Father.

In this way He "emptied Himself," as St. Paul tells us (Phil. ii. 7), and was "in all things made like unto his brethren," sin only excepted. And thus his brethren, when their faith is most severely tried, when everything seems to say that their God has forsaken them, may go to Him as to one who has gone through a like experience, who has said, "Mine eyes fail while I wait for my God."

That beautiful hymn, "With joy we meditate the grace," &c., is as Scriptural as it is beautiful.

I remain, dear Sir, truly yours,

Woking. H. Noel.

FUEL FOR THE POOR.

Sir,—Hunger is a sharp thorn, but cold and hunger are worse. Our mission workers encounter scenes of terrible destitution here in the East; whole families are without either food or fuel. The empty cupboard and empty grate, and hunger-bitten children crying for bread, are a lamentable sight. Would your readers help us to secure a supply of coal and coke while these are yet cheap, so that we may be able to alleviate the sufferings of the poor when the cold weather comes? We are anxious to place an order at once for forty tons of coal and forty chaldrons of coke. By purchasing now we can secure coals at 18s. per ton, and coke at 9s. 6d. per twelve sacks. The amount required is £55; only we must purchase at once. Contributions may be sent to Mr. McCarthy, 294, Mile-end-road, London, E., or to

Yours very truly, J. W. Atkinson.

HINDRANCES TO MISSIONARY PROGRESS.

Sir,—As one who laboured for six years in the foreign mission field, but had to leave it with regret over four years ago, I read with great interest the paragraph headed "Plan to Evangelise the World" in your issue of September 9. Why should such a plan as that suggested by Mr. Arthington, of Leeds, not be adopted? I see but one barrier in the way, but it is at present, alas! a most formidable one. It is the jealousy and rivalry of sect, for I cannot characterise it in any milder way. It is quite true that in the mission field there is much more of brotherly feeling, and often a closer co-operation of the members of different sections of the Church than there is in our home lands. It would, indeed, be wonderful were it otherwise. The realisation of the vast extent and gross darkness of heathendom tends to make differences that loom largely at home dwindle into comparative insignificance on the mission field. They are, from that point of view—the point of view of the world's need—seen to be but the mirage caused by the heated atmosphere of the ecclesiastical world.

Yet still, even in view of the awful fact of millions perishing from lack of knowledge, miserable, childish, sectarian jealousies do much to mar the work of evangelisation abroad. As a consequence, one district in a special field will be flooded, so to speak, with copious springs, each having some distinctive feature; so that the darkened heathen is puzzled as to which is the true spring from which he may drink and live; and thus sectarian differences are at once established. Whilst another district of the same field, equally needy, may be left almost neglected—a spiritually dry and thirsty land. This is, to a great extent, the result of an unthinking rivalry. Where one missionary society is rejoicing in success, another rushes in to share in the glorious work of bringing in the sheaves. But such action will, in most cases, be a hindrance (as introducing confusion, rather than a help. It were always better for missionary societies to follow the Apostle's leading, and to strive to preach the Gospel, not where Christ is named, lest they should build on others' foundation.

Now, I do not entertain the Utopian idea that an amalgamation of all Protestant Churches, or missionary societies, ever will, or ever can, take place in the present state of things. It is very questionable, indeed, whether such an amalgamation, were it possible, would be an unmixed good. A certain ecclesiastical form or government may be better suited for one people than for another. But I do think, and pray earnestly, that the various missionary societies should cease to continue abroad the rivalry that leads to so much waste of Christian effort at home. Surely no true servant of our Divine Master would, on calm consideration, assert that any other foundation than Christ and faith in Him is essential to salvation! Surely no High Churchman, however advanced, will assert that it is Episcopacy that saves; no Presbyterian that presbytery is alone the sure foundation; no Baptist that without immersion men cannot be saved? Why, then, should not the various Reformation Churches in Britain, America, and on the Continent of Europe, recognising each that the others preach that which the Apostles proclaimed as alone necessary for salvation—Jesus Christ, and Him crucified—each confine itself in its missionary operations as far as possible to one district in a special field, if the field is a large one; or to distinct fields, if these are narrow? And why could not the world be mapped out, and occupied after Mr. Arthington's plan in this way? I know one part of the foreign field where this arrangement holds tacitly. The northern district is watered by Presbyterians and Congregationalists, and the Southern by Episcopalians. This arrangement works well. Why should it not be carried out more widely?

There is one missionary society that may be mentioned as showing an example to all the Churches. In a selfish and time-serving age, the Moravian Church, with its devoted people and brave missionaries toiling under the unkindly skies of savage lands, where the labourers are few, furnishes us with an example of primitive Christianity.

May all our conferences on, and endeavours after, the consecrated life, lead to a more earnest desire on the part of Christ's true servants to fulfil, unselfishly, their Master's command: "Go ye and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name (not of a special sect, but) of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. xxviii. 19).

PRAYER v. JESUITISM.

Sir,—When we see and read so much about the Jesuits trying to establish themselves in England, and Roman Catholics spreading their baneful doctrines and influence, we as Christ's disciples should not go to men but to God, and pray down these strongholds of Satan.

We read of Elijah and Daniel standing alone with God, confronting all the hosts of Baal and the false gods. I believe, if more prayer were in our midst, real earnest prayer to God, and to our Saviour, who is pleading at God's right hand, who delights to answer the prayers of his children, we might see a great deal more done for Him than we see at present. THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

Dear Sir,—In connection with a paragraph in your paper on the state of the Congregational churches, as referred to by Rev. W. Crosbie, is it not a question of momentous importance, and one lying at the very threshold of all inquiry and remedial action,—As to how many of such churches, or their ministers, are denying or setting aside the grand fundamental principles of the old Independent body, viz.:—

(1) The supreme authority and sufficiency of the Bible (see first Article, Declaration of Faith);

(2) The central or fundamental fact of the Gospel in the real or vicarious Atonement of Christ.

It is notorious that, in some of the Congregational organs, these are alleged to be no longer held by the modern ministers and churches, and in a variety of ways and channels the same is continually assumed, while numerous facts in connection with ministers, churches, and colleges, all over the land, occur to point to such a sad aspect of things, to which, apparently, no denial is given by those who ought to know.

Now, what, I think, we have a solemn call to ask, with deep concern, of the fathers and leaders of the body yet with us remaining true to the faith, is:—

(1) How far this is so?

(2) Is it possible there can be any real permanent spiritual or Scriptural revival in and among churches of which the foregoing is true, and can there be any expectation of such while these conditions remain? And, if not,

(3) Are not these, in all faithfulness and honesty, the first subject for anxious and prayerful consideration?—I am, Sir,

An Old Independent.

Messrs. VARLEY & HANNINGTON at the CAPE.

Dear Sir,—Many who were interested in the departure of Mr. Varley and Mr. Hannington for the Cape will be glad to hear they have had a most prosperous voyage. The presence of the Lord has been very manifest. A number from among the passengers and crew were brought out for Christ, and were able to rejoice in Him. Others were revived and strengthened. An address from Mr. Varley on the coming of the Lord made a deep impression. At Madeira, Mr. Smart, Miss Weston's agent, received them. He is enduring much persecution from the Roman Catholics; the Jesuits threaten to do him bodily harm. Mr. Hannington asks for the prayerful sympathy of Christians on his behalf. Mr. Maxwell Wright was arrested for preaching the Gospel in the island.

From Cape Town I hear there was an earnest and expectant spirit in the churches. The looked-for blessing had come in part through the special meetings for young men, being held by Mr. Kidd, from Cambridge. He was speaking with acceptance and power. We beg for the prayers of your readers on behalf of South Africa. M. S. Osborn.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND WOMEN. — The Annual Sale in aid of the funds of the Home at Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N., will be held in the Finsbury Park Hall, Y.M.C.A., on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 26 and 27. There are now thirty-two inmates, whose ages range from fifty to ninety-one years. There will be two stalls of work done by the blind. Money or articles will be thankfully received by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bright, the hon. superintendents, at the Home.

*A TREASURY OF TEMPERANCE TRUTH.

Temperance literature has now grown to such dimensions as to form a large library by itself. We have books on the various aspects of the question; but a work at once scientific, comprehensive, and encyclopædic, though much needed, was not written till lately. When it made its appearance, it was warmly welcomed. It was published in 1884, and has already run through three editions; the fourth lies before us. Mr. Gustafson has conferred a lasting benefit on the advocates of total abstinence, and struck a strong blow at the social curse of our day. He spared no labour in collecting his materials. His researches covered the examination of some 3000 works, dealing more or less directly with the whole sweep of the problem. This speaks volumes for his industry and earnest desire to pick out and put in their proper relations what had been spoken and written about temperance reform. It is easy to ridicule emotional pictures of the evils of intemperance, and to sneer at the appeals of men stung to the quick by the havoc it has wrought, but it is not easy to fight against hard facts. "Facts," as the Scotch poet has it, "are chiels that winna ding;" and Mr. Gustafson presents a long array of facts which are calculated to silence the objections of those who make light of the necessity for temperance reform.

After giving a graphic account of drinking among the ancients and an able history of the discovery of distillation, Mr. Gustafson passes on to the consideration of the effects of alcohol on the physical organs and functions. He clearly shows that it is a substance entirely alien to the body, and that it cannot be transformed into anything useful to it. He proves from recognised scientific authorities that the action on the stomach and blood is disastrous, causing structural degeneration throughout the system: in a word, he makes out a satisfactory case that the striking title of his book—"The Foundation of Death"—is legitimate, as intemperance is the great founder of death. He thus groups into one terrible picture the results of alcoholic drinking:—

"It lowers the whole plane of physical health; it ruins digestion, poisons the circulation, making it sluggish, as in amphibious creatures; it preserves waste tissue, and checks excretion, making the human body, so to speak, a case, or cask, of preserved compost; . . . the nervous system, after continued over-excitation, becomes eccentric and fitful in its action, small causes putting it to the highest tension of irritability, while great reasons for excitement are regarded with apathy. These derangements are attended with baleful visions, impure fantasies, weariness of self, and disgust with life; the whole hydra-evil culminating in idiocy, insanity, and temptations to, and commission of, all kinds of crimes and sensualities, theft, incendiarism, suicide, and murder."

Loathsome as this picture is, it is not so repulsive as the one of the general effect of alcoholism on the moral nature. Mr. Gustafson shows how it drags the man—man made a little lower than the angels—down to depths of degradation the beast of the field can never know. Its social results, as presented by him should be a trumpet-call to every reader who has a spark of manhood, or of patriotism, to do all that in his power lies to stamp out the curse which is sapping England's greatness. Intemperance is responsible for nine-tenths of the paupers (of whom, according to Hoyle, there were over three and a half millions in 1881), three-fourths of the criminals, one-half of the diseases, one-third of the insanity, three-fourths of the depravity of children and young people, and one-third of the shipwrecks in England. Surely such appalling facts should banish indifference, and rouse the listless to energy!

Mr. Gustafson does more than describe the evil; he also suggests the remedy. We earnestly commend his invaluable chapter on "What can be done?" to the attention of every Christian worker. He has thoroughly grappled with the necessities of the situation, and gives advice worthy of being acted on. He places special emphasis on the truth that the foundations of all temperance reform are in individual character and worth. Each man, woman, and child has his or her part to play, and success depends on how that part is played. Our first duty is to find out what we can do, and our second is to do it.

Mr. Gustafson's book is a treasury of temperance truth. It is indispensable to all temperance workers, but its circulation should not be confined to them. Young men should read it to learn the terrible dangers ahead if they yield to intemperance; fathers should master its contents so as to be able to let their children know as much as possible about the evils of alcohol; and lovers of their country should study its powerful exposure of the sophistries that would lull men to sleep in the presence of a national foe.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Glasgow Abstainers' Union has resumed its winter concerts in the City Hall.

Rev. J. M. Hewson, Baptist agent, has been conducting a temperance mission at Bacup.

The jubilee of the Yorkshire Temperance Society is to be held from October 17 to October 24.

A National Coffee Tavern Conference is to be held, October 22, at the Kensington Town Hall.

The author of "Study and Stimulants" advises cyclists to avoid stimulants. As a cyclist, he has found milk the most refreshing drink.

At the Missions to Seamen Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, at Cardiff, 3542 sailors have taken the pledge.

A crusade against both political and social clubs is promised for next session, on the ground that many are merely "illicit drinking shops."

The Temperance Record recommends the immediate looking up of converts who have taken pledges during the summer, and their invitation to the winter meetings.

The Scarborough Town Council have resolved to take steps for the abolition of the annual race-meeting there, as it has been the cause of much intemperance and other grave scandals.

The Hon. Mrs. Fiennes has provided a hut for coffee and reading purposes, and supported a missionary at the summer training camp at Strensal, Yorkshire. Many of the militia and regulars have signed the pledge.

The House of Commons has ordered a return of all convictions for drunkenness on Sunday, in England and Wales, since September 29, 1885, stating, if possible, how many were boná fide residents, and the population of the district.

FOREIGN.

General Neal Dow is actively engaged in the Prohibition campaign this fall.

A Chief in Arizona has drunkards tied to a tree till five next morning, when they receive thirty lashes.

Complaints are made in Toronto that the police authorities are very lax in prosecuting violators of the liquor-law.

Miss A. Grey, late of Antwerp, has been appointed European Organising Superintendent for the World's Temperance Union.

Maliki, Emir of Nupe, on the Great Niger, has made a touching appeal to Bishop Crowther to save his country from being "brought to ruin by rum."

The Atlantic Monthly says, nominally, the United States Government may be Democratic or Republican, but the party leaders of either "acknowledge allegiance only to the saloon."

"The Foundation of Death" is to be translated into the Malagasy language. Mr. Gustafson is informed that rum is shipped and sold in Madagascar, to the natives, at £3 a cask of 250 to 290 litres.

Archbishop Jeeferies, after spending thirty-one years in British India, said: "For one really converted Christian as the fruit of missionary labour, the drinking practices of the English have made 1000 drunkards."

The Central United Christian Temperance Union of Chicago is about to open a large restaurant in connection with their lodging-house, where 4000 lodgings were given poor men, during the month of August, for 10 and 15 cents each.

Mr. James Irwin, of Liverpool, who has resided several years on the west coast of Africa, says: "The natives are as hasty and capricious as so many children. They have but few wants, and they care more for rum and gin than anything else." One explorer says: "Unfortunately, a few bottles of trade gin will go much farther in the trade with the native than ten times its value in cloth."—Christian Leader.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.—The Sunderland Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association had a nine days' mission, from Sept. 12 to 20, conducted by Mrs. J. Lucas. The greatest interest has been evinced, the attendance night after night steadily increasing. The meetings were held in the Victoria Hall, with the exception of Sundays, when the Assembly Hall has been used. On Sunday evening, the 19th inst., the large hall was packed, great numbers being unable to gain admission. Mrs. Lucas spoke with great earnestness, and 120 pledges were taken at the close. During the mission 586 pledges were taken. A. A. Cameron,

A YOUNG LADY'S DIARY.

The following extracts are from a most delightful book now in the press, and shortly to be published from this office, entitled "Nineteen Beautiful Years"—a sketch, by Miss Frances E. Willard, of the life of her sister Mary. The extracts are from Mary's diary:—

March 5, 1860. — This beautiful morning dawns upon my seventeenth birthday. Truly is it said that this is the sunniest part of life—when the future lies like a pleasant land before us; when the present has us; when the present has no clouds, and the past seems good and fair. O kind and loving God! on this happy natal morning I give Thee unfeigned thanks for life and the blessings it has brought to me. From infancy, through childhood, up to youth, thy hand has brought me. Still keep and still preserve me, Father up in heaven; and grant that when unworthy I am taken from this pleasant, pleasant world, I may, through thy great love, go to live in one still more beautiful, for the sake of Christ, our Saviour. Dr. F. closed the Bible after his discourse at the chapel yesterday, with these words: "Brothers, with most men life is a failure." What thought could be more sad than this? "I'll try—oh, I will try—to fulfil God's design in my creation as well as I know how!"

April 29.—Since school commenced I have not written much in my journal; for, as this term is my last, I am more heavily taxed than ever before. To-day, however, I need not deny myself the pleasure. This morning Dr. Foster* preached in the presence of his people the last sermon that they may ever hear from him. It is needless for me to remark upon the merits of the sermon. As Dr. Foster stood up before the large audience—for every seat and even the aisle was full—he looked sad, though very calm. But when, at the close of the discourse, he addressed the students of the University, his more particular charge, his feelings overcame him.

The church was full of crying when he said: "I have loved you, and have been proud of you young gentlemen; I have cherished the same feelings toward you that a father has toward his boys. I think you have felt this." Then he told them that his greatest sorrow in leaving them was the remembrance that they were not all religious. He said, "My words of counsel and of entreaty that you should be good and true Christian men I hope you will not forget. You have heard them in public lectures; and in private, when no one but yourselves was present. Let them not be forgotten." He stopped and covered his face. We all wept together in silence—the noble man, and those who loved him. After a brief pause, he said, "I must master myself sufficiently to repeat the request that I have made—let them not be forgotten."

I seldom cry; but then I could not help it. As Dr. F. stood before us saying farewell, I thought,

If I should ever win that home in heaven
For whose sweet rest I humbly hope and pray,
In the great company of the forgiven, among the radiant faces close by God's throne, I should see that of this great, good man, whom "none knew but to love, and none name but to praise."

Without date.—Several weeks have passed since the above was written, and many changes have taken place, some of which have been connected with myself. I have "graduated" since then. My schooldays, viewed "as such" (to use Dr. D.'s frequent expression), have closed, though I hope my days of growing wiser may never come to an end. I shall not dance in the sunshine nor walk in the shadows of a schoolgirl's life any more. The daily round of duties, half-pleasant, half-wearisome, is ended; and though I may regret it by and by—at least so certain "grave and reverend seigniors" have said—I am not sorry yet. I will try to cultivate my mind by reading and by associating with intelligent persons. God has placed me in the midst of friends whom I love very dearly.

I am almost happy; and if I were a Christian I should be very happy indeed. I wish I were a Christian; and yet it is foolish to wish. Why do I not say that I love God because He is so good to me, and that I will try, in Christ's strength, to do those things that he requires? That is all the demand that the Bible makes of me. I should feel very much ashamed if I did not say as much as this in speaking of an earthly friend to whom I owed everything that his love and his power could give me. Why can I not act as reasonably towards God, instead of saying, "I wish that I could say and show by my life that I am grateful?" Revelation and my intellect show me the relations in which I stand to the Ruler of the Universe as plainly as I see those in which I stand toward the Governor of the State in which I live. In both cases I am the inferior; but the degree of my inferiority differs infinitely. How it is that I cannot readily take hold of things spiritual? He whom I would worship knows much better than I; and to Him I will earnestly pray for light and peace.

Harlem, near Chicago, August.—As Frank and I sat here reading, Clara came running upstairs, and said, "Oh, girls! ma says a man was just now killed on the track when the cars passed."

How the thought shot through my heart! A man killed—so near us—while we were so painless and calm! It makes no difference to me what man it was, for I do not know anyone here; only I hope that he was good. He is out in that strange "eternity" now, and stands before the Judge of all worlds, to give an account 'for the deeds done in the body;' and, perhaps—oh! perhaps his sins have not been blotted out by the blood Christ shed for us. But be this as it may, whether the change to him has proved for better or for worse, he knows the answers to many of those wonderful questions which we vainly ask all our lives long. Ah! to the wisdom of that poor labouring man the acquirements of all the theologians on earth are not to be compared.

After all, this is a sober world, and we ought to take warning by this terrible event that has transpired so near us, and try to live for a better one, where nobody is killed by the cars, and no hearts are broken by the loss of those they love; where nothing ever "hurts or destroys"—for all the paths up there are paths of peace.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—October 3, Lev. ii. 1—13; October 4, Lev. iv. 27—35; October 5, Lev. viii. 1—15; October 6, Lev. ix. 1—16; October 7, Lev. xiv. 1—18; October 8, Lev. xvi. 1—14; October 9, Lev. xvi. 15—25.

MERRION HALL, DUBLIN.—A tea meeting was held here on Tuesday, last week, for those who had received blessing at the Bloomfield Avenue tent during the previous three months. Mr. C. Inglis gave all an opportunity of telling out their experience in a few words, and a goodly number thanked God that the tent had been to them the place of all others to be remembered.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Our eleventh summer's Gospel tent campaign here has just closed. In fourteen weeks 215 services have been held. The last Lord's Day (Sept. 19) the tent proved inadequate to the need; numbers stood outside, eagerly listening to the solemn message. The following day 172 of the converts and friends sat down to a social tea in the tent at 5.30, after which a public meeting was held, when the tent was again well filled. The Earl of Cavan opened with some practical advice to young Christians, and was followed by Mr. Douglas Russell, who spoke from Jeremiah iii. 19: "How shall I put this among the children?" The meeting closed with an address on the sevenfold blessing of Christ, embracing his peace, love, joy, grace, strength, rest, and glory. Great has been the blessing vouchsafed to the efforts put forth this summer, both on the sands and under canvas; also by means of our Bible-carriage, from whence several thousands of Gospel-books, tracts, Bibles and Testaments have been distributed. We have had much encouragement, likewise, in our other tents, which have been used chiefly in villages and the suburbs of Bristol.

Mission and other Appeals.

Jerusalem.—Rev. William Allan appeals for funds on behalf of the "Gobat Memorial School" (formerly called "Bishop Gobat's Orphanage"), Mount Zion, Jerusalem, which now contains sixty pupils, besides fifteen students, who are being trained as schoolmasters, &c. Mr. Allan's address is St. James's Vicarage, Bermondsey, London, S.E.

Nottingham "Goose Fair" will be held on October 7, 8, and 9. As last year, the Y.M.C.A. is seeking to bring the Gospel before the people who come seeking after pleasure. The Secretary, Mr. H. Johnson, appeals for gifts of tracts, books, &c., for circulation amongst the show people and others. They should be addressed to the Y.M.C.A., Morley House, Mansfield-road, Nottingham.

Boys and Girls Industrial Homes (Shaftesbury House, Forest-hill).—The Committee of the Homes have received two offers of fifty guineas each towards liquidating the debt on Shaftesbury House, on the condition that the whole amount is subscribed during 1886. There are fifty-seven children in the Homes; thirty-three admitted during the past two years. Mr. T. G. Litchfield is Hon. Secretary.

Magic Lantern Slides.—For some years past the Ragged School Union has been lending magic lanterns and slides to its connected schools free, for lectures during the winter months. The work is hampered for want of slides, some that were lent to the Union, having to be returned. Any friends having slides which they do not require, would assist this important branch of Christian effort by sending them to Mr. John Kirk, Secretary, Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall, W.C.

EAST LONDON TRAINING INSTITUTE.—Mrs. Grattan Guinness writes:—The Fifteenth Session of our Missionary Training Institute in East London opens (D.V.) on Oct. 1; we crave the prayers of our friends that it may be the best, in every sense, which the College has ever known, fruitful to the glory of God, and the good of the heathen.

A COUNTRY RETREAT. — Miss Lovell, of Kilburn, who has lately sojourned with some blind children at Breachwood-green (nine miles distant from Welwyn, Herts), writes to us expressing great thankfulness at having been directed thither. The farmhouse where our correspondent stayed belongs to Mr. Shipley, of the Village Mission; she speaks of it as "a quiet and pleasant resting-place," and strongly commends it to any Christian friends seeking rest and change. Particulars as to accommodation, terms, &c., can be obtained from Mr. G. Shipley, Breachwood-green, Welwyn, Herts.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—That the Lord will work in the hearts of his own children, and among the unconverted at Helmsdale, Sutherland; and praise for tokens of blessing received.——For a mission to be held in Castletown, Isle of Man, from October 10 to 31, by Mr. Gorham, of the Evangelisation Society.——For a poor woman, a backslider, who says she has sinned against the Holy Ghost, and whose distress of mind has undermined her bodily health.——For large outpouring of the Holy Spirit in connection with the labours of Rev. O. L. Leonard in Ireland, and that the name of Jesus may be glorified thereby.——For blessing on a mission at Cardiff, from October 3 to 18, to be conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton.——For the conversion of a mother and family who have gone astray.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 3.—I CHRON. XV.

"No long period had elapsed since David had wrested the stronghold of Zion from the last remnant of the hill-tribes of the Canaanites; . . . and thither he determined to bring the ark, which, for nearly fifty years, had been neglected at Kirjath-Jearim. It is difficult for us to conceive the feelings which would be awakened in the hearts of the people by such an event. . . . The first attempt miscarried (xiii. 9—14). David feared to bring the symbol of so awful a presence to his city. But the blessing on the house of Obed-edom reassured him; and the king, and priests, and people, the elders, and the captains over thousands, in solemn procession conducted the ark to its resting-place on the holy mountain. It was then that the majestic anthem of the twenty-fourth Psalm rose to heaven." —Perowne.

5.—The sons of Kohath.—"The order of the sons of Levi, according to primogeniture, is Gershom, Kohath, Merari. But the Kohathites, of whom came the priestly family of the Aaronites, had precedence in all respects. To them especially was committed the attendance upon the ark and the bearing of it (Num. iii. 30, 31, iv. 15, &c.).—Sp. Com.

8.—Elizaphan, "or Elzaphan, was a great-grandson of Aaron. He was reckoned the head of a distinct house."—Idem.

10.—Uzziel "was brother to Hebron, and father of Elizaphan. Of the six Levitical families, one only was descended from Gershom, one from Merari, and four from Kohath."—Idem.

13.—Because ye did it not at the first.—The words must refer, not to ceremonial cleansing, but to the bearing of the ark upon their shoulders. It was by their failure to do this their part in the first instance, by the carriage of the ark in an unauthorised fashion, viz., in a cart, and not upon their shoulders, that Uzzah's guilt was incurred (see Num. iv. 15, &c.).

26.—When God helped the Levites.—"This takes the place occupied in 2 Sam. vi. 13, by the clause, 'When they that bare the ark had gone six paces;' and it is reasonable to suppose that it is another mode of expressing the same fact. . . . Evidently, they were in doubt whether God would allow the ark to be moved any more. Sacrificial animals were held ready, and when it appeared by the movement of the ark six paces, without any manifestation of the Divine displeasure, that God was helping the Levites, the victims were at once offered."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 4.—I CHRON. XVI.

7—43.—DAVID'S PSALM OF THANKSGIVING.—"Doubtless it had been previously in the hands of Asaph and his assistants, but it was now publicly committed to them as they entered for the first time on the performance of their sacred duties. It seems to have been compiled from other Psalms of David, as the whole of it will be found, with very slight variations, in Ps. cv. 1—15; xcvi.; cvii. 1; cvi. 47, 48. In the form, however, in which it is here given, it seems to have been the first psalm given for use in the Tabernacle service; and, abounding, as it does, with the liveliest ascriptions of praise to God for the revelation of his glorious character, and the display of his marvellous works, containing, as it does, so many pointed allusions to the origin, privileges, and peculiar destiny of the chosen people, it was admirably calculated to animate their devotions and call forth their gratitude."—Jamieson. O give thanks unto the Lord, &c. (34).—"This was the ordinary Jewish doxology, and may be regarded as closing the first, or thanksgiving portion of this service, which is then followed by a short prayer (35), after which comes a second doxology (36)."

In the high place that was at Gibeon (39).—"This is the first mention of Gibeon as the place at which the Tabernacle now rested. It had been at Nob (1 Sam. xxi. 1—6), whence it was removed, probably at the time of the slaughter of the priests by Doeg (1 Sam. xxii. 18, 19). It is uncertain whether Gibeon was regarded as a 'high place' before the transfer to it of the Tabernacle; but thenceforth till the completion of Solomon's Temple, it was the 'great high place' (1 Kings iii. 4)—a second centre of the national worship, which remained for above fifty years in this anomalous condition—divided between Gibeon and Jerusalem (xxi. 29; 2 Chron. i. 3—6; 1 Kings iii. 4)."

Upon the altar of the burnt offering (40).—"The original altar (Exod. xxxviii. 1, 2) continued at Gibeon with the Tabernacle (2 Chon. i. 5). David must have erected a new altar for sacrifice at Jerusalem (1). The sacrifices commanded by the law were, it appears, offered at Gibeon; at Jerusalem were offered voluntary additional sacrifices."—Idem.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5.—I CHRON. XVII.

1—10.—David's proposal to build a splendid house for God seemed to be so manifestly for God's glory that Nathan seconded it at once, apparently with as much confidence as if he had spoken by inspiration. "Go, do all that is in thine heart, for the Lord is with thee." "He had to learn, however," says Kitto, "that even the obviousness of a thing to human conception did not excuse a prophet from the duty of consulting the Lord before he declared an authoritative opinion. The very next night the word of the Lord came to him." Though David is told not to build, his zeal "was highly approved, and received a rich reward in the promise of an eternal kingdom for his posterity." This promise of an everlasting kingdom of peace to the seed of David (see 9, 13, 14), has never yet been fulfilled. For 400 years and more David's throne was established very wonderfully, but it was not always in peace, and the dominion was at last taken from the royal seed of David. God did very much to fulfil his promise of peace and permanence to David's throne. But man's sin interfered. Is the promise lost? Surely not. Though sin may delay, it cannot really stay the fulfilling of the covenant. There will be the spiritual fulfilment when David's greater Son reigns for ever over his redeemed and glorified Church. But is that all? To David these words promised an earthly kingdom, which should be established for ever. No such kingdom has been seen as yet. It has yet to be set up, if these words are to be accomplished in the sense in which they were understood by David. It will be spiritual ("my people shall all be righteous") as well as outward and visible. In it, therefore, the spiritual and the literal interpretations of this promise will both find their utmost completion. Christ will then reign literally on David's throne, and, spiritually, in the hearts of his people.

16—27.—"To my eye the workings of a breast oppressed and overflowing with gratitude are painted stronger in this prayer than I ever observed them in any other instance."—Delany.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6.—I CHRON. XVIII.

The keynote of this chapter seems to be the phrase, twice repeated (6, 13), "Thus the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went." Accordingly the bulk of the chapter (1—13) is a catalogue of his chief wars and victories. The closing verses (14—17) give a list of his chief officers.

3—8.—"Hadadezer had established a great power in Syria which extended into Northern Mesopotamia, if, indeed, it had not originated there, and spread westward."—Kitto. Between this powerful and growing kingdom and Israel there lay only the kingdom of Toi, or Tou, King of Hamath (9, 10). Hadadezer is defeated by David, and immediately both Damascus and all those states west of the Euphrates, which Hadadezer had moulded into one kingdom, received David as conqueror. "Thus was realised for the first time the ancient promises, that the dominion of Abraham's seed should extend to the Euphrates."—Kitto. "David's war with the Syrians of Damascus was noticed by the native writer Nicolas, who appears to have drawn from native sources. He related that the name of David's adversary was Hadad, that several battles were fought, and that the last, wherein Hadad suffered a severe defeat, was near the Euphrates." —Sp. Com.

This victory brought a vast wealth of spoil to David and his people. In addition, there followed a splendid present of gold, silver, and brass from King Toi (or Tou, 9, 10). All his share in this, and in other wealth that flowed in as the spoil of victories elsewhere, David dedicated to the Temple which Solomon was yet to build. He even did more; he prepared the plan as well as the material, so that he was the Temple architect. Further, he organised the sacred services. All this shows how dear to David's heart was all that pertained to God's worship, and how strong and steadfast was his purpose to prepare with all his heart for the building of a house for the Lord. In the light of these facts his 84th Psalm comes to us with new force. Would that we were as eager and steadfast in building the spiritual house—the Church of the living God!

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7.—I CHRON. XIX.

This story is very profitable, though by no means pleasant. "Charity thinketh no evil" would be a first-rate motto to set at its head. Beware of suspiciousness is the great lesson it bears on its very front—a lesson we stand greatly in need of to-day. No doubt these Ammonite princes thought they were very clever counsellors, when they "looked beneath the surface," as they would say, and thought they had discovered David's depth, just as modern gossips—sometimes modern church gossips, alas!—plume themselves on their clear-sightedness, when they detect evil designs in their neighbours' actions. But these "clever" surmises of evil often turn out, as in the story before us, to be exceedingly expensive indulgences. They are the fruitful seeds of sin, discord, and sorrow. Hardly anything damages God's Church more than this very prevalent habit of suspicion—a habit so easily gotten, but so hard to break. However clever these princes were to see the evil that did not exist, they were blind as bats to the real fact, viz., David's generous frendship and sympathy.

4.—Shaved them.—"Shaved off one half of their beards" (2 Sam. x. 4). "Cutting off a person's beard is regarded by the Arabs as an indignity equal to flogging and branding among ourselves."—Arvieux. The cutting off of their garments was perhaps as great an insult, though one that could be more easily repaired.

7.—They hired thirty and two thousand chariots.—"There can be no doubt that this reading is corrupt. Such a number as 32,000 chariots was never brought into battle on any occasion. Probably the words, 'and horsemen,' have fallen out of the text after the word 'chariots' (see verse 6)."—Sp. Com.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 8.—I CHRON. XX.

The torturing of the Ammonites by David is necessarily a great difficulty. Our first duty, of course, is to decide the question according to the public opinion, and the war laws of David's time, and not of our own. It was the rule of that age to put to death all prisoners taken with arms in their hands—a rule so widely observed that David's action in slaying only a portion of his Moabitish prisoners of war (2 Sam. viii. 2) was specially recorded, as though it were an act of great mercy. The difficulty in the case before us lies in the torture, not in the death, of these prisoners. The, to Eastern minds, most horrible and revolting insults offered to David's ambassadors, especially in view of the peculiar sacredness of an ambassador, would go far with men of David's age to warrant the severest treatment of the offenders. Moreover, it was not merely the insult, but it was insult in return for kindness. But this is not all. There is considerable reason for thinking that the Ammonites were treated as they were accustomed to treat others, which, according to the Old Testament standard was the very perfection of justice. Compare the case of Adoni-bezek (Jud. i. 4—7), the cutting off of whose thumbs and toes would have seemed like gratuitous torture, but for the fact, incidentally mentioned by himself, that he had treated seventy kings in the same fashion. The specially savage nature of these Ammonites is seen in their treatment of Jabesh-Gilead (1 Sam. xi. 1, &c.). Though the city was willing to surrender without a struggle, the one thing insisted on was that each of the inhabitants should lose a right eye. Note also in Amos i. 13 a very significant reference to Amon. Altogether we are inclined to believe that, unspeakably cruel as David's action is to us, there was nothing in it which, all things being considered, would shock any of his contemporaries.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9.—I CHRON. XXI.

DAVID NUMBERING ISRAEL.—"It is scarcely correct to say, as is usually said, that the pestilence came on account of David's causing his people to be numbered. That was the immediate cause. But the primary and real cause is to be found in 2 Sam. xxiv. 1: 'And again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and He moved David against them to say, Go, number Israel and Judah.' Now, the anger of the Lord could only be awakened by unfaithfulness and evil-doing; and that, whatever its precise nature, was the real cause of the calamity that followed, and relieves the case of the apparent harshness, of which so much has been said, of making the people suffer for the offence of their king."—Kitto. From David's point of view they did so suffer; from God's, they suffered for their own wrong-doing. Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel (1).—"If we carefully consider this text, together with 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, we shall see that for the sins of the people, the Lord permitted Satan to have an advantage which would not otherwise have been allowed him. Still, David was under no compulsion to yield."—Kitto. "All temptation is permitted by God. When evil spirits tempt us they do so by permission (Job i. 12, ii. 6; Luke xxii. 31, &c.)."

26.—He answered him from heaven by fire.—"It was, no doubt, mainly the fact that God answered him by fire from heaven on this altar which determined David, and Solomon after him, to build the Temple on the spot so consecrated."—Sp. Com.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

COMING WINTER'S WANTS.

Thus far the Lord has been very gracious in disposing the hearts of His Stewards to supply the necessary funds to sustain the SIX HOMES for the protection of friendless girls and the rescue of the fallen; also the OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE.

Surely it will be a source of satisfaction to many who contribute direct through THE CHRISTIAN to know that no suitable cases have been rejected. Very many have been received in the silent hours of the night, and also on the Lord's Day. If at times faith has been sorely tried for means, young women and girls have never been rejected on that account.

From January 1 to September 22, ELEVEN HUNDRED YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS HAVE SOUGHT ADMISSION.

The COMING WINTER'S WANTS ARE NOW MADE KNOWN. AT LEAST TWO THOUSAND POUNDS will be required before the end of the year. The New Home at Parson's Green is now ready for furnishing.

EVERY READER is asked to contribute, or to collect donations, large or small, as the Lord may enable and dispose the hearts of His Servants to give.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

The Third Annual Conference will be held (D.V.) at EXETER HALL, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3. Ladies only at 11 and 3: Mrs. Frank Bevan will preside. Evening arrangements not yet completed.

The Inspiration of the Bible.

D. L. MOODY.—"Very important. I wish we could get every young man and every young woman to hear that Lecture, Inspiration.—I, myself, would walk ten miles to hear it again."

LORD SHAFTESBURY.—"Admirable. I shall do my best to distribute it widely."

CANON WILBERFORCE.—"One of the most pungent and useful ever published."

The Christian Safeguard

Is a new, large, illustrated eight-page penny monthly paper. Edited by H. L. Hastings, Author of "THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE," so highly commended above. Number One, ready October 15, 1886, will contain "INSPIRATION" complete. Regular terms, single number, 1d. For Distribution: 50 Copies, 3s.; 500 Copies, £1 1s.; 1,000 Copies, £1 15s.; 5,000 Copies, £6 10s.; 10,000 Copies, £10 10s. HAUGHTON & CO., PUBLISHERS, 10, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.—"H. L. Hastings, of America, has done good service to the cause of Christ for many years; his writings are full of evangelical truth, and set forth with glowing earnestness. His periodical, 'THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD,' is well worthy of the countenance and support of the Christian community of this country, as well as America. Its trumpet always gives a certain sound."

The Readers of "The Christian"

Who are willing, with Lord Shaftesbury (who ordered thousands of copies), to do their "best to distribute it widely," may order the Lecture "Inspiration," as contained in "The Christian Safeguard," at the following greatly-reduced prices (carriage not paid) until October 15, 1886:—

One Hundred Copies of "THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD," Four Shillings; 200 Copies, Seven Shillings; 400 Copies, Thirteen Shillings.

LARGER QUANTITIES AT THE BARE COST OF PAPER AND PRINTING, THREE SHILLINGS PER HUNDRED!

Who will try to raise an order for 500 copies at only Three Shillings per hundred? Send to-day one penny to Haughton & Co., 10, Paternoster-row, London, for specimen pages. Show them to your tract-distributing friends. Point out the graphic temperance illustration. Show that every eight-page paper may be divided into two four-page papers, entirely different from each other. Tell them that every paper will be numbered, but not dated, and so edited as to be good the year round for distribution. Don't stop at 500; try for a thousand. Better still, get friends at work to obtain an order for 5,000, and thus secure a lecture or gospel service free from Mr. H. L. Hastings during the winter.

Ten Lectures by H. L. Hastings, Free

I.—Any Church, Y.M.C.A., Mission, or individual, that will, before October 10, 1886, pledge to send to Messrs. Haughton & Co., 10, Paternoster Row, London, E.C., on the first day of each month, £1 10s. for five months, for "THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD," will receive in return one thousand copies per month, and will, further, be entitled to call for a Lecture on Christian Evidences, Temperance, or a Gospel Service, by H. L. Hastings, free, during the winter of 1886-7. Mr. Hastings will be in London in December.

⁂ The remittances must come in promptly on the first day of each month, without troubling Messrs. Haughton & Co. to send bills.

The pledge must be accompanied by the first remittance of £1 10s.

This offer is open to the Christian public in Great Britain until ten lectures have been called for.

JOHN K. HASTINGS, 10, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
BRONCHITIS MERGING INTO CONSUMPTION.
CASE of Mr. W. BECKLEY.

This patient now resides at 14, NASMYTH-STREET, HAMMERSMITH. In a letter dated May 13, he says:—"I was reduced to so low a state that the 'grasshopper became a burden to me.' I had tried many doctors without any benefit; my friends had almost given me up. They felt sure I could not live long. I was begged to consult you, and for some time refused, and when I did see you I had but little faith."

I may mention that this patient came to me from Essendon, near Hatfield, where he was superintendent of an orphan home. He had been suffering with spitting of blood, shortness of breath, loss of flesh and strength, pains of the chest, and all the symptoms of consumption. After finishing the first large bottle he felt (as he describes it) "like a new man." In six months he walked 36 miles in one day. He took the medicine on and off, and saw me the next year, and again in a few months after taking a severe cold. Then (he writes) "it acted on me like magic."

In the letter of 13th May (above quoted) he says that his case is well known to Mr. WOODMAN, of BAKER-STREET STATION, N.W." Mr. W. (he adds) rightly describes the effect of your treatment as marvellous, and this now induces him to send another patient to you. Make any use you think proper of my case.—Yours gratefully, W. BECKLEY.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND.

(From Photograph by Mr. Lafayette, Dublin.)

OUR sketches of evangelists and others which have been appearing from week to week have brought out some contrasts, which cannot have failed to strike intelligent readers. First, God's servants differ from one another extremely in the experiences they have passed through before commencing their work for God. Some, before beginning to pull sinners out of the horrible pit, have themselves known the lowest depth of iniquity, whilst others have been preserved by grace from all outward and notorious sin. Secondly, evangelists differ extremely in the gifts and acquirements with which they are equipped. Some, in the most literal sense, know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified; they have no need to "determine" to do this, for there is no competing knowledge in their minds which requires to be kept in subordination; they know their Bibles, but nothing more. Others, however, come to God's work equipped with all the learning of their time. So it has been from the first; the New Testament Apostles included both a Paul, who had sat at the feet of Gamaliel, and the unlearned fishermen of Galilee.

These differences are part of the Divine plan. God loves variety. He is an Artificer who works with many kinds of tools. The work He does with them, too, has its varieties. Different kinds of evangelists affect different classes of hearers, and produce different types of Christian character. It is only human narrowness which would like to hear the message in exactly the same terms from the lips of every evangelist, and to see all Christian character cast in a single mould.

The subject of this sketch was brought up in the midst of influences which made him acquainted from the first with the finer aspects of character and the most earnest forms of evangelistic energy. He is a nephew of the late Mr. Peter Drummond, well known throughout the world as the promoter of the Stirling Tract Enterprise; and his father, Mr. Henry Drummond, and his family, are connected in Stirling with every good work.

He received his preliminary education in his native town and at Crieff Academy, and afterwards went through a lengthened academical curriculum at the University and the New College, Edinburgh, and at the University of Tübingen, Germany. Besides pursuing the ordinary course of study for the ministry in philosophy and theology, he devoted himself with enthusiasm to Natural Science, and, when his curriculum was completed, he was appointed Lecturer on this subject in the Free Church College, Glasgow. Two years ago his lectureship was raised to the rank of an ordinary professorship. He has done much geologising, in company with Professor Geikie but his most original scientific work has been a geological and botanical survey in Central Africa, which he executed three years ago for the African Lakes Company. As a scientific lecturer, Professor Drummond excites much enthusiasm among his students.

The steps by which he was led into the work of evangelisation were somewhat remarkable.

In the winter of 1873 he read a paper before the New College Theological Society on Spiritual Diagnosis, in which he advanced the thesis that the regular work of the pulpit ought to be supplemented by constant dealing with individuals about their spiritual state. He maintained that the mere preaching of sermons leaves the majority of hearers unaffected, and that the preacher ought to come down and acquaint himself with the condition of his hearers one by one, as a doctor examines the cases in a hospital. This clinical work he held to be the chief business of the Christian ministry. No other essay read that session produced so deep an impression; but, in his reply at the close of the discussion, the essayist admitted that his views were purely theoretical, as he had never had an opportunity of putting them in practice.

For this opportunity he was not to have long to wait. Messrs. Moody and Sankey came to Edinburgh the same winter. Many of the New College students flung themselves with ardour into their movement helping in the inquiry-room, and organising deputations to carry the news of what was doing in Edinburgh to every part of the country. Mr. Drummond was one of these, and was soon looked up to by the others as their leader.

With the eye for character which is one of his gifts, Mr. Moody recognised the value of his young coadjutor, and persuaded him to suspend his studies for a time, and accompany him on his evangelistic tour through the three kingdoms. For two years Mr. Drummond was with Mr. Moody in Ireland and England, devoting himself specially to young men, among whom it has always been his predilection to labour.

At this time Mr. Drummond was under five-and-twenty years of age; but he acquired an amount of experience which few are able to collect in the course of a lifetime. From the confidences of the inquiry-room he learned to know human life on every side, and the human heart to the bottom. He became mature also as a speaker, for he had every day to handle large and difficult audiences. His style of speaking is quiet and cultivated, with an air of simplicity, beneath which, however, is concealed the skill of the artist. There runs through all his addresses a strain of poetry; and, more than most other speakers we have ever listened to, he has the power of arresting attention and holding his audience spellbound from the first word to the last. This, however, is accomplished altogether without noise or trick of rhetoric, by the fascination of the man and the freshness of his message.

It is in what he says that the charm chiefly lies; for this is striking and novel in a high degree. Although the articles of the evangelical creed must always remain the same, close observers can distinguish considerable differences in the ways in which they are presented by different exponents. Though the pieces on the board, so to speak, remain unchanged, they may shift their positions. In different revival movements different truths have told; and men quite loyal to the whole of the evangelical creed may be able to wield certain parts of it with more effect than others. Mr. Drummond prefers the vital to the legal side of evangelicalism. He is less successful in convincing men of guilt than in making them feel the power and degradation of sin. Christ in us is oftener his theme than Christ for us. Salvation in his mouth means not so much being lifted out of a miry place beneath as being raised to a sunny place above. His great argument is, not that men cannot die without Christ, but that they cannot live without Him. He asks the young to whom they are to give the years which lie before them and the influence they will wield—to Christ or to Satan. He assures them that they are missing the secret and the sweetness of life altogether if they are missing Christ. His is, in short, a Gospel for those who have life before them, and are thinking of living rather than of dying. It may be one-sided; but so perhaps is all preaching; and Mr. Drummond is far from undervaluing the truths which others wield with more effect than he; only he prefers those which have specially found himself.

After his two years with Mr. Moody, he returned to college to complete his studies, and then he acted for a few months as assistant to Rev. Dr. J. H. Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, who has exercised a profound influence on many of the younger ministers of Scotland. Immediately afterwards, he entered on his academic work in Glasgow.

His dedication to science did not make him abandon evangelisation. On the contrary, he prosecuted it with unabated zeal. In his first years in Glasgow he gathered a mission congregation at Possil-park, which he handed over, when it was organised, to a regular minister. He has addressed young men in every part of the country. His official duties leave him ample leisure, and this he devotes to evangelistic work.

Three years ago Mr. Drummond leaped into sudden fame by the publication of his book, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," which has had an extraordinary success. It is in its fiftieth thousand, and Mudie advertises five hundred copies as in circulation in his library. In America it has attracted at least as much attention as in this country, and, in short, it may be said to have made its author known wherever the English language is spoken.

In the preface he has given an intensely interesting account of how the book originated. He was carrying on his scientific lecturing and his religious speaking as two totally distinct activities, performed, it might almost be said, by different halves of his mind. By degrees, however, without effort on his part, the two coalesced; for he found that the facts of religion could be handled by the same methods as the facts of science, and expressed in identical terms. The whole book is an attempt to treat religion as a fact of nature no less solid and capable of scientific analysis than any other fact which science claims as her own.

Much difference of opinion prevails among the learned as to the success of the attempt, but none will question that he has placed many vital religious truths in a novel light, and enforced them with rare impressiveness. It is quite right that views so new as Mr. Drummond's should have to run the gauntlet of criticism; and some criticisms passed on his have been unusually severe. When, however, the shower of objections is over, it will probably be acknowledged that he has made a substantial contribution to the truth. At all events, his book will long be dear to all who are capable of appreciating originality of thought, charm of style, and delicacy of spiritual insight.*

One effect of its popularity has been to give Mr. Drummond access, as an evangelist, to classes which it is peculiarly difficult to reach. In May last year he conducted a remarkable series of evangelistic meetings for the nobility in London under the auspices of Lord and Lady Aberdeen; and for the last two winters he has headed a great revival movement in the University of Edinburgh. Week by week he has come from Glasgow, and on the Sunday evenings addressed large meetings of the students. Many have been converted, and, under the name of the Students' Holiday Mission, they are carrying their testimony into every part of the kingdom. Four hundred and fifty of the students connected with this movement sat down together, last April, at a special Communion service. Among these the very flower of the youth of the country might be found. For example, at the close of last winter session only four men took first-class honours in Philosophy, and three of them have been engaged on the Holiday Mission.

Professor Drummond is still a young man, and his life is still a problem. Will his mind prove strong enough permanently to preserve in equipoise the creed of science and the evangelical faith? Will he, with his numerous engagements of an evangelist, be able to maintain the position of an authority in scientific knowledge? Will he do anything remarkable as an original worker in science? Will his theology widen to take in the elements it has not yet mastered? Will his preaching mellow, till he can preach with as much sympathy to the labouring and the heavy-laden, as he now preaches to the young and prosperous? On these questions depends not only Professor Drummond's own future, but in some degree also, perhaps, the future of the cause of Christ in his native land.

MISS MACPHERSON IN CANADA.

This earnest worker writes to us from the Home at Stratford, Ontario:—

My pathway of late has been going round the cities in Canada, whilst my lady-helpers have visited the backwoods places. Varied have been our experiences, still our object has been one, to prove to the Canadians our deep heart interest in those we have brought to their great and wide Dominion. To see them married and settled in homes of their own, and acting out life's duties as respected and valued citizens, is in every way cheering.

Every one visiting this land has to see the far-sightedness and common sense exercised as regards the young. A whole day was lately given up, at the Toronto Exhibition, to thousands of children, seeing the results of the yearly progress in every possible growth; not only in rearing cattle and produce, but in Science and the Fine Arts. From far and near things are brought to view; even a Japanese Colony with nine real live Japanese at work on their embroidery and porcelain. Through the eye, these thousands of Sunday-school children, the future lawyers, earnest preachers, teachers, and artizans, were learning marvellous things. Hundreds of children were drilled and exercised, to the great amusement of both old and young. Many of our own boys, accompanying their masters, attend these annual gatherings at Toronto, and in cities around this capital of Ontario.

The great contrast between such scenes and exhibitions in the old land was, to the eye, the entire absence of liquor in any form. Not one in all the 40,000 farmer visitors did we see with a dim and weary eye, dazed by alcohol; without exception all looked well fed, well clothed, calm, sturdy, and independent-looking. No greater cheer could we have than to return to our low dens and oppressed drink-trodden people, and strive, by the help of the Lord, to rescue the orphan and destitute and bring them here. Our comrades—Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Fegan, Mr. Quarrier, and others—would, like me, have been greatly stirred for their winter's work, could they have with us beheld the magnificent results of the cultivation of these great lands, taking the fruits and roots only, which were simply prodigious.

[* We are sorry we are not able to take quite the same view of Professor Drummond's fascinating but perilous book. It has always impressed us as the work of a scientific Christian rather than of a Christian scientist; that it accommodates the spiritual to the natural rather than the natural to the spiritual. Christ in us did not take precedence of Christ for us in the apostolic Gospel, nor can it ever safely do so. We are most thankful to be assured that our friend's evangelistic addresses are thoroughly evangelical, but we cannot help fearing the effect of his writing on other minds. These are not days when we can afford to be in the least degree uncertain as to the fundamental truth of the Atonement, the only basis of our hope for eternity.—Ed.]

MR. MOODY'S CONVOCATION.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

LAST DAY—FRIDAY, AUGUST 13.

THE STATE OF THE HEATHEN WORLD.

The tenth and last day of the Conference would have been memorable if only for the address that occupied the first hour. Mr. Blackstone, of Chicago, has for some years past made it his business to collect information about the moral and spiritual condition of the world. This was the subject of his talk, and a very startling talk it was, from a mission point of view. To help the audience in following his rapid, bird's-eye sketch, he had hung on the wall two immense coloured diagrams, or maps, depicting the religious condition of the heathen world, and the comparative strength of prevailing religions. The time allotted him was short, and he had to hurry, so that his gigantic array of figures lost somewhat of their momentous import by the way they were piled on each other's head.

It was certainly a dark picture he had to present. Out of an estimated total world population of 1434 millions, 835 millions are yet lying in heathen darkness. The mind reels at the contemplation of such a picture, and refuses to grasp its awful meaning. There are some 136 millions nominal Protestants; but of this number how small a proportion is really Christian! Moslemism has some 175 million adherents, and it is making far more rapid strides than Christianity. In Cairo there is a Mohammedan university with thousands of students, committing the Koran to heart, and preparing to go forth to all parts of the East as propagators of the Moslem creed. The Roman Catholic Church, with its 195 millions, is nominally Christian, but how opposed in doctrine and practice to the teachings of Jesus Christ! The thirty-five millions, comprising the Greek and other Eastern Churches, are steeped in formalism, and their influence goes more to increase the dominions and sway of the Czar than that of the true Christian faith. As to the sums expended on religious effort among Protestants, there are sixty-five million dollars annually devoted to this object in the United States, and a hundred and ten million on education. But against this there are nine hundred million dollars yearly spent on intoxicating drinks; six hundred million on tobacco; and even five million on ostrich feathers. In fifteen years the so-called Christian nations have spent fifteen thousand million dollars for purposes of war, and only three hundred millions for the extension of the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ. Take into account also the hindrances to the Gospel that come from the action of professed Christian Governments—such as the opium iniquity in China. Is it any wonder that Christian missions do not spread more rapidly? We talk about the whole world being evangelised in the course of this generation. With the populations of the globe increasing in a far greater ratio than the increase of the churches, there seems little prospect of that result.

Yet there is a brighter side to the picture. "The coming of the kingdom draweth near." How the soul thrills at the prospect. The Gospel must first be preached for a witness in all nations, and then shall the end come. It may be that by the glory of his appearing our Lord will complete the work. Yet it is ours to do what we can, as if there were no others to do it. It seems as if something were wrong when we see many men rolling in wealth and living luxuriously in palaces, while others are starving. Surely Christ will set these matters right; "He will judge the poor with equity" one day.

Thibet is now the only place where the doors are closed to the Gospel. The Moravians have been toiling away on the southern boundary, but no Christian missionary has yet entered the country proper. We read of Chinese attachés who are going into Thibet, and where the soldier goes, we trust the missionary will soon follow. With that exception the vast regions of Central Asia and Central Africa are now open to the Gospel messenger. There has been comparatively little done as yet for South America, but we hope some workers will soon go out there. At a recent meeting at Orchard Beach fourteen rose to express their willingness to go to heathen fields, and money was pledged to send the first man to Thibet when the way is open. Let the Churches be more enthusiastic about the work, and let them organise their forces. There were over two thousand Presbyterian churches in the United States who did not give a dollar last year for foreign missions. Yet there are church buildings in the land worth many thousand dollars! We have only been playing at missions; yet see what wonders God hath wrought. If the whole Church of Christ were consecrated to this glorious enterprise, the work of evangelising the world might be accomplished speedily. How can we be so indifferent to its claims? Sympathy with the perishing demands it; gratitude to God demands it. "Why did you not come before?" said a poor old Chinese woman, when she heard the sweet message of the Gospel for the first time. The blood of these people, groping in darkness while we live in the full sunshine of Gospel light, will be required at our hands. God stir us up to make a universal and sustained effort for the evangelisation of the world.

POWER FOR SERVICE.

The rest of the day was devoted to prayer, and the hearing of addresses on this subject. Mr. Moody said, if the Church as a whole were endued with power from on high, there would be no lack of men or money for the Lord's work at home and abroad. God uses the weak things of this world to confound the mighty; the weakest believer filled with the Spirit of faith and consecration can work wonders in the name of the Lord.

An address followed from Dr. Gordon, on the gift of the Holy Spirit for service. It is the Spirit, he said, that brings our will into unison with the will of God. He enables us to witness for God, so that our life accords with our profession. In the Pentecostal gift of the Spirit, all other gifts were wrapped up. He alone can enlighten us so that we may understand the things freely given to us of God. Too many Christians never get beyond the fact of their justification. But besides the riches of God's grace as seen in the cross of Christ, there are the riches of his glory, and these are unfolded to us by the Spirit received into our hearts. He is the Executor sent by Christ to divide the glorious inheritance among the saints. The Spirit, too, sheds the love of God abroad in our hearts. In Scripture, very little importance is attached to our love to God; it is everywhere God's love to us that is magnified, and this we learn by the teaching of the Holy Ghost. By his power we are enabled to reproduce the life of Christ, so that we shall do the "greater things" He spoke of when He was about to go to his Father. This fulness of the Spirit may be ours for the asking. The Spirit is like the wind that bloweth where it listeth, but the wind always listeth to blow towards a vacuum; so, if we are emptied of self and greatly desiring to be filled with the Spirit, He will come like a mighty rushing wind and fill us. Let us present ourselves to God, body, soul, and spirit, to be taught and led and energised by the Holy Spirit to the Holy God.

Mr. Moody said the gifts of the Spirit might all be summed up in the word Love. Are we full of love to God, to one another, and to the world? If we are, all jealousies and unworthy feelings with respect to others will die out.

Dr. Pierson spoke of the temptation that is strong in us all to work for God in the energy of the flesh. Among these dependencies that prove a snare, he mentioned numbers, money, intellectual wisdom, human power, natural law, and what are called the "ordinary means." We need to be filled with the profound conviction that it is only in and by the power of God that his work can be done.

Mr. Moody propounded some test questions that believers may put to themselves: "Is your life all that you want it to be? Is it what you think it ought to be? Is it what you think God would have it to be?" It may be that there are certain things in our lives that need to be straightened out before we can receive the fulness of the Spirit. We have heard a good deal from men these ten days; now we need to hear what God the Lord will speak to us.

At the afternoon and evening meetings there was, nevertheless, a good deal of human speech; but there was also much earnest and wrestling prayer that God would cause the Word to spring to life, and blossom into all the fruits of the Spirit. Mr. Moody said that, if all were really under the power of the Spirit, there would be many conversions in the days to come; the work of God would be breaking out all over the land.

Words of solemn exhortation, as well as of encouragement, were uttered by Major Whittle, Dr. West, Dr. Pierson, Dr. Parsons, Dr. Gordon, and Mr. Rainsford; while songs that deepened the impression of the spoken words were sung by Mr. Sankey, and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. In one of his brief interludes, Mr. Moody stated that an effort would be made to secure the attendance of as many ministers as possible at the next year's Convention, if they should be spared till then. They would have more accommodation, as one friend (Mr. Weston) had offered the money to erect another Seminary building. The young men could camp out, and they would arrange to entertain all ministers at a cost of a dollar a day. In his closing utterances Mr. Moody expressed the great joy he had experienced in connection with the meetings of the Conference, and also with the meetings of students at Mount Hermon. He exhorted his hearers to seek that they might retain some of the blessing they had received, and to let all self-seeking, jealousy, or any root of bitterness be swept out of their hearts, that they might have power with God and with men. And thus another Northfield Conference closed.

Early next day many of the visitors departed. Some, however, remained for the services of the Sunday, when sermons were preached to full audiences morning and afternoon by Rev. Marcus Rainsford and Dr. West. At the morning service, which was in the Congregational Church, Mr. Moody proposed that money should be collected to procure a third church waggon for the southern part of the Northfield Valley. A collection was accordingly taken up, and doubtless the visitor at next year's Conference will find three of these excellent institutions in full working order. On Sunday evening there was a final praise service, when Mr. Sankey, Mr. G. C. Stebbins, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, Mr. and Mrs. Towner, and the Mount Hermon Choir combined to render a service of sacred song quite unique in its way.

During the Conference the visitors had many opportunities of seeing and inspecting the splendid model of the Temple recently presented to Mr. Moody by Mr. Wm. Mackinnon, of Glasgow. It is a fac-simile of the model that formed a text for Mr. Thomas Newbery's remarkable addresses at the Prophetic Conference at Mildmay last spring. There was unfortunately no lecturer at Northfield, but the friends were deeply interested in examining such a magnificent reproduction of the structure around which clustered so much of the typical teaching of the Jewish Church.

SURREY GROVE MISSION, an offshoot of Mr. Spurgeon's work, recently celebrated its seventh anniversary. The report shows that the Society is doing a good work in Walworth. It numbers fifty-six members, a net increase of eight during the year. The usual agencies are employed, and prominence is given to open-air work. An incident is mentioned respecting a service held on Tuesday evenings in Surrey-square. During the summer, on reaching the usual stand, an herb doctor was addressing a large crowd there. Seeing the preachers, he concluded his address, told them he expected them, and yielded the position. That service was commenced with the doctor's audience. An effort is being made to build a mission-room, the present one being described by Mr. Spurgeon as a "hovel." The Hon. Secretary is Mr. J. E. Wilkins, 105, Kinglake-street, Old Kent-road, S.E.

GRACE that BRINGETH SALVATION:

ITS SEVENFOLD ELEMENTARY LESSONS.

Titus ii. 11—14.

By Mr. J. VAN SOMMER.

PART II.

"Teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts." Teaching: the grace of God that bringeth salvation is of a teaching character. That we should deny ungodliness and worldly lusts is of course our duty, whether it be regulated by law or by Gospel. Though with the augmented Divine revelation the lesson will take a wider scope. It is not in the things themselves but in the character of the teaching that the difference consists, for the grace of God that bringeth salvation teaches. But let us first notice the things taught.

Denying ungodliness — everything contrary to God, his will, his character, all that would separate, whatever would unfit for and prevent intercourse between God and ourselves. And worldly lusts. There is a right use of the necessary things of the world. We are to use the world as not abusing it—not exceeding the proper use; not intently using it; not disposing of it as if it were absolutely our own; but as accountable stewards. We should not lay a firm hold on any worldly things as if our happiness turned upon them, and not upon the blessing of Him from whom cometh every good and perfect gift. Lust is the desire for wrong things, or the excessive desire for lawful things. Age will make a difference. Many recreations are proper for a child which are unsuitable to the mature. The Scripture speaks of the "love" of the world as incompatible with the love of the Father; and that is the point to be guarded against.

Denying: We are to disown these things, not to be slaves to them. Now, how does grace which brings salvation teach this? It sets before us the Risen Saviour, who was once crucified on account of our sins. Ungodliness and worldly lusts needed his atoning sufferings and death to expiate their guilt before the Holy God. When tempted we should afresh get the crucifixion of the Lord Jesus before the eye of the heart, that it may be affected by his love to us, and by the evil of sin being so great that there was a necessity for his sacrificial death.

To disown with full intelligence is, however, something more than this. Not only is it true that Christ died for us, but the believer is regarded by God, and is to reckon himself, as having died with Him, to have been baptized into his death, to have died to sin. So that, as taught by saving grace, we are to say, how shall we that died to sin live any longer therein. There is indeed to be a present practical denying, but grace teaches more than a lesson concerning the present. The present is based on the past, we did deny, did disown. That is to say, the death of Jesus Christ was for such things; and as we died (judicially) with Him, they are virtually and in purpose terminated; and we should act accordingly, and beware of re-establishing them. This is a first lesson, yet it is a continuous one. Divine teaching is not like the steps of a ladder, when we tread on one, leave it, and go on to the next. The primary and further condition of mind and practice should really accompany each other all the way. Unless we are denying what we should deny, we shall not be living as we should live; and unless we are positively practising good, we shall soon be practising evil.

The grace that brings salvation not only instructs us as stated, trains us, shows us what to disown and how to avoid, but it teaches us that we should live soberly, righteously, and godly. Soberly—taking a sound healthy view of things and living accordingly. The temperate man holds a steady course. He is one who possesses self-control. He has a balanced mind. He is not eccentric in his views and conduct, or excitable, either in things natural or in things spiritual. God has given us the spirit of a sound mind—healthy and health-giving, discreet, considerate, judicious. A sober-minded person carries a blessing through his or her words and presence.

Righteously—in a right-minded way. The foundation of duty is in our relationships. These arise through creation, through marriage, through birth, through nationality, through residence, through a common humanity, through church membership, through employment as masters and servants. Then the grace that brings salvation magnifies the claim. "What do ye more than others?" There was nothing unrighteous in the abstract that a creditor should claim his 100 pence. But, having been forgiven 10,000 talents, he came under an obligation in God's sight to act in a compassionate spirit to the debtor who sought his patience. We are to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; that is, we are to learn and to practise the Divine principles of action, and thus become followers of God as dear children.

And godly—as a genuine worshipper, in communion with God; having a sense of God; doing his will. Also presenting his character.

In what way does the grace that brings salvation teach us in this matter? It sets before us Jesus, not now as before as the suffering victim for sin, but, in a figure, as the true vine, in reality as the second man, the Lord from heaven. We cannot bear fruit, separated from Him. But in fellowship with Him, and drawing strength and grace from Him, guided by the written Word of God, and in the power of the Holy Spirit, we can—can do more than we often think. The Christian not only knows, through the Word and communion with God what is right, but he may say as to all things which he ought to do, I can do all in (in the power of) Christ who strengtheneth me. Natural law would say, "Ye are the creatures of God, glorify your Creator." How true! how needful to be reminded of it! Grace puts the lesson deeper, and teaches thus: "Ye are not your own, for ye were bought with a price. Glorify God therefore in your body."

In this present world—in the period of time through which we are now passing. It is only a present time; a very different one is coming on; but such as the present is, with all its incidental claims, circumstances, and privileges it will never return. It should be prized and made the most of in the sight of God. Time present is part of eternity.

The grace that brings salvation, besides teaching us what to deny, and how to live, places before us an object of hope, a blessed hope. Jesus of Nazareth has to be glorified as Lord of all in this earth where He humbled Himself even to the death of the cross. Now we see not yet all things subjected to Him, but they will be. Redemption is not yet applied to the natural body, but we wait for the adoption. Salvation is not yet come in all its fulness, but it is nearer than when we believed. It is ready to be revealed in the last time. Creation is not yet delivered from the bondage of corruption, but it will be. The house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem have not yet nationally looked upon Him whom they pierced. Those who have fallen asleep by means of Jesus are in their spirits present with the Lord. But a body only, and a spirit only, is not the entire man; and the entire man is in God's purpose redeemed. He who is the resurrection and the life will descend from heaven, and complete his redeeming work in regard to those that fall asleep, and to those who are left. All this, and much, much more will transpire when man's present day is past and the day of the Lord is come; all being ushered in by the appearance of the glory of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

The exact time of the commencement of this new era is not revealed. It may occur in our lifetime, but this would be exceptional; the general course is, "it is appointed unto men once to die." Whether we die first, or are then living, the hope of the coming of the Lord Jesus is substantially the same, for He will come in his glory and his people will then in glory enter, body, soul, and spirit, upon their adoption, the place of sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. We wait for God's Son from heaven who delivereth us from the wrath to come; who will fashion anew the body of our humiliation. And more than waiting, we are taught to look, to desire it, and expect it earnestly. And this involves a concurrent life of holiness, righteousness, and faithful service. It is a happy hope to those who are like the wise virgins, who went into the marriage feast; and like the true-hearted servants who could give up their account with joy and freedom; and who are amongst the righteous who will inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world.

PERSECUTION IN GERMANY.

We extract from The Evangelist, a Bremen paper, the following account of religious persecution which has happened in the very heart of Germany:—

Some years ago, a Methodist preacher, Erhard Wunderlich, in the Principality Reuſs, was twice cast into prison and fined for the Gospel's sake. Since then, he and his people have been left undisturbed; but, owing to the blind zeal of a few Lutheran pastors, who induced the authorities to bring into force an old law of 1853, according to which any meeting held outside the pale of the State Church is punishable with eight days' imprisonment, the persecution was renewed.

On May 24, Brother Sträpler was arrested by a gend'arme and charged with having offered prayer in a meeting, such an act being regarded as a public discourse! Lina Ackermann was summoned and charged for having sung with ten children, whose parents were all Methodists; Richard Neubert, a deacon and Jacob Sträpler, for holding religious meetings in Reuſs. The accused did not deny the actions of which they stood charged. The counsel for the defence did all in his power for his clients; he pointed out that the old act of 1853 had been set aside by the newer one of 1873, which permitted other sects to exist in the country, which indeed have existed unmolested for years in Reuſs. It was all of no avail. The judges withdrew, and, on their return, sentenced Brother Sträpler to eight days' imprisonment, fining the others six marks and costs.

THE SAVIOUR'S RESURRECTION.

A Children's Address at Regent-square Church,

By Rev. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

[Read Matthew xxvii. 62 to xxviii. 10].

THE children might occupy themselves for a few minutes at home this afternoon by turning up the various Gospels to find out how often and when our Lord made the promise that He would rise again from the dead, and where it is written that He said He would rise precisely on the third day The curious thing seems to me to be this, that the enemies of the Lord Jesus remembered that saying better than his friends did, and half expected Him to rise, while the others had no such expectation at all. Even when He was dead those who had put Him to death suffered from fear of Him. They did not yet feel quite at ease in their minds; but when He was dead, those who had loved and trusted Him alive felt all their trust, though not all their love, go out of their hearts, and supposed that now He could help them no longer. That seems strange. It serves to show, I think, how completely even the disciples had lost heart when they saw the Lord's death upon the cross—how completely that had come upon them by surprise.

The truth is, everything that happened was a surprise to these disciples that should not have been. They ought to have expected Him to be put to death, and they were surprised when He was. They ought to have expected Him to rise from the dead, and they were surprised when He did so. Everything that He had said to them ought to have dwelt in their memories and hearts with sufficient power to lead them to expect it, and yet this rising of his was a most entire surprise to his friends. Just so our Lord has told us that it will be when He comes again the second time. Though He has not told his friends when He is coming, He has told them that his coming will be so sudden that it will take them completely by surprise.

Both his enemies and friends, you see, took measures on the day that came between his death and his rising—the day that answers to what we call Saturday, the day of Jewish rest—the Jewish Sabbath. During that day both his enemies and friends took measures for what should be done—for what might happen next day. You see how seriously they differed. The measures of his enemies were taken on the supposition that He would rise again, or might rise again. They tried to prevent that, at least; they tried to prevent anything happening which would confirm the people in the belief that He had risen again. The measures of his friends were taken on the supposition that He would not rise, but that the third day would make no change, that He would be found lying there in the grave as before. The women came very early with the things they had prepared for the purpose of finally anointing and caring for his dead body that He might rest for ever honoured in the grave. That was what they came for, so little did they expect that He should burst the bonds of the grave and come forth again to bless them.

They came very early, but they did not come early enough. He had said, "the third day." They ought to have been there before the third day. They should have been there before the first streak of dawn of the third day. They did not come till the sun was up, and He had not allowed that third morning sun to be far up before He, the Sun of our souls, rose in his glory to make daylight upon the earth: it was the third day, but it was no more. It had just begun; that was all. He lost no time. When the appointed morning came, He suffered none of its golden hours to be lost or wasted, lying asleep in his tomb, but with the first gush of day He sprang forth, the Conqueror, and in haste to show his victory over his vanquished enemies.

I think it is well for us, dear boys and girls, that we have begun our new season of readings in the Holy Book with the story of the Resurrection this morning. I shall leave you only three of the many lessons I might draw from the coming to life again in glory of our dear Lord and Saviour. I shall take them all from the writings of St Paul.

First, St. Paul has told us that Jesus' resurrection from the grave proved Him to be God's Son. "What!" do you say, "were there not many other things which proved Him to be God's Son? Were not the works He did a manifest proof, and his very character, which was so beautiful, and his words, which were so Divine?" Yes, that is true; but this, St. Paul says, proved it with power; that is, with greater power than anything else, and I am very anxious to leave it in the hearts and understandings of the dear boys and girls in this congregation that on this one day's doing which we keep in memory every Sunday, the rising of our Lord Jesus, hangs our chief proof that He is our Lord and Saviour, the Son of God with might; and that makes it worth our while to keep our Sundays, besides the fact that they are God's good resting days for our souls. It is worth our while to keep them as our great festival, for the history they commemorate and on which our faith turns that Jesus rose again.

Then, again, St. Paul tells us that if Jesus had not risen again, our trust in Him would have been empty and vain. That is a strong thing to say, but it must be true, because he says it. If He had not risen, our trust in Him as our Lord and Saviour would have been vain. Why? Because we could not put any confidence in a dead helper. A dead helper cannot help, and if He, who took our sins, had remained dead under the weight of our sins, there had been no deliverance for us; or, if professing to be our Saviour and our Helper, He had gone down under the weight of death, and remained there for ever, then He would have brought no life and immortality to us.

And the third thing that St. Paul tells us about Jesus' resurrection is that it secures and makes certain our own; makes certain that we and our dear dead parents and grandparents, and brothers and sisters, who sleep in Jesus' beneath the sod, shall rise again. His coming from the grave, St. Paul says, is like the first handful of ripe corn which, in the golden summer days, the Hebrews waved before God's altar, as the promise of the great harvest spreading over wide acres, and soon to be cut down as God's gift to the people. So Jesus rose the first-fruits of men, and went up on high before the altar throne of God for a promise and a pledge of the rising from their graves of all that mighty multitude which no man can number, whose Saviour He is.

Let us think of Jesus rising from the grave, and let us try to understand these and other lessons that God would teach us by it, and settle our hearts upon it, that we may be strong in trusting Him, and filled with joy because He hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light.

A TEMPERANCE SERMON.

"I hear that Smith has sold out his saloon," said one of a couple of middle-aged men who sat sipping their beer and eating a bit of cheese in a saloon.

"Yes," responded the other rather slowly.

"What was the reason? I thought he was just coining money there."

The other nibbled a cracker abstractedly for a moment, and then said: "It's rather a funny story. Smith, you know, lives on Mt. Washington, right near me, where he has an excellent wife, a nice home, and three as pretty children as ever played out of doors. All boys, you know, the oldest not over nine, and all about the same size. Smith is a pretty respectable citizen, never drinks or gambles, and thinks the world of his family.

"Well, he went home one afternoon last week, and found his wife out shopping or something of that sort. He went on through the house into the back yard, and there, under an apple-tree, were the little fellows playing. They had a bench and some bottles and tumblers, and were playing 'keep saloon.' He noticed that they were drinking something out of a pail, and that they acted tipsy The youngest, who was behind the bar, had a towel tied around his waist, and was setting the drinks up pretty free. Smith walked over and looked in the pail. It was beer, and two of the boys were so drunk that they staggered. A neighbour's boy a couple of years older lay asleep behind the tree.

"My God, boys, you must not drink that," he said, as he lifted the six-year-old from behind the bench.

"'We's playin' s'loon, papa, an' I was a sellin' it just like you,' said the little fellow. Smith poured out the beer, carried the drunken boy home, and then took his own boys in and put them to bed. When his wife came back she found him crying like a child. He came down town that night and sold out his business, and says he will never sell or drink another drop of liquor. His wife told mine about it, and she broke down crying while she told it."

This is a true story, says The Pittsburg Dispatch, but the name was not Smith.

BIBLE STUDIES.—32.

THE BODY OF CHRIST.

(1) Sympathy between the Head and the members. 'No man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the Church: for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones" (Eph. v. 29, 30). "Saul, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples . . Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" (Acts ix. 1—4). "He that heareth you, heareth Me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth Me" (Luke x. 16) "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 40).

(2) Union of members through union with Christ "We, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another" (Rom. xii. 5) "For as the body is one, and hath many members and all the members of that one body, being many are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body . . . and have been all made to drink into one Spirit (1 Cor. xii. 12, 13). "Ye are all one in Chris Jesus" (Gal. iii. 28).

(3) Sympathy of members. "And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it" (1 Cor. xii. 26). "Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep" (Rom. xii. 15.)

(4) Different uses of members. "All members have not the same office" (Rom. xii. 4). "To every man his work" (Mark xiii. 34). "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace o God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do i as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, t whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever Amen" (1 Pet. iv. 10, 11).

(5) Members mutually dependent. "The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: no again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you, &c. (1 Cor. xii. 14—25). "He gave some, apostles and some, prophets . . . for the edifying of th body of Christ. . . . From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that whic every joint supplieth, according to the effectua working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself i love" (Eph. iv. 11—16).

(6) This union supplies motive (a) for holines toward God. "Know ye not that your bodies ar the members of Christ?" (1 Cor. vi. 15). "Exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Pet. 1—4). (b) For righteousness toward men. "Speak every man truth with his neighbour; for we are members one of another" (Eph iv. 25). "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak" (Rom. xiv. 21; 1 Cor. viii. 9—13).

(7) Uninterrupted communication with the Head necessary to full life. (The withered hand: Mark iii. 1—5). "The Head, from which all the bod by joints and bands having nourishment ministered and knit together, increaseth with the increase o God" (Col. ii. 19). "Without Me (severed from Me), ye can do nothing" (John xv. 5).

THE SCEPTICISM OF THE DAY:

WHAT IT IS, AND HOW TO MEET IT.*

By Rev. Principal BROWN, D.D., Aberdeen.

SCEPTICISM: What is it? It is not the positive denial of any truth. The Greek word from which it comes signifies a "looking into;" and, when applied to things that have to be "looked into," it properly means an "inquiring" attitude—an excellent attitude, no doubt, provided it does not stop there. "Prove all things," says a great authority; but he takes care to add, "hold fast that which is good." But some inquirers hold fast nothing, except it be their own doubt about everything—"ever learning" (as the same authority well describes them,) "and never coming to the knowledge of the truth." This is a disease of the mind—a disease that festers the more it is humoured, until at last it becomes so chronic that it can hardly be thrown off.

Perpetual uncertainty about all that it most concerns us to know is intolerable to any well-regulated mind. There are hundreds of questions that we have no need to settle. Whether the earth stands still or moves round the sun; whether the orbs above us are inhabited or not; whether our navigators will ever reach the poles —of what consequence are these and a thousand other questions to the business of life? None whatever. But, Am I a creature of God, or a mere product of nature? Am I a responsible being, who have to give an account in a future state of existence of my conduct here? or am I to die like a cabbage-stock, and is my dust to be resolved into something which is not me, and never will be me? About this I cannot live in uncertainty; I must know it is of infinite moment for me to know for certain, what I am, and whither I am going.

Confirmed and callous sceptics profess to wonder at the warmth with which we deal with such questions: "Why can't you discuss them like a proposition in Euclid, or the properties of a gas?" But suppose your house is ready to take fire, will you consider quite coolly how to save it? No, you will not. We don't want to prejudge anything, but in questions of eternal moment we must be in earnest.

Happily, all sceptics are not callous. In these days of ours the atmosphere of religious thought is so tainted that ingenuous minds find themselves breathing it unconsciously, and such a haze comes over them that they hardly know where they are. Old beliefs are crumbling away, while more solid foundations are not laid. And, just as in an army on its march to battle, if a panic seizes on the men and they think they are going to be beaten, they get paralysed, and then the battle is already half lost; so here, many an earnest student is coming to think that the truths of religion are giving way and cannot hold their ground; and when it comes to this, positive unbelief is at the door. For the sceptical spirit is a creeping thing; it twines itself about the heart that harbours it, pressing it ever closer and closer till it stifles all its healthy pulsations. It is an incline going down to the chambers of death. Ah! I can tell this from my own experience. For I, too, in my early student days, was a keen searcher after truth, and hard to be convinced. And if I could get the ear of young students of religious truth, I would warn them how much easier it is to get rid of one's most sacred and cherished convictions than to fetch them back again. The first shock to your faith may appal you; but that Rubicon once passed, your advances into the territories of unbelief will be frightfully easier, and more rapid. Happy they who, before the dismal end is reached, get their eyes opened to see the chasm that yawns beneath them, and, turning back, recover their lost ground. They will then be stronger than ever, and, like Peter, being "converted," they will "strengthen their brethren." But some there are—minds, too, of finest mould, whom we can ill miss—who never stop, but go boldly forward till they enter the dungeon over whose walls may be seen written: Vestigia nulla retrorsim; "Abandon hope all ye who enter here."

Well, but how, you may ask, are such persons to be dealt with? I answer, Not with argument in the first instance. With such persons, to begin with argument—hard, logical argument—is only to stimulate the scepticism which you want to subdue. Above all things be tender with them. Oh, I cannot express to you the importance I attach to this. Get alongside of them. Let them see how anxious you are to understand and sympathise with them. Feel your way to the temper of their mind, find out where they are, in what direction their studies are moving, and what guides they are looking to. Are you sitting at the feet, say, of Matthew Arnold, who is sure there is something outside the universe which "makes for righteousness;" but if you ask him, Is it more than a thing? replies, "I do not know." A learned friend of mine, who in his early life was a great admirer of this gentleman, at length said, "Matthew Arnold is a boat without a bottom." Or is Herbert Spencer your oracle? He, too, is persuaded that the universe had some mysterious, inscrutable source, and that to stand in awe of this unfathomable mystery is the sublimest of all worship—the only religion. "It is nothing of the kind," says Frederic Harrison, another of your eminent Agnostics. "I can't worship a mystery—nobody can. As well bid me worship the equator, or worship a gas." Excellently said, Mr. Harrison. But what have you to give us? "Well, I don't pretend to give you a religion; I haven't one myself. But to live for Humanity—to aim at realising the ideal of a perfect and beautiful Humanity—may not that fill the noblest ambition of man? Is it not the very thing which religion professes to seek? "No, sir, it is not, and I am bold to tell you that your own deepest instincts belie your teaching. Will any thinking man say that the present life, though it were to reach its utmost perfection and beauty, is the all of his deepest cravings—that anything here below, or conceivably here, exhausts the deepest yearnings of his nature? If not, why mock us by telling us that for man there is nothing above him and nothing beyond him? "Miserable comforters are ye all; physicians of no value."

Suppose, now, that we have got our friend's ear thus far—to own that in none of these Agnostic theories for dispensing with religion is any satisfaction to be found. You might then ask him to listen to the experience of some who have lost their former faith. I once had some touching intercourse with one of this class, a man of high scientific attainments. After, dealing with him in some such way as I have suggested (and certainly not with argument), the tear started into his eye, and he said, "Oh, sir, you know not what I have lost. When I was a student of medicine, I did things, and abstained from things, which I could never have done, nor abstained from doing, but from love to Him who died for me. But I have lost all that; I lost God, too—Haeckel took that out of me—but I have got that back." "Well," I replied, "I cannot think that one of your distinction can feel so acutely and own so frankly what your scepticism has cost you, and not sooner or later come out of it." On meeting him again some time after that, I asked how he then stood. "Much the same," he said. "But you said you had got God back? What have you got back?" "Well, the universe can't have come of itself; there must be something behind it." "But is it a thing, or a living Person?" "Oh, that I don't know." "Then, you don't pray?" "No," was his reply, but in a subdued tone. "Ah! then you have no Father to look to, no Friend to guide you, and no to go Home to from here"—and with that we had to part. But I have reason to believe that he is now groping his way to light. What he and such as he want is not more evidence, but eyes to see the abundant evidence that there is.

I once read a striking illustration of this. A brilliant barrister had sunk into blank negation of everything in religion, while his wife, a Christian lady, daily grieved over him, and all the more that symptoms of pulmonary consumption had begun to show themselves in him. One day, as he lay on the sofa, she saw him looking up with a radiance in his eye which she had rarely seen. "What are you thinking about?" she asked. "Do you know I have begun to conceive hope." "Hope of what?" "I don't know; but I have begun to conceive hope." Ah! a subdued tone had come over his spirit; his vision was getting clarified; the possibility of believing was kindling up—not of believing this or that particular truth, but of at length getting footing and faith, where all before was one blank. This, scarcely known to himself, was the hope he had begun to conceive; and, the scales having now fallen from his eyes, this hope speedily crystallised into full faith of those Christian verities which are life to the dead. And, as he saw that his days were numbered, he determined to spend them in preaching the faith he had been so long in finding. Having scholarship enough already, and Orders being then more easily obtained than now, he was ordained, and for two years lived to show, both in the pulpit and through the press, how quickly "to the upright there ariseth light in the darkness."

But there is a form of this scepticism which I confess I can less easily explain. It is that of one who, after reasoning himself out of all belief in religion, and being forced to confess that it has left him miserable, must needs place before the public his arguments against religion, and with them the misery into which it has plunged him. I refer to a recent work on "Theism" by "Physicus." After elaborately showing that belief in a God is void of all scientific support, he closes with this doleful tale of the misery it has landed him in:—

"And forasmuch as I am far from being able to agree with those who affirm that the twilight doctrine of the 'new faith' [he means his own 'new faith' that there is no God] is a desirable substitute for the waning splendour of the old, I am not ashamed to confess [hear this, ye who are tampering with unbelief] that, with the virtual negation of God, the universe to me has lost its soul of loveliness; and although from henceforth the precept to 'work while it is day' will, doubtless, gain an intensified force from the terribly intensified meaning of the words that

* An Address before the Evangelical Alliance at Ryde. The speaker availed himself of one or two thoughts which have appeared elsewhere from his pen.

'the night cometh when no man can work' [because to him it is a night with no day to follow!], yet, when I think—as at times I must—of the appalling contrast between the hallowed glory of that creed which once was mine, and the lonely mystery of existence, as now I find it, I shall ever find it impossible to avoid feeling the sharpest pang of which my nature is susceptible."*

Now, what "pang" was that? Ah! it was the cry of one who once had a Father, a hope, a home beyond death and the grave, but now has none of these; and the pungency of this loss is that he knows it. His philosophy, such as it is, has put out his light, and he walks in a darkness which he feels so acutely that the confession of it seems to give him relief. Pity, then, surely, that he published that book, for litera scripta manet, and sure I am that, if ever the splendour of the faith which once was his should again rise upon him, he will bitterly regret that he did his best, by this publication, to extinguish it in as many as read it. There are indeed noble examples of men who preach the faith which once they destroyed; but with men of science, and a reputation founded on it, such courage is unhappily rare. In the case of this writer, therefore, we can only hope for it.

But I must now come to a more covert form of scepticism which, I confess, I fear more than all that I have yet dealt with: I mean the

SCEPTICISM OF MINISTERS OF THE GOSPEL

—of those who, professing to hold, and are expected to preach, the faith of all orthodox Christendom, and, as the basis of this faith, the authority of Scripture, yet neither hold nor teach that faith, and do their best to undermine the sacred records of it. Now, what is the root of this kind of scepticism? I answer, just the same as of the more sweeping and naked forms of it—the desire to naturalise, as far as possible, everything in religion. That God never revealed Himself supernaturally to men they do not say, nor do they affirm that He never interposed miraculously in the affairs of men. In the abstract, they admit both Inspiration and Miracle; but they reduce both to the vanishing point. By means of that new thing called the Higher Criticism they throw the great historical transactions of the Old Testament into a state of solution. The Pentateuch—on which rests the whole edifice of the Jewish Dispensation, and with it of Christianity itself, as our Lord taught it—they turn upside down. One half of it, that half which records the great events which took place in the wilderness, never, it seems, took place then and there, and the laws which were then and there enacted were never enacted till some seven centuries after Moses was dead. The priesthood was not restricted to the family of Aaron, nor were the Levites then and there set apart to be assistants to Aaron and his sons—though the Pentateuch says so. Korah and his company did not rebel against this arrangement—though the Pentateuch says so; nor were they swallowed up alive for this in the sight of all Israel—though the Pentateuch says so. And Aaron's rod did not bud and blossom in a night to proclaim his exclusive right to the priesthood, nor was this rod deposited beside the ark, for a memorial to all generations. All this the Pentateuch records as historical facts that took place in the wilderness, under the direction of Moses and by express Divine command; but not a word of this is history. The true history—as the higher critics have found out—is this: Shortly before the return from Babylon, Ezekiel, Ezra and company determined that, to punish the Levites for their apostasy to idolatry before the captivity, they should be degraded to the rank of servants to the priests in the celebration of all those sacrificial observances which were now to be instituted for the first time. And these new arrangements were now written down as historical transactions which took place in the wilderness under Moses, in order to give them the weight of his great name. In fact, even the sublime ceremonial of the great Day of Atonement (the details of which in the sixteenth of Leviticus strike every reader)—so far from being enacted in the wilderness—never existed till on the eve of the return from Babylon, but was then and there written down for the first time, and this new half of the Pentateuch they so cleverly dovetailed into the old parts of it that the great Jewish and Christian scholars who have made the Hebrew Bible their special study were never able to discover the patchwork they were reading, till the deeper penetration of our higher critics found it out some thirty years ago. About which it is enough here to say that one ounce of common sense is worth a ton of such criticism.

Coming now to the Gospel which is dealt out by this sceptical school, it must not be supposed, when they come to the pulpit, they entertain their people with the criticism I have described; many of them have not learning enough to understand it; and of those who do understand it, there are some who do not believe in it. The one thing common to them all is the studious avoidance of all those sharp features of the Gospel which are repulsive to the natural man—which "are hid from the wise and prudent, and are revealed only to babes." The Divinity of Christ is recognised indeed; but it is the loftiness of his Human character, the sublimity of his teaching, and the unparalleled example of Self-sacrifice which his death exhibited, that they dwell on. The Atonement is not in so many words denied; but his sufferings are not held forth in their vicarious and expiatory character. Christ, according to their teaching, was in no sense our Substitute, and in Justification the righteousness of the glorious Surety is not imputed to the guilty believer. It is not often that this is nakedly expressed. But some are becoming bold enough to speak it out. One dignitary, whose brilliant pen and eloquent tongue have made his name conspicuous, delivered recently before a convention of American clergy an Address upon the "Atonement," and that Address has since been issued from the press. Now, what is Archdeacon Farrar's view of the Atonement? It is simply this, that somehow—no one knows how—men are saved through the life and death of Jesus Christ. But in his death there was no vicarious, substitutionary offering for sin; it was no atoning sacrifice. He will have nothing to do with such phrases as "Satisfaction," "Substitution," "Imputation," in the matter. That "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin," he will not deny, because it is in the Book; but in the shedding of that precious blood he sees no expiatory, atoning sacrifice, although it is written, "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

Well, I read a review of that address in a devout Unitarian paper which comes to me, in which, after quoting the characteristic passages of it, the reviewer expresses astonishment that any minister of an orthodox Church should call that the Atonement, it is nothing else than rank Unitarianism on this subject. For myself, I know one belonging to that body who would regard this as below what the New Testament teaches about the death of Christ.

And while I am speaking of Archdeacon Farrar, I must lift my voice against another example of his minimising and paring away the sharp features of Gospel truth. I refer to his teaching about the future state of the finally impenitent. I call the Scripture testimony on this subject a feature of "Gospel truth;" for I hold every warning of the New Testament against the rejection of Christ to be big with mercy, and the Gospel itself in its negative form: "That whosoever believeth on Him may not perish." But Archdeacon Farrar is not prepared to say that the loss of any impenitent soul will be final. He will not say it will not. But he clings to an Eternal Hope. No matter how nakedly, how repeatedly, in what variety of form and figure, the finality of the future state, alike of the lost as of the saved is expressed, the thing itself is repugnant to our moral instincts, incompatible with the goodness of God.

Very well; if you think so, reject the Book, or so much of it as is revolting to your moral instincts; but don't distort its statements to force them to conform to your moral instincts. Before venturing to draw aside the veil that hides the unknown future, would it not be well to go again to the Book from which you draw your instructions?—where He speaks, whose the future is, and who knows better than you what is befitting his character, and on this subject say, once more, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth"? And would it not be wise to listen on this subject to the profoundest divine of your own Church? "We do not know the whole case," says that most reverential thinker, Bishop Butler—words which, on such a subject, deserve to be written in letters of gold. Benevolence is not the whole of God's nature; for if it were, sin had never been permitted to enter his dominions and deface his works. What designs He may have in this mysterious feature of his government, who can tell? And if our poor plummet cannot reach these depths, is it safe to go outside the Book in quest of an "Eternal Hope"?*

I should not have said so much in this strain, were it not that all our churches are honeycombed with this mischievous tendency to minimise all those features of the Gospel which the natural man cannot receive. And no wonder, for their object seems to be to attract the natural mind. Wherever this is the case, the spirituality of the pulpit is away, and the Spirit Himself is not there. Conversion of souls is rarely heard of there, if even it is expected, and those who come for the children's bread get only a stone—beautiful, it may be, and sparkling; but stones cannot be digested.

People talk of the decline of the pulpit, but how few know where the real power of the pulpit lies. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses" (were some of the last words of Christ when He was on the wing for heaven) "both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." This is the power that we need, and, wherever this is, there will be no want of power in the pulpit. This is the power that makes the dead to live, and, were it to come down in floods upon the dry ground, the wilderness and the solitary place would rejoice. And then would it be seen that our Lord was not speaking hyperbolically when He said—not of Christianity, but of Christians—"Ye," living men, moving up and down among men in a new style, conducting the whole affairs of life on new principles and to new ends—"Ye are the light of the world; ye are the salt of the earth." How quickly, then, would the cobwebs of scepticism, whether open or covert, disappear before the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ! It would not supersede Apologetical literature; nay, it would create it anew, and its overwhelming weight would astonish its readers. The light that will then shine full upon men from the Cross will send a thrill of adoration and joy unspeakable through a multitude that no man can number, giving vent to itself thus: "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, unto Him be glory for ever and ever." Not all the voices of modern unbelief will ever drown this shout of ecstatic joy and supreme devotedness to the Lord Jesus. On the contrary, it will gather under its own wing all that is sound in science, and true in philosophy, and wholesome in literature, and pure in poetry, and grand in music, to minister to Him who is the Lamb in the midst of the throne, as "worthy to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Last Wednesday week will be a red-letter day with this Society. That this fact was recognised was shown by the large number of friends who gathered at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, in the afternoon. The occasion was the farewell of Rev. H. P. Parker, who goes to take the late Bishop Hannington's place; of Rev. F. E. Wigram, who starts on a year's tour of the Society's stations; and General Haig, who goes to find suitable bases for missions in the Soudan and Arabia. No less important was the dismissal of twenty-five missionaries to the foreign field. Their names and destinations are as under: Rev. F. and Miss Nevill, to Sierra Leone; Rev. J. Vernal and Miss E. Kruse, to Lagos; Rev. J. W. and Mrs. Stuart; Rev. A. W. and Mrs. Baumann, Rev. T. and Mrs. Carmichael, and Miss. M. Hall, to North India; Dr. Ernest Neve, and Mr. Grime, to the Punjab, to join his brother, a medical missionary in Cashmere; Rev. W. A. and Mrs. Roberts, and Rev. J. A. Harriss, to West India, and Revs. C. W. A. Clarke, and E. S. Pegg, to South India; Rev. J. D. and and Mrs. Thomas, to Ceylon; Rev. A. and Mrs. Elwin, and Rev. W. Light, to China; Rev. T. and Mrs. Dunn, to Japan; Rev. R. Heaton, to Sindh. Sir John Kennaway, M.P., presided, and amongst others who took part in the meeting were Bishop Moule, who addressed the missionaries, General Haig, Rev. C. C. Fenn, and Rev. H. P. Parker.

Another meeting was held in the evening at Exeter Hall, at which Rev. F. E. Wigram presided, and many of the out-going party spoke briefly.

MR SHULDHAM HENRY desires to intimate to his friends his change of residence from Jersey to Regent Villa, Plympton, South Devon.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE AT SANDGATE.—Mr. H. Hull, the missionary, writing to thank those who replied to a previous letter, says that the 7th Hussars are now in camp, equipping for India, and books or tracts suitable for general distribution will be very useful. He wishes to give a Testament or book to every man when the regiment leaves England. Since Miss Papillon commenced the work, twenty-eight years ago, it has grown so that the present accommodation is insufficient; specially on Sundays is this the case. The hon. treasurer is Surgeon-major W. E. Alston, Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate.

Missionary Hymns.

A SONG OF THE KINGDOM.

Break forth into song,
Sing loud and sing long,
For, from the bright rising to setting of sun,
The Lamb that was slain
In glory shall reign,
O'er kingdoms and peoples while centuries run.

From heaven He came down,
Left sceptre and crown,
Dominion and splendour, and power and throne;
Our flesh took on Him,
A vesture, how dim!
Yet through its dark veil his divinity shone.

The sick and the sad
He healed, He made glad; [they!
Good tidings He preached; Oh, how welcome were
The poor knew the Friend
Their Father did send,
To point them to heaven, and show them the way.

Weep, weep for his loss!
He died on the cross,
An offering for sin, a death-token of love;
Yet sing! for the grave
No more shall enslave;
But portal shall be into glory above.

Now, whoso believes,
Full pardon receives [dye;
For sins, though ingrained as the crimson their
And such, from earth free,
Immortal shall be,
And live with the Saviour for ever on high.

Break forth into song!
Sing loud and sing long!
For, from the bright rising to setting of sun,
The Lamb that was slain
In glory shall reign
O'er all the redeemed while the centuries run.

A CALL TO THE CHURCH.

O Church of God, awake, awake!
Arise! thy bed of sloth forsake,
Thy Saviour's message hear;
"Go ye, and all the nations teach;
To all mankind the Gospel preach,
For I am ever near."

The heathen millions' doleful cry,
Still pierces to the throne on high,
And God in pity hears;
Sends back to us its loud appeal—
O that we had a heart to feel,
And sympathising tears.

A fell disease is raging sore,
From east to west, from shore to shore,
All human skill is vain!
We have a sovereign remedy,
Shall we to them that balm deny,
Nor heed the thousands slain?

How many still in darkness grope,
Without a glimmering ray of hope;
We have the light from heaven.
Shall we not chase their gloomy night,
By sending them the Gospel light,
To us so freely given?

O Spirit of the living God!
Arouse thy Church to spread abroad
The Gospel of thy grace,
Till all mankind thy love shall see;
In Jesus' name shall bow the knee;
And idol worship cease.

THE DEATH OF MR. SAMUEL MORLEY (says Mr. Spurgeon in The Sword and Trowel) is a loss to us as well as to the rest of Christendom. He has ever been our true friend. Every charitable institution connected with Dissenters will miss this good man's generosity, and many among Conformists also. His heart was ever with the old, old Gospel. He was more nearly an all-round man than any other man of his class. Not his gifts only, but himself also, will be missed by thousands. We were once upon an arbitration case with him, and were struck with the clearness of his perceptions, the accuracy of his judgment, and the largeness of his heart. Shall we ever look upon his like again? Yes, certainly; for the Lord who sanctified him still moulds men to the likeness of Christ.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.

The history of this Institution, which for fifteen years has been carried on in the spirit of true Christian charity by Mrs. Hilton, is well known to most of our readers. In the annual report, now again before us, there is enough of touching incident to prove how necessary is this work, and how great a part it plays in the economy of human existence at the East-end; enough also to excite the compassion of readers and stir their hearts to earnest effort on its behalf. Two classes at once appeal to us as we read—the worn-out, almost distracted mothers, and their helpless babes. With regard to the first, Mrs. Hilton says:—"Mothers who are going to hospitals or convalescent homes come to us with just a chance for life, and we should be quite unfit for the work God has given us to do if we could turn a deaf ear to their pleading, and refuse to help them by taking care of their children." Here we see clearly brought out the irresistible force with which such utter misery as is only too common in the neighbourhood of Stepney appeals to the heart. It is easy enough to moralise about or make light of it at a distance; but, face to face with it, it constitutes its own unanswerable plea. Would that Christian people were more generally willing than they are actually to investigate and satisfy themselves as to the truth of what is stated in hundreds of reports, and day by day, in the columns of our papers.

Then there are the helpless babes; what a blessing for them to be taken care of, nursed, and fed for twelve hours a day, and at the close to be given up clean and sweet to their mothers. And this is done for 2d. per day. The report states, that during the year there have been "more than two hundred applicants for admission, and the attendances of children has been 30,240. We have nursed nearly two hundred cases in the infirmary and nursing-room." It is added, "Our friends may help us greatly by adopting cots, many of which are still vacant. £15 a year combined with the mother's pence will provide for a child for one year in the Home, £10 in the infirmary, and £6 in the Crèche." In the Home there are forty residents, aged from four to ten years, who on attaining the age of ten, if their friends are still unable to take charge of them, are either drafted into other institutions, or remain in the institution to be trained as nursemaids.

Thus the scope of this kindly work is plainly presented to us. We are grieved to find that Mrs. Hilton should have to say, "Our financial difficulties have been a burden almost too heavy to bear," and again, if the debt is not cleared off, "there will be no course left but to close our country branch, as a debt of this description paralyses our efforts." The statement and appeal should be sufficient, as we hope they will, to raise up friends who will strengthen Mrs. Hilton's hands, and rescue so beneficent an undertaking from the paralysis of debt and from any consequent curtailing of usefulness. The Crèche and Home are situated at 12, 14, and 16, Stepney Causeway, and visitors are welcomed from 12 to 5 o'clock.

SUGAR PLANTATIONS IN QUEENSLAND.—In these plantations South Sea Islanders are employed. In the Bundaberg district alone there are over 2000 of these Kanakas, recruited from about thirty different Islands. These usually remain for a period of three years, and then return to their Islands. As far as we know there is not a single missionary to the Kanakas in Queensland. The number of dialects spoken by the Kanakas makes it impossible to teach them here in their own language; but it is possible to teach them in English. It is proposed that a missionary should visit the plantations in turn, taking classes on Sunday, and evening classes during the week. A class has been held at Fairymead for more than two years, with a present average attendance of eighty. Help towards this good work will be received by Mrs. Arthur Brown, Hon. Secretary, St. Elms, Tunbridge Wells.

NOTES ABOUT SYDNEY.

Last week, being in Sydney on business, I occupied my spare time not so much in sight-seeing as in sound-hearing. I visited the Legislative Council, and heard some good speaking, notably one speech by the Right Honourable W. B. Dalley.

In company with a country friend I went to Wesley Church, York-street, where Rev. Dr. Taylor has for a number of months carried on evangelistic services for the people. At 1 p.m. on Wednesdays he conducts a service for business men. We arrived a few minutes before the hour for service. Dr. Taylor did not preach, but Rev. Mr. Clark supplied his place and took the "Exchange Discourse"—"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" This he treated in an able and solemn manner worthy of the subject. About thirty people were present. There did not seem to me to be one business man there from the city.

Next day I dropped in at St. Andrew's, the Episcopal Cathedral, where Bishop Barry officiates. It was a Diocesan meeting, and the clergymen were present in large numbers. A few visitors sat behind them, and at the back of the large pillars, which served to obstruct the view, and prevent the reading of the Bishop coming out with any distinctness, although his voice is superior to that of most clergymen.

The Bishop delivered an exhaustively comprehensive address to his clergy. He laid before them their duty in regard to preaching and pastoral work. He insisted on their addresses being the best product of their brains. He advised them to portion out their day, so as not to allow one duty to interfere with another, and thus they would accomplish much. Whilst thinking alike in main points, they should show their Christian charity towards those who could not see with them in minor matters. Rather than rush into discussion or controversy, they should preach positive truth. Let them try to get their ground of common belief as large as possible. Our duty in Australia, continued the Church of England Primate of New South Wales, is to pull up weeds and plant good seeds. We should do all in our power to put down drunkenness and impurity. A serious question to deal with here is irreverence of authority in the young. Amusements must be dealt with with discrimination.

The Bishop spoke for about an hour in an easy, practical style; but the public gradually disappeared from their pews till hardly any but the clergy remained.

The new buildings of the Y.M.C.A. are well worth visiting, and I passed a few half-hours in the reading room, which is supplied with home and colonial newspapers and periodicals. There is a library, as well as all the accessories of a good institution. The gymnasium is at the top of the building. The lower portion is occupied by shops, and the large hall is in the centre. It is well lighted, lofty and well ventilated, and has many points of architectural beauty. I spent two evenings there listening to Mr. William Noble. The first evening he lectured on "John B. Gough: Personal Reminiscences, his Humour and Dramatic Power." The hall was packed half an hour before the time the chair was to be taken. Mr. Noble had his "bush piano," as he termed his concertina, with which instrument he delighted his audience, and put them in grand good humour. His imitations of the late John B. Gough were very characteristic, and he must have left a deep impression on the minds of his hearers, not only of the power of his predecessor, but of his own powers of memory, and of his own dramatic abilities. His next evening's lecture was about the work at Hoxton Hall. It put me in mind of old times at Hoxton, especially when he mentioned some well remembered names. Mr. Noble was about to leave for a short course of lecturing in the inland townships, before taking his departure again for New Zealand.

During the day and also in the evenings, I saw gatherings of unemployed men who were venting their grievances; especially some who came out recently on the representations of the Colonial agents at home. They found things very different to what they had anticipated. The condition of things here is by no means inviting, and so long as Canada offers such substantial comfort to those who are willing to labour, and affords such excellent help by good and wise laws, as the Marquis of Lorne has so well portrayed in his "Canadian Pictures," this colony will not be likely to go ahead by immigration.

FOUR DAYS WITH JOSEPH COOK.

BY MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Three miles from the village of Ticonderoga, at the foot of Lake George, in New York State, is the spacious summer home of Joseph Cook. It is a large white house, and has forty-three rooms and 300 feet of piazza. There are, in fact, two houses; one, occupied by Mr. Cook's mother, stands on the site of the primitive pioneer home in which Joseph, her only child, was born; the other, continuous with it, being his home, and having for its chief characteristics the broad piazzas, where much of the time is spent when guests are present, and the two towers, dedicated respectively to the scholarly use of the studious master and mistress of this commodious mansion. It may be doubted if more comfort, convenience, and elegance have been combined in one abode. Souvenirs of travel in all lands give individuality to every room. Books in great variety, and in rare editions, illustrative of local history, besides photographs of hundreds of the places visited in their tour around the world, invite attention. An Æolian harp in the library window pours a song as old and as full of pathos as humanity itself. Mrs. Cook's exquisite taste, which touches nothing that it does not adorn and spiritualise, has presided over the general plan, and patiently extended, even to the most minute detail, of this beautiful enterprise.

How much surroundings have to do with character! Here, in simplicity and isolation, was reared a great defender of the faith; a Christian Hercules, who wrestles more valiantly than almost anyone of his contemporaries with the twin serpents of infidelity and sensualism which would fain destroy the land he loves. He has been devoted to books from the time when, at two years old, he carried an arithmetic under his arm as his favourite companion, to the day when, after the sale of the village library, he could nowhere be found, having taken such books as his father had bought to a tree where, unseen, he could feast upon them; indeed, so engaged over them was he that he was gone all day long—missing his dinner, a boy's most difficult test of devotion! He was found useless as a farmer's boy from first to last. When his father, who was a well-to-do proprietor, laid out a track near the house, where he could break colts and try the speed of his numerous horses, Joseph turned his back upon it, and sat reading in his room, while the boys of the neighbourhood rejoiced to witness the new sport. With his great head full of thoughts, and his heart of purposes, he studied with painstaking care the history of the rarely notable country round about.

America has not another lake so truly Scottish in its beauty as Lake George, and it would be hard to find a lovelier valley than the one so long owned by the ancestors of Mr. Cook, with its mellow mosaic of peaceful fields, and beyond them the "Thirteen Curves" of guardian hills with their various and stately trees. Look at yonder noble elm; it is named for Agnes Park, daughter of the famous professor who for forty years stood at the head of Andover Seminary, and edited the "Bibliotheca Sacra." Yonder they come toward our quiet corner, Dr. Edwards A. Park and Mr. Cook. Now we shall hear what old Sam Johnson loved, viz., "good talk." The apt quotation, the witty anecdote, the sparkling repartee, all make the hours fly swiftly past. Gifted talker as he is, Mr. Cook seems glad to give the laboring oar to the man for whom he no doubt has a higher admiration than for any other in the land. Later on comes talk of "theology and new departures;" the temperance reform; the White Cross movement; the W. C. T. U.; the work of brave Anthony Comstock: in all of which Mr. Cook takes an interest not less earnest than our own. Frequently he returns to the central thought of his own great work in life—the closer alliance of "evangelical Christianity with practical reform," He rejoices in what the swift days are disclosing of Gospel temperance and Gospel politics, though he is still an independent in the latter field. The progress of women in knowledge and achievement is profoundly interesting to him; indeed, I never knew a mind of broader or more kindly hospitality. Truer than upon the lips of Terence are these words of Joseph Cook: "Nothing is alien to me, but whatever touches humanity that also touches me." As the hours wane while still "we sit beneath the pines where the evening star so holy shines," the household helpers are called to the piazza, a lamp is lighted, and in her sweet, serious tones, Mrs. Cook reads the Word of God. Then each repeats a verse and we kneel there in the dim light, and with the great hills guarding this quiet home, the deep voice of one of these men of God bears our thanksgiving to the Heavenly Father.

Four days have passed in company with these devout and endowed souls. They seem to me a prophecy of the heavenly companionships. Generally we wrote or studied in the forenoon, but we had some evenings free and some hours each afternoon. Mrs. Cook's study is especially attractive. It is dainty as herself and bright with treasures from afar. We talked of the White Cross movement, in which she and Miss Park—her father's own daughter for good sense and good humour—are greatly enlisted, and we burned incense for our delectation that Mrs. Cook had brought from Japan. She kindly permitted us to see the journals kept by her upon her world tour: twenty-one good sized volumes with one thousand photographs; a full account of scenery, customs, persons, and events, and not one erasure in all its pages—plain as print. This single fact tells the story of that character which attracted me most of them all, reminding me of the fringed gentian so beloved in the shy places of the river bank at my old Wisconsin home. Withal, Mrs. Cook is one of the most practical housekeepers and faultless entertainers, but what she does is noiseless; she has learned to perfection the "the frictionless way," of which her husband speaks in "Boston Lectures on Theology." Mrs. Cook has the outfit of an amateur photographer, and marshalled us in all battle-array, Dr. Park with Alpine stock in hand, and Mr. Cook standing guard.

Mr. Cook's mother is a well-preserved and most intelligent lady of seventy or thereabouts. She can but rejoice in the phenomenal success and splendid usefulness of her heroic son, but is very wise and careful in her praise. Perhaps it is more pleasant to her than all his fame that he never had a vice, that tobacco is so offensive to him as to render its neighbourhood almost as unendurable as it is to a refined lady, and that he never was even tempted to any coarse indulgence. Long may they live and happy may they be at beautiful and genial Cliff Seat. I shall never forget the morning of our departure; after I had carved my initials on Neal Dow's tree and said good-bye to the beautiful rooms and generous friends, as we entered the carriage with Dr. Park and his daughter, our host and hostess stood on the high steps and Mr. Cook lifting his hat swung it in kind farewell with the Eastern wish at parting: "Health, peace, perfection!" I thought, turning from that quiet place, how true it is that "the strength of the hills is his also!"

PERTH CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

LADIES' MEETINGS.

Mrs. Blaikie (Edinburgh) presided at the tea-meeting on Tuesday afternoon, and read Matt. ix. 36—38. When Jesus saw the multitudes He was moved with compassion for them. Jesus never saw a multitude without having compassion on them. His sight was limited when He was on earth, but now, at the right hand of God, He sees all the multitudes in all parts of the earth and has compassion on them. He is the same Saviour still; the more the multitude the greater his compassion. We think: if this is the case, why does He not send more grace to convert sinners? But that is not his way. He says, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest," laying it on us to get people to go out through prayer. They must be sent by the Lord of the harvest. Mr. Spurgeon says, "No man should go into the ministry if he can possibly stay out," meaning he must be sent by God. We must be labourers, spending all our time, not a little of it, in work. Labourers have a definite aim, i.e., to finish their work. Our aim must be that the earth may be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God.

Miss Jourdain asked for prayer and sympthy in behalf of Miss Whately's work in Egypt, and gave some account of her schools there.

Miss Campbell (Glasgow) felt encouraged to speak there about the Christian Policemen's Association; for one lady who heard of this work at the Conference last year went home resolved to do what she could, and has started a flourishing branch in Greenock. So little has been done for policemen, and they have so much in their power. Until lately it was said that it was impossible for a policeman to be a Christian; no one cared for their souls. Now many of them are doing the work of missionaries. The Christian Policemen's Association began in Glasgow in 1884, and there are now ten branches in Scotland. The first year was a year of faith and prayer; the second, a year of rapid progress, and the third has been a year of testing. 15,000 copies of the magazine On and Off Duty are now distributed monthly. There is also a Bible and Prayer Union Branch, and a Temperance Branch connected with C.P.A. Miss Campbell hopes soon to start a Mission-room in Glasgow, similar to Miss Gurney's in London.

Mrs. Kelman (Leith) spoke on temperance. Some of the members of the Band of Hope having grown too old for it, a senior branch has been formed. The young people themselves have fortnightly meetings for debates and lectures on literature, travel, &c. This has helped the Christian side of the work, for temperance without the Gospel is vain. Temperance work is also carried on in connection with the Y.W.C.A. in Leith. The love of strong drink is a terrible bondage. One woman speaking of this, said, "I am bound by the devil's chain." God says, "Let my people go that they may serve Me." What are we doing to loose the chain and let his people go?

Miss M. Douglas asked for prayer for Miss de Bröen's work in Paris, and told how God's Word is spreading there. Those who cannot go, may help by distributing the printed monthly letters. These may be obtained from Miss M. Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh.

Miss Mudie (from Montrose) said a few words about the work carried on by her sister and Miss Geldard in the south of France, and another lady bore testimony to the readiness with which Gospels are now received on the Continent.

Mrs. Oatts spoke of the great blessing last winter in the West-end of Glasgow. The work began in a very quiet way, but has since spread through Hillhead, Kelvinside and Pollockshields. It has made the most wonderful difference in scores of families. Mrs. Oatts did not remember a time when there had not been continuous blessing in some part of Glasgow, but lately it has been in all parts.

The meeting concluded with prayer by several ladies.

THE LADIES' BREAKFAST

on Wednesday morning was specially in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Mrs. Gordon (Parkhill) presided.

Miss Murray (Gartshore) said there are 129 branches of the Y.W.C.A. in Scotland, and 31 referees. The central premises in Edinburgh give much cause for thankfulness. The Servants' Home has been filled. She also read letters about the herring fishery work from Miss Stewart, the lady evangelist of the Y.W.C.A., Mrs. Gibbon, and Captain Ross. Miss Stewart worked chiefly at Peterhead. Between July 12 and September 4 she held 269 meetings, and paid 768 visits. She was specially encouraged by the manifest interest of the English women.

Mrs. Cupples appealed for funds for the new Servants' Home in Edinburgh, and quoted a remark made to her by an old Newhaven fishwife: "Oh, my lamb, I was just feared that ye were na lippen' to my Maker. When my Robert is out at sea, and a storm comes on, how earnest I am wi' my Maker. If ye were in earnest wi' Him in prayer, what gowpin's of gold ye would get!"

Mrs. Kelman spoke of her Bible-class for young women, and Mrs. Stuart (Logie) told of much blessing among girls at Fraserburgh and Peterhead.

The Hon. E. Kinnaird spoke of encouragement in the Carse of Gowrie. The farmers' wives and their servants belong to separate branches, that they may all be able to attend the meetings. Twelve Prayer Union members take round the home study questions every quarter. The missionary's wife has a Bible-class, and believes that some of the girls have given their hearts to Christ.

Miss V. Hislop (Auchterarder) spoke of continued blessing there among the mill girls. A visit from Miss Stewart, in October, was much blessed in rousing interest among the unconverted. These have since attended the evangelistic meetings on Saturday evenings, and many have been converted. There is a prayer-meeting at the close of these services, in which the Christian girls take part. They are very helpful also in prayer meetings before special evangelistic services, and in holding little cottage meetings, which they conduct themselves. The ladies' meetings in connection with the Perthshire Christian Union have been very helpful and full of interest.

Miss Mudie (Montrose) said the Lord sent Mr. Spencer Walton to Montrose in connection with the Y.M.C.A., but the young women have also reaped a blessing, and many of them are taking their stand on the Lord's side.

TEA MEETING ON WEDNESDAY.

Mrs. Malcolm presided, and read Psa. lxxxv. 6 and Psa. li. 12, 13 The prayer here is for "reviving" and "renewing" of spiritual life, having known something of it before: anointing with "fresh oil;" when we get it fresh from the fountain-head, we cannot but speak. Mr. Spurgeon says, "If we would have inquiring sinners, we must have inquiring saints."

A letter was read from Mme. Rodriguez, in which she gives some account of their summer work at San Pedro Piscador, Figueras. Not having leave from the mayor, they cannot admit more than twenty to their meetings, but speak with doors wide open, so the word reaches many outside, and is listened to eagerly.

Miss Williamson (Cardrona) gave some account of the Church Army, and the visitation of public-houses in connection with it. She mentioned several cases of conversion and rescue, and also spoke of Miss Fraser's work among tailors in London.

Mrs. McIvor, from China, said it was six years that day since she first started for China, and Mrs. Barbour had then asked for the prayers of the ladies at the Perth Conference on her behalf. These prayers had been answered from the beginning, when she and her companions sailed under a Christian captain. Latterly her work has been among the Haccas, who live inland, in what has been called the Highlands of China, a district of 500 or 600 miles, with a population estimated at 12,000,000. Mr. McIvor was the first English missionary in that part. He began work in 1879, and was joined by Dr. Riddell in 1881. The nearest missionary station is eighty miles distant. Missionaries need much prayer, especially in regard to their spiritual life, for they are always giving out, and get nothing back in return. Foot-binding is not practised among the Hacca women, but otherwise they are no better off than their other Chinese sisters. A girl is taught that she is of no use except to be a drudge to her mother-in-law. They have to learn to realise that they have minds and can understand that God loves them and will help them. The male missionaries could not reach these women, but the lady missionaries have now a class of women under instruction, all desiring baptism. Some of these women have begun to teach the heathen around them. A girls' school was opened last winter at which fees are charged, instead of food, clothes, and books being provided as in other schools. Infanticide is fearfully common. When Mrs. Riddell was teaching her class the sixth commandment, every mother confessed to having destroyed from one to seven little girls. Some men earn a living by selling these cast-away children for small sums of money.

Mrs. Blaikie told of her Home for Children in Edinburgh. It was originally intended to send all the children out to Canada, but some of them have found homes in this country. One father brought his children to the Home, his wife having drunk them out of house and home seven times. One great difficulty is that the girls are not always good; they inherit so many evil tendencies. The Home has been going on almost fifteen years, and has never wanted for funds, though no appeal for money has been made, except through the annual paper which is sent to subscribers.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These brethren have closed their very successful Mission in Hull. We can scarcely describe the enthusiasm at the close. On Friday, September 17, we had an "All-day Meeting." Mr. Fullerton gave an interesting account of his tour through Palestine. Next came answers to questions that had been sent in; this was followed by a Conference on Prayer. Then Mr. Fullerton gave an allegory, after which we had a good testimony meeting. In the evening Mr. Smith held the vast congregation spellbound with his life story. We closed the day up with a short evangelistic service.

Sunday, September 19, was memorable. We commenced with a prayer-meeting at 7 o'clock, when Mr. Fullerton gave a very stirring address on the Second Coming of Christ. At 11 o'clock Mr. Smith preached a most touching and effective sermon. In the afternoon two meetings were held—one for women, which was addressed by Mrs. Fullerton, in the Campbell-street Methodist Chapel, and one for men, which was held in the Circus, and addressed by the evangelists. Some 2000 were gathered together. Both the women's and the men's meetings were a great success, and souls were saved. The evening service was, perhaps, the most solemn of all. The immense building was thronged again, and hundreds had to be turned away. The enquiry-room afterwards was crowded.

A great many will be added to the churches as the result of the Mission. We have received over forty names already of those who wish to unite with us. The evangelists commence at Manchester Sunday, October 3. Will your readers pray for them, as we are doing here?

Frank Russell, Baptist Minister.

A HOME THANKSGIVING.—Last year my little children were unable to attend the harvest thanksgiving service at our church, which, to them, was a very great disappointment. My wife and I decided to keep it at home. We decorated a room with flowers, evergreens, vegetables, and fruit. In the evening we held a service, sang some of the harvest hymns, and each one put something in the missionary box as a thank offering. It seems to have made such a lasting impression on the minds of the children that we believe it will be a great blessing to them. Other parents similarly situated might like to do something of the same kind to show their thankfulness to our Heavenly Father for all his goodness, and to help the little ones to praise Him.

Thankful.

MR. SPURGEON ON SECTARIANISM.

In a very trenchant paper on "Unity and how not to promote it," in this month's Sword and Trowel, Mr. Spurgeon says:—

The climax of sectarianism is to call your own body the Church of Christ, and look down upon other believers as sectarians. Those churches which hold the Head, Christ Jesus, and are quickened by the Holy Ghost, are all parts or members of Christ's body: or, in other words, they are sections or sects of the one great Church. Hence we ourselves, in using the word "sect," do not imply the least censure; but when that word falls from certain lips it has a meaning full of contumely and condemnation. If the various churches dwell together in peace and love, they act according to the spirit of union; but if any one of these portions claim to be the whole, and begin to monopolise for itself the title of the Church of Christ, it breathes the spirit of discord, and is not working towards unity, but towards division. The tendency on the part of those who listen to arrogant claims is to answer indignantly—Who are these that they should give themselves such airs? What is there about them that they should push us on one side, and say—Stand by, for I am more Christian than thou? It needs a great deal of grace to keep one's spirit calm when persons are pushing you down in the name of brotherly love. The offensive claim is greatly to be regretted, for the raising of even self-defensive questions is not helpful to love and concord. It may serve the ends of those who are introducing another denomination where there are enough already; but to talk of creating unity by it is vanity of vanity.

The most sectarian of all the sects are those which boast that they are not sects: this witness is true, and every candid observer will confirm it. These are not the men to foster unity, these whose hands are against all who do not agree with them. One of the first steps to unity will be for these exclusives to become decently humble, take their own places, and cast away once for all the delusion that they are anything in particular. When men are content to be on a level with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and are able to see Christ in every part of his mystical body as well as in their own limb of it, they will be further advanced upon the way to unity than they are now in exalting themselves into a papal position. Each church will have enough to do to fulfil its own obligations to the Lord; it need not be ambitious to school its fellows into a sense of inferiority.

Even in controversy against pretensions which must be opposed, we must avoid falling into the error which we assail. Those who call us sectarians must not be allowed to conquer us so far as to make us retaliate. . . . Let us seek after unity in its proper relation to other desirable objects of pursuit. Let us be first pure, then peaceable. Let us seek truth, and be ready to die for it; yet let us seek peace, and aim to live in it. How far we can be loyal both to love and truth is the question which only the Spirit of God can help us to answer. To be loyal to both should be our endeavour; but the path is one of such extreme difficulty that we must wait upon the Lord for daily guidance, or we shall soon miss our way. We must not sacrifice conscience to run with a denomination, neither must we forsake our erring brethren out of personal pique or private ambition. Above all, we must not aim at unity by setting ourselves up as the Church, and styling all others "sectaries." This is to cement our walls with dynamite, and lay the foundations of peace upon barrels of gunpowder.

In reviewing a pamphlet on "Christian Unity: What is it?" Mr. Spurgeon also says:—

If we do not exchange pulpits with evangelical clergymen it is no fault of ours. The difficulty, so far as we are concerned, is not on our side; and we will be fair, and add that in many instances it is not the fault of the brethren on the other side, but of that unbrotherly system which holds them beneath its iron sway. Lately a neighbouring clergyman promised to attend a meeting at a Baptist chapel, but the incumbent of the parish prohibited it. He now invites the Baptist brother to read prayers in his church as a protest against this exclusiveness. We do not quite see how the Baptist is to do it, but we like the brother's offer. Shall we never see the end of this dis-union?

GOOD NEWS from HONDURAS.

Your readers will rejoice to hear that a wave of blessing has touched these shores. The standard of Gospel temperance has been unfurled, and God has been setting his sign of approval in the salvation of souls. A brief sketch may encourage some fainting workers.

About five years ago, in Belize (our capital), it was started through Rev. D. Waring, of the Baptist Mission, and his wife, the first woman courageous enough in British Honduras to let the Lord use her voice publicly. For a long time discouragement and opposition were the portion of these faithful witnesses, but the Holy Spirit was silently preparing hearts for the reception of the message. None were asked to "sign the pledge" as a matter of moral reform, but first were shown the necessity of changed hearts; and now the seeds are springing up.

The Wesleyans likewise have raised their voice, and, under the leadership of Rev. T. N. Robert, on October 4, 1883, a Band of Hope was formed, when seventy took the pledge. On the removal of this worker to another circuit, a young missionary from Wales, Rev. Owen Jones, became the next instrument of service. In the midst of a trying climate and many discouragements, yet, fired with holy enthusiasm, he went steadily forward. God so blessed the work that in August last the "Belize Wesleyan Band of Hope" numbered 270 members.

From this sprang an adult work, and on June 24 last a Gospel Temperance Mission was inaugurated, its meetings being held fortnightly, its badge the little ribbon of blue. At the first meeting one precious soul came forward; at the next, after definitely committing the work to the Lord, seventy-three united, and from that time a steady increase was given, so that at the date of my leaving the colony, August 28, 234 members had been enrolled in the short space of six weeks; we believe that many were led out of self into Christ. To the north of Belize also, among almost entirely Spanish people, a similar work is going on through Rev. W. Lord and his wife.

But, as might be expected, Satan is not idle, and heavy discouragements are being borne in on workers and converts. For this little British colony, with its people of varied nationalities, deadened by the worldliness and conservatism of professing Christians, surrounded by the miasma of Jesuitism, prayer is earnestly requested, and also praise for what the Lord hath already wrought. Any papers, cards, or leaflets suitable for these missions in British Honduras will be gratefully received, and forwarded by me, if sent to appended address. And here I would acknowledge the comfort and help received in many a dark hour in my life in Belize through the pages of The Christian; its records have stimulated me as I went forward.

BROUGHTON-IN-FURNESS.—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, with his coadjutors, Rev. James Stephens and Mrs. Crouch, have concluded a special evangelistic mission in this town. The success of the mission during the first week was truly remarkable, the church, which holds 500, being nearly crowded every week-day evening, and very full indeed the first two Sundays. From the beginning there has been a steady increase in meetings and services of every kind—in Mr. Aitken's daily mission services in the parish church, and his daily morning ministrations in the higher Christian life; in Mr. Stephens's winning addresses to children and young people, and in his services in a barn in Dunnerdale, a somewhat remote part of the parish; and in Mrs. Crouch's fervent daily addresses to women in the Town Hall. PRAYER FOR CHINA'S WOMEN.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE WOMEN'S PRAYER UNION FOR THE WOMEN OF CHINA.

Dear Friends,—Some time since I wrote to you about the way the Lord was graciously helping in the work among women at the older stations of our Mission. You will be glad to know that in the newer work now opening up in this province for our sisters, the Lord's presence has been as fully manifested.

The province of Kiang-si is peculiarly suitable for itinerating work, as those will remember who have read accounts of Mr. Cardwell's journeys, recorded in the "Occasional Papers." Very many of the cities and innumerable towns, villages, and hamlets are situated on the banks of the many rivers, which makes travelling through this province so very convenient.

Some of our sisters who have been passing up and down this river have been treated with unvarying courtesy and kindness by the people; and at the small towns and villages and hamlets, when they have gone on shore, they have been listened to with attention by the women, who invited them to their homes, and in every possible way showed their appreciation of the efforts to teach them the truth. Our sisters have been particularly struck with the earnest attention shown by some very old women, who, probably, feeling that their time on earth could not be long, may have been wondering if there was not something better beyond the grave. What more blessed work can be imagined than being the first to bring a ray of hope to such poor dark minds? and what work will more fully command the blessing of the Lord, who so loved Himself to comfort the weary and heavy-laden soul?

It is scarcely necessary for me to commend our sisters and their work to the prayerful sympathy of those who are banded together for the very purpose of remembering them in prayer, but it may be well for each member of the Union to give themselves to self-examination before God, to see if they are really doing all they can to secure the prayers of others for this most important work. May it not, also, be a question for many as to whether they themselves ought not to take a more personal and direct interest in the work? Commending you to God and to the word of his grace, I am, yours in Jesus,

Province of Kiang-si, J. McCarthy.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.

Mrs. Birt has returned from Canada after a successful summer—placing three bands of boys and girls trained in the Homes during the winter Never has the work seemed in higher repute, or been more appreciated by the Canadians. What is sought for by them is industrious, obedient, trustworthy boys and girls from twelve to sixteen years of age, and to such they will give good wages. But where the young folk are the gainers under these circumstances more than if they were in England is that they secure board, lodging, washing, mending, and some more education—all this in addition to the woges, out of which their new clothes and boots are bought.

When in England and Ireland every place is so filled up, it behoves us to assist and help out all who are willing to work, and wishful to go and make a home for themselves. Mrs. Birt has good openings in Canada for about twelve hundred more!

THE FRIENDS' CHINA MISSION.—Mr. and Mrs. Davidson have reached Bombay on their journey to China. In accordance with the wishes of the Friends' Missionary Committee, they will devote a fortnight to visiting the Indian missions of the Society, at and around Hoshungabad. Mrs. Davidson (when Miss M. J. Catlin) was able to render many ~~kind~~ offices to some of these missionaries, both by private correspondence, personal services and efforts to stimulate the co-operation of others on their behalf. Hence they will be very glad to welcome her and her husband; whilst they in their turn, may receive some useful practical lessons in missionary matters from their Indian friends and their congregations.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

THE Medical Mission has just been re-opened, after being closed for a few weeks to allow the doctor and other workers a rest. About seven hundred patients attend weekly from all parts of Paris. The Gospel meetings and visiting are continued all the year round, a few workers remaining for this purpose. Dr. Ker sends to us some interesting details of the work and its results.

The meetings in the Iron Room, he says, have been specially well attended during the summer. In one, after the speaker had urged the immediate acceptance of the Saviour, a man rose, and said he wished to press the need of deciding at once, by what had happened to himself. He was in the Iron Room two years ago, he said, when in an after-meeting Miss de Bröen had spoken to him on this very thing. He put her off, saying he would see about it, when Miss de Bröen replied, "Decide to-night." However, he did not, and it was to his own loss, for that very night he fell into temptation, was taken up by the police for money he could give no account of, was lodged in prison for months, and had afterwards done and suffered many things which would all have been spared him had he given his heart to Christ. Again he had heard the same invitation, and accepted it; he wished to give witness of the grace of God, and also of the great kindness he had received from Miss de Bröen in this place.

A patient writes:—"I have found, through you, much bodily comfort, and the health of the soul which is much more precious. Through you, I heard for the first time the good news, and God has touched my heart. He made me to understand how guilty I was. I asked God to pardon me, and He is so good He gave me, immediately, peace in the soul. I am so thankful to you; for, when one has accepted God as a Father and Friend, one is much happier. I assure you I would not change this for all the wealth of the world." What a contrast this is to the loudly expressed opinion of one: "There is no God except money in our pocket." Yet even this last individual gives signs of softening through the persevering visits and the prayer made on her behalf.

We are spreading the Word of God very widely. The patients alone bought 1439 last year, and the year before 2293. One poor old woman, without fire, and scarcely any food, denied herself the much-needed bread-ticket she had earned in our sewing-classes, till she had saved enough for a large print one, which was her treasure till she died last winter of bronchitis.

A widow, whose only son is in a lunatic asylum, living in a mere cupboard on a stair, with no window, and so poor that she was compelled to walk a long distance for a cup of soup from a charity, on a little gift being made her for her wants, said, "Now I can get a Bible," and at once bought one. Another, suffering from an extreme form of asthma, and poverty in every shape, says the verses she reads are "her food" all the day. "How can people bear their troubles without God? When my husband has to walk the streets all night it is my comfort to commit him to God," said the wife of a policeman who runs many dangers, for the police are often more roughly handled here than in England. Is it not worth while to bring that book to those who receive it, and who find, as one said lately, "that the truth is there?" How precious, in these days of sneering at the Word of God, to find it accepted and believed by some who have never known it before.

One young man who had long been attending our night-schools was very careless, and, finally, left his mother secretly to go to America. His teacher here at last got his address, and sent him a Testament, adding a few words of kind counsel. After a time he replied, no longer in his careless way, but expressing his gratitude for being so kindly remembered; and adding that he could not say how often he had read the Testament, or how many lessons he had learnt from it, and that he had made the book his best friend. He acknowledged the wrong he had done, but hoped, with God's help, to lead another life.

Another was a workman, who, like many others, revolted from the superstition in which he had been brought up and fell into sin and despair. He longed for death, and yet feared it. He took to Socialism and its so-called philanthropy, and declared that the remedy for the world was less of God and more of humanity. Bringing his sick child to our Medical Mission, he there learnt the love of Jesus, joined the meetings, came to the night-school, and after a time of resistance found the grace of God. He writes: "I prayed to God for pardon, and found it through the blood of Jesus. I found the solution of all my difficulties by reading the Word of God, and in intercourse with his children. I found fraternity, equality, and the true internationalism. A thousand thanks to Miss de Bröen. Tell her what a blessing I have found by means of her Mission." This man is a member of our meeting for Christians, and his wife, who long hindered him in every possible way, has been gained by the persevering prayers of this former Socialist infidel, and is herself a member of the meeting she so long opposed.

If friends in England only knew the access we have to thousands here who are quite without God, they would be careful to uphold the work. About eight thousand new doors are every year opened to us by the Medical Mission alone. All the responsibility lies on Miss de Bröen. Her work is of recognised value, but she is really overwhelmed by the want of means. Will those who care for the rescue of souls come forward to help God's work in this city? The address of the Mission is 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

SPECIAL RELIGIOUS SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

THESE services were resumed at the Pavilion Theatre for the twenty-eighth winter course on Sunday week. According to the usual custom of late years, the first service of the course was a harvest thanksgiving. At the afternoon service, Rev. J. F. Kitto, well known at the East-end, was the preacher. Fully two thousand persons were assembled. Special hymns were printed and circulated. The attention given to the reading of the Scriptures and the address was all that could be desired. Mr. Kitto spoke from Rev. xiv., "I heard a voice . . . Thrust in thy sickle," &c. He made some happy comparisons between the harvest of the earth and the great harvest which is coming when God shall send forth his angels, and between sowing and reaping for time, and sowing and reaping for eternity.

In the evening the theatre was literally packed, hundreds being unable to obtain admittance. A few solos were sung, which the people seemed thoroughly to appreciate. Mr. Nokes was the preacher, who spoke from Luke xv. 1: "Then drew near unto Him the publicans and sinners, to hear Him." Truly this class of our population requires one who is well acquainted with their modes of thought and the modes of life common among them; by his apt illustrations and homely sayings, Mr. Nokes, not only commanded their attention throughout, but sent home the Gospel message to the hearts and consciences of all. Whatever may be the objection the poor feel to church-going, they certainly seem to have none to hearing the word of God in their usual week-day haunt. A School-board visitor on the platform informed your correspondent that he recognised many of his people from Petticoat-lane and the Minories, and that many mutual recognitions had taken place between them.

Notwithstanding the great success of these services, we regret to hear that the Committee still require £200 to meet the expenses of the last course. The Secretary is Mr. C. Sawell, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

HOP-PICKERS' MISSION, ALTON.

DURING the past month six large marquees, seating from 300 to 500 persons each, have been erected and filled with the roughest characters—ticket-of-leave men, gipsies, and tramps of every class. These have been brought together by means of free teas, magic lantern exhibitions, services of song, and illustrative readings from a pictorial map.

To show the interest awakened in the minds of some of these gipsies, one illustration may serve for many more. When giving a reading from the map describing the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves, at the close of the meeting a tall gipsy man came up and said, "Sir, I wish I was like you." When I asked why, he replied, "I should be able to do that." Then he added, "I have been hopping in Kent all the days of my life, but I never seed anything like that afore. Will there be any ladies here to teach the children? I have six, and should like them to be teached better than we"—meaning himself and wife. When informed that there were, he wept his thanks.

Through the efforts of this Mission, gipsy girls have been taken out of their roving life, and have become respectable servants. Broken-down clerks have received a fresh start in life, and are now in good situations. Crime has decreased to a very great extent; this is borne out by the testimony of magistrates and policemen, and the general good to the whole community. More tents are asked for in other districts, but we are unable to erect them. Through the death of many of our old friends, we are not in a position to meet the expenses of this year. £50 is wanted to clear us, and we hope this will be forthcoming, for the care and responsibility are so great that unless we have the means we shall be unable another year to carry on the Mission. This would be a grief to us. Communications may be addressed to Alton, Hants. S. CHINN.

One of Mr. Chinn's helpers is Mr. J. M'Auliffe, who has been labouring at Binstead, Alton. He writes:—

Bless God for his most abundant mercy during this past month. Scores of gipsies, and of the lowest characters that Portsmouth and Southampton and the New Forest harbour came to our nightly meetings. Though sleeping in a hut in the lonely meadow I have been unhurt, and have been able to go into the midst of gipsy fights and quieten them. Thousands of precious printed messages have been scattered, and placed in the hands of our vagrant population, and souls have been won to God.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.

A VALEDICTORY meeting, at which seven missionaries were bidden "God-speed," was held on the 28th ultimo at the City-road Wesleyan Chapel. Dr. Rigg presided, and the secretary of the society Rev. E. E. Jenkins, introduced the departing brethren. Of the seven, four are returning—namely: Rev. Henry Little and Mrs. Little to Karur, Rev. Edmund Rigg and Mrs. Rigg to North Ceylon, Rev. J. M. Thompson and Mrs. Thompson to Negapatam, and Rev. Henry Haigh and Mrs. Haigh to Mysore. Of the other three, Rev. Alfred S. Geden, M.A., was going to Madras, and Messrs. Edwin Woodward and Henry Soper to Manaargudi and Secunderabad respectively.

Each of the departing missionaries spoke, the elder brethren bringing the needs of India vividly forward.

MR. GEORGE H. MARSH, who two years ago laboured successfully among the men engaged on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is leaving England shortly for evangelistic work among the men employed on the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay line. Mrs. Taylor, Harmondsworth Vicarage, Middlesex, is much interested in Mr. Marsh's work, and will be glad to receive any help towards it that our readers may be disposed to give.

DUNDEE Y.W.C.A. CONVENTION.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER).

The All-day Convention, held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall under the auspices of the Dundee Y.W.C.A. on Thursday, was very appropriately inaugurated by a devotional meeting in the forenoon, at which Mr. Campbell White, Glasgow, presided. The attendance was large and representative. The Chairman delivered a stirring address on "The Whole-heartedness of Christianity." Mr. George Clarke spoke about the insufficiency of the Upper Room in Bank-street to meet the necessities of the Y.M.C.A. He hoped that the practical outcome of the Convention would be a new hall.

The Convention proper began at 2.30, Mrs. Stuart Gray, of Kinfauns, presiding. The large hall was crowded with ladies, young and old. Lively interest was manifested throughout the whole proceedings, and the various papers were listened to with the closest attention. The first topic taken up was

START FAIR WILL STAND WEAR.

Mrs. Menzies, Liverpool, speaking of how to start an Association, insisted on the necessity of forming a Y.W.C.A. in every town and village. She appealed to Christians to realise their individual responsibility in this matter. Let them divide the town in which they lived into districts, and visit the families in these districts. Let them see to it that their work is thoroughly aggressive. She pointed out the advantages membership would bring to a young woman. It would enlarge her heart; her sympathies and prayers would go out to girls, and she would do all that lay in her power to bring them into the fold. She emphasised the value of junior branches. The ordinary age for joining was fifteen; but girls were often converted, and the bent of their lives was formed before that age is reached. Hence the need for junior branches. She concluded with an eloquent plea for the multiplication of little twigs on the parent tree of the Y.W.C.A.

Mrs. Wallace Robertson said that the first step in the formation of a branch should be a union for prayer, asking blessing and guidance in every future step. Then a tea-meeting should be held, to which all young women in the neighbourhood should be invited. The services of forewomen in warehouses and places of business should be enlisted. At the meeting the objects and benefits of the Association should be explained. It is important not to commence with many rules; begin with small things, and get gradually into working order. A weekly Bible-class should be formed at once. Let the members understand, on joining, that you depend on their efforts mainly for the bringing-in of others. Teach them to visit absent members, to leave notices of the meetings in business houses, and to become Christian workers in the true sense of the word. Loving hearts, willing hands, and hearty service overcome all obstacles. In all their efforts let them remember that they are fellow-labourers with God, and that in his strength only are they strong.

UNION IS STRENGTH

was the next subject considered. Mrs. Oatts explained the nature of the various kinds of branches. Congregational branches were made up of those connected with individual churches, and were ranked among the agencies of these churches. Their rapid increase showed the value placed on them. Some of them were exclusively congregational, others were branches of the National Association, and others were affiliated with the Y.W.C.A., while retaining all the independence of a congregational institution. Those purely congregational were quite unfettered, but they were weak because of their lack of connection with the local centre. Affiliation does not mean incorporation. A congregational branch in unison with the local centre preserves its individuality, and gains the power that comes from forming part of a mighty organisation. As wires go from offices to the Central Exchange, so should all branches be linked to the parent association.

DIVERSITIES OF OPERATION

was the subject dealt with by Mrs. Campbell White, as meeting the craving of young ladies for heart-satisfying spheres of service. Some girls were students, others musicians, and some were absorbed in philosophical speculations; but all these aimed at selfish gratification. She was greatly struck with a remark made by Dr. Pentecost in her hearing. He said that the difference between a soul saved and a life saved was the difference between the thief on the cross and the Apostle Paul. True pleasure was found in working for Christ. (1) Let young ladies so help in Y.W.C.A.'s already established; (2) let them take up flower missions; (3) in their holidays let them seize favourable opportunies of doing something for those they are brought into contact with; (4) let them use all their talents and and accomplishments in promoting God's glory; and (5) let them try to win girls of their own class to Christ. They should take a decided stand on the Lord's side. They knew from bitter experience the longings of a dissatisfied heart, and they could best tell their companions how to find satisfaction. What they said with their lips should be the overflow of their hearts; then it would have irresistible power.

Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird said that the diversified efforts of the Association have for their end the linking together of groups of young women in a holy league to uphold all that is virtuous and good, and to withstand evil in whatever shape it appears. Sympathy is the bond of union. The rural branches had special claims on their attention. In some of them mistresses and servants were invited to attend on an equal footing, but that plan was found to be unworkable. Servants would, or could not come when their mistresses were present, so they had to be dealt with separately. Their chief wants were an increase to their self-respect, and a wider interest in subjects not immediately connected with their duties. The first was supplied by inviting them to a garden party, where after tea they were told that it did matter to the Y.W.C.A. whether they were happy or not, and that they should look on the members as friends deeply concerned about their welfare. That the right chord was touched soon became evident. They were delighted at being treated as guests, and listened eagerly to what they heard. The next step was to send them instructive letters, and to provoke their emulation by promising presents to those who should answer a certain number of questions on Sunday afternoons. Thus a study of the Bible began among them; and prizes offered for needlework called out their industry in another direction. It is hoped that grammar, geography, history, and other useful studies will be entered on soon. The servants are in this way equipped to discharge their duties better, taught Christian truth, and prepared for wifehood and motherhood.

Miss Stewart alluded to work among the women employed at the herring-fishing in Peterhead, of whom there were 2000 this summer. She held 269 meetings among them, visited them, and tried to throw a shield over them to protect them from drunkenness and immorality, to which they are specially exposed. Ministers and fish-curers bore unanimous testimony that these women were greatly improved since the Y.W.C.A. sent their agents to labour among them.

The Hon. Emily Kinnaird gave an interesting

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE Y.W.C.A.,

in the course of which she said that their endeavour was to furnish young women, in the pressure and bustle of life, with the comforts of home life. She described how this aim was carried out, dwelling specially on the needs of those employed in factories and mills. She concluded with a practical appeal. The Dundee Y.W.C.A. was housed at the top of a long stair, which tired weary bodies. A new house was a crying necessity. Could not something be done at once, and so enlarge the usefulness of a most helpful organisation? Why should not £200 be raised towards a new building that afternoon?

FETCHING HOME OUR BANISHED.

With this subject Mrs. Gordon dealt tenderly and touchingly. After alluding to the beautiful story in 2 Sam. xiv., she declared that they themselves were faulty in the banishment of their poor fallen sisters. There was a spurious delicacy in mothers' meetings, and in classes for girls, which did much harm. She spoke of bad registries, insufficient food, and the other causes which led to banishment from home and society; referred to the advantages of a rescue home, and appealed to mothers and daughters to speak out against the vice which ruins so many souls and blights so many lives.

Miss Beauchamp furnished some interesting information about the

TRAVELLERS' AID AND INTERNATIONAL UNION,

which embraces twenty-two countries, and has 32,000 members. Each National Union is free to make its own rules, and does much good in preserving or restoring girls. Placards, giving addresses to which young women may go, are placed in railway-stations and steamships. London has a station visitor, who waits for trains, and welcomes those in search of situations

REGISTRIES.

Speaking on this topic, Miss Wingate said that their success depended on the registrar, who should be zealous, consecrated, large-hearted, and full of common sense. These qualities were necessary to win the confidence of employers and employed.

The foregoing are but some of the wise and practical suggestions made at this most helpful Convention. We give them a larger audience in the hope that they may be beneficial to those interested in the welfare of young women. The ladies who took part in the deliberations were full of enthusiasm and the wisdom gained from experience, so their words deserve careful consideration.

A largely attended meeting was held in the evening, in Kinnaird Hall. Mr. A. J. Buist presided, and advocated the raising of £1000 to build suitable premises for the local Y.W.C.A., which, handicapped as it is, is doing good work. Mr. George Clarke eloquently backed up the appeal. He said that it had been ascertained by circulars that 800 young women would join the Association if a comfortable building were secured for its meetings. We understand £300 were promised by those present, and hope that the rest will be guaranteed soon. Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, delivered an evangelistic address of great power; and then the last of the three meetings connected with the Convention was at an end.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Promise for October 10 (Psalm ii. 8): "Ask of Me, and I shall give Thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—October 10, Lev. xvi 26—34; October 11, Lev. xxv. 1—17; October 12, Mark i. 1—13; October 13, Mark i. 14—28; October 14, Mark i. 29—45; October 15, Mark ii. 1—12.

FRENCH SEAMEN AT CARDIFF.—A large number of French seamen visit this port, and Mr. Lawrence of the Welcome Home, 228, Butt-street, Cardiff, has commenced a meeting specially for them on Sunday afternoons, at which Professor Barbier has spoken on several occasions. A reading-room is also provided, for which French books, magazines, &c., would be very useful.

A PARIS EVANGELIST.—The twenty-eighth part of "Recollections of a Paris Evangelist" has been issued, containing particulars of M. Vignal's work in Paris for the past year. He has held 248 services, of which 121 were in the mission room at 48, Rue de Lille. A larger hall was opened on May 12, at 29, Rue du Texel, when the building was filled.—The services there have been well attended. Ten members have been added to the church, and four lost from various causes. M. Ledieu, a converted soldier, has taken the work of colporteur. For further details we would refer readers to the little book, which may be had of Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. 2d.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. Fleming Stevenson, of Dublin; also a special report of the Conference on Evangelisation held at Mildmay this week.

At the moment of going to press we learn, with deep regret, that Rev. Clarmont Skrine, whose name will lovingly be remembered by most of our readers, passed away to his rest on Monday morning last. He had preached at his own church (Emmanuel Church, Wimbledon) the previous evening, and presided at the prayer-meeting which followed.

It has been finely said by the Rev. Dr. Alexander, that if we could rob the Psalms of Christ, we could not rob them of Christendom. The Psalmist is not only a clear prophet of Christ but of every Christian, the delineation of the spiritual life and character being prophetic, and implying "the knowledge of a character not yet existing, of souls yet to be created, and of spirits yet to be moulded out of the poor clay of fallen humanity, of a generation yet to come, a people to be created which shall praise the Lord, a seed to serve Him, a people that shall be born." And, as the same great thinker has pointed out, there is one feature of this spiritual character as delineated in the Psalms "which is unknown to all other religions—a deep abiding sense of sinfulness; a holiness arising not from effort, but from conscience feeling a burden, and faith laying it upon a Saviour."

What a wretched mistake is made by those opponents of Christianity who urge that the doctrine of future happiness has been put forward in order to keep the poor content in a miserable condition here. Without the belief in a future life there can be but little hope for humanity, for, as a young Oxford student recently said, this earth is already beginning to decay, and its decline may be hastened by forces of which we now know nothing; "while, as to the individual, one's heart would sink at the tremendous waste of capacities and talent which has gone on from the beginning of history, and is still going on; at the broken aims and aspirations, and the stunted beings who have never yet realised their true end."

Rev. Mr. Haweis, of Marylebone, has gone out of his way to pronounce upon the Romish Apostasy, what a Roman Catholic newspaper has termed, a "splendid eulogy." We hope, however, it will be instructive to him when he observes that far from being thankful for his poetic and imaginative tribute, his new friends have the ingratitude to speak of him as "a musical and literary dilettante," and go on to say that "there are some who believe that he carries dilettantism into the region of religion." It is not unlikely, however, that these ungrateful remarks are due to the fact that Mr. Haweis did not entirely close his eyes to the facts of history, and made a somewhat feeble reference to Rome's "errors and abuses." That his new friends designate this allusion as "the necessary clap-trap qualification" is not flattering to Mr. Haweis; probably when he next deals with Rome there will be more history and less fancy evident in the treatment of the subject.

A letter appears in The Nonconformist of the 30th ult., to the effect that the General Committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales has by a small majority decided that Mr. Ward Beecher shall not be invited to speak at the Autumnal Meeting of the Union, to be held next week at Norwich. The ground of objection was the theology of Mr. Beecher. It is further said that the Chairman of the Union, Rev. Edward White, threatened to vacate the chair rather than be compelled to extend to Mr. Beecher the right hand of fellowship. The writer of the letter, who is "broad" in his theological opinions, forecasts serious schism from the action of the Committee.

From a volume of criminal statistics, published a week or two ago in Paris, it appears that suicides in France are increasing with remarkable rapidity. The proportion has increased, during the last twenty years, one hundred per cent., that is from 10 to 20 per 100,000 per annum. The figures, strange to say, have not been affected by periods of depression, or of national calamity. Members of the French Academy of Medicine attribute a large number of the cases to the weakening of the will, and the reaction of despondency, due to the terrible increase in the consumption of the injurious alcoholic drinks which are now so largely used in Paris and other cities and towns. Thoughtful observers who have witnessed the spread of atheistic theories have found in the development of secularism a sufficient explanation of the gloomy statistics. Doubtless both these theories are accurate, each factor being influential in making men cowardly in the face of the unknown future.

The Guardian lately had an advertisement of a somewhat remarkable kind; we trust that ere this it has met with a response:—

> A curate of thirty years will be grateful for clothing. Has six girls, ages from five to twenty, four boys from eight to eighteen: destitute of clothes and education.

That this is not a ghastly practical joke will readily be imagined by anyone familiar with the "Clergy List," with its columns of pluralists and wealthy livings, and its sad array of poor curates who must necessarily be on the verge of starvation. A society for the purpose of giving monetary relief and supplying old clothes to these unfortunate clergymen is, we believe, fully taxed to meet the piteous cases which are brought under its notice, but the existence of such a state of things seems to call loudly for more drastic measures. The labourer is worthy of his hire, and that hire ought, at any rate, to be sufficient to keep him and his family from the pangs of poverty.

But ought he to have a family? Is it right to marry with no prospect of keeping a wife and children? A well-known pastor said, the other day, that he could find any number of men to fill village pulpits at £70 a year, but able men, men of grasp and power, men of education and experience, are hard to find. And why? Because as soon as a young minister can get a house over his head he marries, and years which should be devoted to maturing the mind, and preparing for the most important of all responsibilities, are eaten up with the cares of a family which he is unable to support.

In our issue of September 23, we commented upon the condition of Dublin with respect to intemperance. We are rejoiced to find that a Roman Catholic contemporary has followed upon the same lines, and in a fearless and out-spoken manner says:—

> Not a city in the island is deteriorating so quickly as this, under the accursed influence of the whisky demon, and yet there seem to be none of position ready to rise up and save the young population. It is absolutely appalling to walk through the streets at night and see the sights of coarse drunkenness, and hear the constant outpourings of blasphemy from the lips of mere children.

Protestant ministers of all denominations and many of the priests have for long been working upon total abstinence lines. What is still wanted in Ireland is a crusade by the Roman Catholic prelates; and if the Irish people have to be saved from themselves, that crusade will have to be commenced very quickly. How bitterly sad it is to reflect that so many professed Christians in Ireland are engaged in a traffic which is admitted on all hands to be ruining the bodies and souls of thousands upon thousands of our brothers and sisters.

Mr. Gerald Massey has given up verse-writing for lecturing against the Bible and Christianity. His method, he states, "is to explode by explaining," but he only serves up to his hearers the old hash about inverted myths and elemental powers. If it were not for the fact that his name had become well known in less frothy endeavours, he would be lecturing to empty benches. Greater, or worse, men than he have wasted their powers in the vain attempt to overthrow the Christian faith; and, judging from the new lecturer's utterances, there is no reason to fear that he will be any more successful than his predecessors. We quite agree with him that there is a vast amount of suffering and sorrow in the slums and courts of the Metropolis, but we know that Christianity has not caused it; moreover, we are certain that Mr. Massey's vapourings about the "psycho-theistic phase of thought" will do nothing to alleviate or reduce it. If the new teacher has nothing better to bring to the rescue of humanity, he had better leave Christians to go about their Master's work in peace.

It is stated that a memorial has just been presented to the South Australian Parliament praying for the introduction of Bible-reading into the curriculum of the State schools of Gawler and its neighbourhood—and it would appear that in Victoria parents are almost unanimous in desiring that the Bible should be read and studied daily in the schools. A society has been formed under the name of the "Bible in State Schools League," with the view of bringing about a change in the present system and securing Scriptural instruction for the pupils. It is evident from the tone of some of the best Australian journals that the public mind is awakening to the evils of the system under which the Bible is excluded, and of what one newspaper terms "the evil policy which is rearing a generation of practical pagans in a professedly Christian land." We heartily wish the movement God speed, and trust the day is not distant when in this enlightened England of ours there shall be a similarly powerful expression of opinion with regard to the need for an improvement in our own educational arrangements.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

"The greatest battle the world has ever seen," says a popular American divine, "is the battle for bread," and none of those who study

> "The city with its noise, its ceaseless whirl and din,
> The myriad hearts that daily beat and break therein," will doubt the truth of this statement.

Every morning sees a vast crowd leaving their homes to enter upon a struggle as real as ever a battlefield produced; hand, heart, and head combined in the conflict; every faculty of mind and body brought into subservience to the one great end. No need of a Longfellow to remind these busy toilers that already they have learnt that by experience; and whilst some gain their end, and obtain a sufficiency for their needs, very many would be only too glad if they could wake some morning to discover that the story of their strivings had been a dream, and that life was no longer to be the one long ceaseless round of toil they had had to endure. But no such glad awakening comes, and year after year they labour on, no time for relaxation, no time for quietude and rest, no time for anything but work. What wonder that in such a battle many fall! what wonder if the continuous strain proves too much for the system, and nature's cry for rest being unheeded, work becomes a misery, and as the toilers attend to their various duties,

> "The heart is sick, and the brain benumbed,
> As well as the weary hand."

Then comes the time when labour is no longer possible, when nature having pleaded in vain, asserts her power: the pen drops from the weary fingers; the brain loses its power of concentration; and the golden tide of life has reached a very low ebb indeed.

Now, however unwillingly, rest must be sought, but too often is not to be found. The overwrought system refuses to rest; and, unless by some means the recuperative forces are supplemented, a complete breakdown must ensue, which means an existence not to be called life—the dreadful possibilities of which we dare scarcely think about.

How to regain lost strength is now the great problem by which their minds are agitated. Ordinary medicinal treatment is of no avail; the cause, not the symptoms merely, must be dealt with, each debilitated system must be strengthened and energised, before they can again take their place in the "bivouac of life;" experience has taught us that to surround the body by natural influences which almost imperceptibly but surely revive the recuperative force, will soothe the overwrought nerves to rest, and, restoring lost energy, again enable the workers to return with wonted zest to the task of life.

Magnetism is a wonderful power, little understood, but whose curative attributes have been most wonderfully demonstrated; and by its invigorating influences, not only is power given to resume work, but by and by labour becomes sweet: so that with such a potent element continually in action the chances of relapse are far more remote than they otherwise would be.

We do not say that in all cases where the nervous system has been shattered by continuous overwork, Magnetism will be equally successful, but we do say that the experience of many years, and the testimonials of numerous business men and weary women, to whom the advice to try Magnetism was as Milton's, "Arise, or be for ever fallen," confirm us in our opinion that if it does not prove beneficial, other remedies will be of little avail.

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested, by Mr. B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

In a letter from Mr. Lewthwaite, dated May 8th, he says:—"Some twelve months ago, a youth, who attends my Sunday-school class, applied to you. He had been taken ill with consumption and attended by the doctor, and at last had been pronounced incurable. He had become so bad that he had to be carried to and from his bed. You sent him medicine, also prescription for bottle of liniment. I am glad to say it acted wonderfully. In time he became strong as ever, and is now enjoying the best of health. I am recommending others to apply to you."

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who is now in this country on a short visit, is writing "The Story of the Songs and Solos," giving a brief history of each hymn, with interesting facts relating to its origin. He earnestly requests his friends in Great Britain and elsewhere to send to him short and well authenticated incidents, which may have come to their knowledge, of blessing attending the use of these hymns and sacred songs. Such a book as Mr. Sankey is preparing will not only be a deeply interesting memento of the movement in which he has borne a leading part, but will prove of great service to Christian workers, especially those engaged in the service of praise and of Gospel song. We trust our readers will freely respond, as far as they have the power, to Mr. Sankey's request; he may be addressed, care of the publishers of this paper.

There is often a transparent fallacy in much that is spoken in reference to an educated ministry. Churches, we are told, that are afraid to educate to the highest degree are afraid of knowledge. Is it not that they are afraid of the misuse of knowledge? A knowledge of the truth of Christ is what men cry out for, but mere learning does not give this. We hear much in the same way of a "reasonable" religion, but we must take care whose reasoning it is. To the sophists among the Greeks, and to the bigoted among the Jews, Christianity looked unreasonable. Had Paul made the Gospel reasonable to them, we may never have heard his name; but, through the grace of the Spirit, he refused to do this, and he planted Christian churches in nearly one half the cities of the Roman Empire.

Attention has been lately paid to excavations in Persia that reveal the King's Palace at Susa; a complete account in The Times of last week gives great interest to the subject. Readers of the Books of Nehemiah and Esther, and of Dan. viii. 2, have realised, in some degree, the vast splendour of the palace in Shushan, or Susa. The explorations were commenced by Mr. Kennett Loftus, but were interrupted by the fanaticism that guards what is held to be the tomb of the prophet Daniel. Recently they have been resumed by M. Dieulafoy, and fully corroborate the Scripture account. Remarkable to say, there are traces of the very materials described in Esther i.: "The hangings of white, green, and blue, fastened with cords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble;" and the "pavement of red, white, and yellow, and black marble." There are remains also of porticoes, courts, palace of wives, and of all the Oriental grandeur which the history of the Old Testament describes.

The Journal des Débats has a very grave article on the stagnation of the population in France. There are nearly twice as many births annually in Germany as in France. The population of France formerly exceeded that of the territory composing the German Empire. Now the German Empire exceeds that of France by close upon nine millions. But it is properly argued that France must thus lose the adequate force and energy of fresh blood, and must necessarily become weak and degenerate. When unhallowed practices are followed by a people; when marriage loses its sacredness, and it is even held better never to marry at all, a nation must find that it is serious work to set itself against the laws of God, and the lesson is as important for London as for Paris.

The Grand Jury at the Old Bailey, after returning true bills in no less than twenty-two cases of indecent assault on children and young girls, drew up and submitted a presentment to the effect that, as the punishments at present awarded are inadequate to restrain the commission of such crimes, the only way to meet the cruel and degraded nature of the offenders is the infliction of bodily pain. Sir Thomas Chambers, the Recorder, regretted that it was not in his power to give practical evidence of his sympathy with the opinion.

Recent legislation has of course had the effect of bringing within the meshes of the law numbers of offenders who, a while ago, would have escaped punishment, but it is only too evident that more severe measures are called for if these cruel offences against girls and children are to be prevented, or adequately punished. There is no room for sentiment in dealing with these ruffians —ruffians, whatever their social position or education may be—who brutally take advantage of the helplessness of their victims, we hope that some Christian member of Parliament will take the matter in hand during the coming session, with the view of including the lash in the punishments prescribed for this brutal class of offences.

The Palestine Exploration Society has conferred a great benefit upon Bible students by the publication, in a cheap form, of a well-condensed account of their twenty years' labours in the Holy Land. So much interest centres in Palestine that every reliable contribution of the kind is to be welcomed gladly; and we are sure that the little volume will be found instructive and helpful by many who are unable to afford the high-priced volumes previously issued. The Biblical value of the survey has been very great; and those who love God's Word will not consider that the large amount which has been expended has been anything but well spent.

"THE NOBLE ARMY OF MARTYRS" was the subject of an invigorating and eloquent lecture delivered on Thursday evening by Mr. Charles James, the young Welsh orator, to a large audience in the Friends' Meeting-house, Uxbridge, under the chairmanship of Mr. Alfred S. Dyer. Uxbridge is one of the places where Christian martyrs have sealed their faith with their lives. One of the principal objects of the lecture was to foster that spirit of entire consecration and Divine abandonment that will lead Christian people to do and to dare anything for God. Mr. James, who is one of the lecturers of the Gospel Purity Association, has accepted an invitation to visit the United States in January, where he will speak on Purity.

THE BIRMINGHAM GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION has decided to continue the work carried on through the agency of Mr. W. Gaule in the Borough Police Court. The mission is unsectarian and non-political in its principles, and specially organised for rescue work, so that while leaving Mr. Gaule to act on exactly the same lines as in the past, it can, through its 200 visitors and other agencies, follow up many of the cases which Mr. Gaule would necessarily after a short time have to leave. Thousands of meetings have been held in the open air, in tents, in Board schools, and mission halls, with most encouraging results. During the last three months two tents have been occupied nightly, in which large and often crowded audiences have listened with deep interest to the loving, earnest words of men and women who, frequently from their own experience, have testified to the blessings of a "sober, righteous, and godly life." The three weeks' meetings just closed in Windsor-street, have been crowded; and the results have exceeded the fondest anticipations. Nearly 400 adults and 100 children signed the pledge. The offices of the Mission are in Corporation-street.

YOUNG MEN AND MISSIONS.

The following letter from Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's-churchyard, was lately addressed to Y.M.C.A.'s in Great Britain, a copy of the book, "A Missionary Band,"* being generously sent to each Association with the letter. We have thought it well to give it publicity, in the hope that other friends may be prompted to aid in the circulation of this book among young men throughout the land; there ought to be copies in the library of every Y.M.C.A. in the English speaking world. A neat edition at 2s. 6d. has now been issued. Mr. Williams says:—

We all rejoice in the great, and, indeed, unprecedented interest which has of late been manifested with regard to foreign missions. The cry of China, India, Japan, Africa, and the heathen world has been heard, and, in a measure, is being answered by the Christians of our and other countries. Many consecrated young servants of Christ have gone forth to dedicate their lives to this grand and glorious work, and a large number of others are waiting, until the way be made plain, to "spend and be spent" for their Divine Master in heathen lands. This is, in my judgment, one of the most hopeful signs of the times; but, after all, how few labourers, comparatively speaking, are in the fields, which are already white for the harvest! How little has been done, compared with what remains yet to be accomplished!

There are over 3000 Y.M.C. Associations. Ought we not to seek, and may we not largely share, in the blessed privilege of the in-gathering of the heathen to Christ? I am thankful to know that some of our Associations have been roused to a sense of their responsibility with regard to this question, and have already formed a Foreign Missionary Society. This is most encouraging; but why should there not be a similar Society connected with every Association, which should become a centre of organised, systematic effort, having for its motto: "The World for Christ," and seeking, by regular prayer meetings and other means to evangelise the world. I would suggest also that, if practicable, a correspondence should be kept up between these Societies, and that definite objects should form the subject for united and especial prayer, on occasions set apart for that purpose.

Then I would further suggest that a list of all those be kept who have gone forth from the ranks of the Y.M.C.A. (and I rejoice to know there are many), and that these beloved co-workers should be prayed for by name week by week.

How it would strengthen the hearts of our brethren in far-off lands to know that they were upheld by our prayers! And who can estimate the blessing and spiritual grace with which they may be enriched in answer to our supplications?

As far as I can see, nothing but blessing could be the outcome of such an agency as I suggest. And if, therefore, you have not a Foreign Missionary Society in connection with your Association, I would strongly urge your committee to give that matter your prayerful attention.

With reference to this subject Mr. Reginald Radcliffe writes to us:—

"Permit me to draw your attention to one or two points. You will notice that Mr. Williams, in his stirring appeal in favour of foreign missions, naturally confines his appeal to Y.M.C.A.'s. But there is every reason why the Y.W.C.A.'s should also be appealed to. For in many heathen countries the labours of women are really more needed than those of men. But, furthermore, is not Mr. Williams's appeal in every way worthy of your pressing it home upon the hearts of Sunday-school teachers, and also upon the ministers and communicants of churches at home and abroad, especially in America? I say especially in America, because I think Mr. Williams is not posting his appeal beyond the British, Australian, and New Zealand branches of the Y.M.C.A."†

THE ADDRESS BY DR. WYLIE, which appeared in our last issue, will, we believe, shortly be published separately by the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

DR. GUINNESS IN BRISBANE.

The letter to which we alluded in our last is dated Sydney, August 4, but refers to the closing of the work at Brisbane. Dr. Guinness says:—

The work at Brisbane is over, and I am once more back at Sydney, but will retrace my steps, and tell you a little of what the Lord has done for us. The second Social Purity meeting was a greater success than the first. Whilst I was delivering my two and a half hours' address, the women held a demonstration at the Town Hall, and secured hundreds of signatures for the Repeal. We took in all very nearly two thousand signatures, and in our huge gathering the excitement was so intense that the Sydney scene was repeated, the whole audience rising to their feet and cheering, and waving their hats and shouting again. Some of the members of Parliament retired from the lecture: it was too hot for them. As the Speaker of the House told me of one man who was loud in his expressions of disgust both for the lecture and the lecturer:—"Sir, that Member is a dissolute man." To-night I re-delivered the address in the Y.M.C.A., Sydney, with the Primate of Australia (Dr. Barry) in the chair.

My farewell meeting was very wonderful. We commenced with a tea at 6.30, at which between 400 and 500 sat down, the company being composed of workers, and those who had found blessing in the inquiry-room. Tea was followed by a short meeting of praise and testimony till eight o'clock; then the doors were opened to the general public, when hundreds flocked in. At about ten o'clock, we broke up the gathering, and the tram-cars were laden with singing multitudes who then packed the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. for our "all night of prayer, praise, and testimony."

It would require a little volume to tell you all the various instances of deep interest, but I must describe one or two of them. The last Sunday night of the mission, which was only nineteen days in all, after returning home, my host told me he was going to have a bonfire. "What! a bonfire on Sunday night?" "Yes." "What of?" "You shall see." Producing his "Devil's Testaments," or packs of cards, to the number of sixteen, he cast them into the flames, some of them expensive American cards. In they went, whist cards and all. "Wife, where's my cribbage-board?" "Here it is, my dear," and in it went. While the burning mass crackled and flared blue and green, as if the sulphur of the pit was upon it, we all shouted "Glory, hallelujah!" In came a dear man who had spent £13,000 on drink, and who had signed the pledge under R. T. Booth. After sitting a moment he resolutely produced his old smoker's pipe, his darling, and, together with his splendid tobacco-pouch, he deliberately consigned them to the flames. Hurrah! they are being delivered from the devil and his bondage; ministers, too, are giving up the weed. Last Saturday a minister came to me and said, "I feel, after hearing you, that my pipe is dishonouring to the Son of God, and I shall trust Him to help me to give it up from to-night.

One dear man came up all the way from Melbourne, 1000 miles, to see me; he found the Saviour, and returned home again rejoicing. Another was drawn down from Townsville, about 500 miles north, and, being drawn into the gatherings out of curiosity, found the Saviour.

The last night over 100 inquirers streamed in, quicker than we could run in forms to accommodate them; no pressing them to come; numbers willingly "received Him into their boat," and, even as the disciples of old, "immediately they were at the land whither they went." About 400 dear people in all entered the anxious rooms during the nineteen days, and now, in many cases, their only anxiety seems to be to please Jesus. For the first half of the mission inquirers were, nine out of ten, men; but, in the latter part, many sisters were present. They were almost more than we could deal with. I generally spoke to them collectively, so as to reach all. Families are being saved; many not only "feel like singing all the time," but actually do so. Infidels, fighters, drunkards, and moralists are inquiring after Jesus, and Christians are longing for holiness and power.

I visited the gaol in Brisbane, and addressed eighty men. At the close eighteen of them came forward and gripped my hand in token of their desire to belong to Christ. The horrid chains clanked on the stone floor, as some of them, condemned to lifelong imprisonment, rose to come. Only one man in the whole place had a Bible; but before leaving the town I presented every man with one, and wrote their names inside, and established a daily prayer meeting, to which thirty-four of them are coming. I also formed a Women's Prayer Union, which 209 women joined the first night, to meet on Monday afternoons, and a Men's Prayer Union, which 106 joined, to pray on Saturdays, from eight to nine. I do sincerely trust that the special effort thus concluded may prove the unstopping of a mighty river of blessing for Brisbane.

LADY ABERDEEN ON THE TRAINING OF WOMEN.

On Friday afternoon, Sept. 17, a meeting of the Perth Section of the Scottish branch of the Christian Women's Education Union was held in the hall of the Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society, South Tay-street. There was a large attendance, and the Countess of Aberdeen, President of the Union, addressed the meeting at some length. We give the following summary of her address from The Scotsman.

They were gathered together, she said, to advance a very important work—a work that it was full time that Christian women should take up with earnestness. While holding in theory that every talent should be improved to the utmost of their power, yet in practice there had been an inclination to hold aloof from a movement for the higher education of women from a sort of half-lurking suspicion that such movements lead to dangerous modes of thought, to free-thinking, or, at best, that it was tending unduly to exalt the wisdom of this world. But happily the spirit of the age and the needs of the day pressed them forward and made them realise that they must respond to their call if they were to follow Christ. On one hand there was an ever-increasing number of women who had to fit themselves to earn their own bread, and who find in this age of competition that the superficial knowledge which would have qualified them for their various callings in time past cannot avail them now. And then they found social questions pressing themselves forward in all directions in a way which could not be disregarded, and they demanded the trained intellects of Christian women to grapple with them. They could not be trifled with or handled in any weak, womanish way; if Christian women were to take the place which God had assigned to them of being helpmeets to man, they must educate their heads as well as their hearts in order to meet the strain which the near future would assuredly bring to bear on them all.

But besides all this there was a universal thirst for knowledge, realisation of the grand new fields of thought and discovery and research, which were opening themselves up to all alike, and which must attract the best and the most ardent young minds—the minds which we should most desire to win for Christ.

There was a growing impatience of an education which was designed, though unintentionally, mainly for outside show, and which never went to the root of anything; an intense thirst for real knowledge, for thorough training in whatever might be learned—a longing, in fact, for what is true and real, a distaste for form without the substance, an aversion to learning what it is the custom to learn, if it does not approve itself to our reason as really improving us, really serving some useful purpose, and fitting us in some practical way for the work of life.

There was no escaping from this spirit which was abroad amongst us, but there were two ways of dealing with it. One was to try to confine it, to hold it down, to think that we could avoid the dangers of over education, of which we had lately heard a good deal, by trying to remain in the old grooves in which we had been brought up. The other was to take the course proposed by this Union, to determine to Christianise it, and to see in it God's hand preparing the young for new and more glorious work. In truth they ought to welcome this desire for what is true and real, this turning away from shadows, for it had been characteristic of all great minds and of all reformers, and was indeed a grand soil for a deep and true religious faith.

They must remember that this spirit of free inquiry must of necessity enter into the religion of the times too, but they should not be frightened by it—they should meet it, not by authority, but by sympathy and respect. Who could tell the number of young whose whole religious life has been affected by injudicious treatment when they were passing through times of doubt and difficulty? Were therenot those there who had felt agonising questionings in childhood and youth—questionings which they dared not make known for fear of being thought disloyal to their Lord? And, thus, with some point of difficulty, some articles of faith, which was not true to them, at all events, in the old form in which it had been presented, they began to dispise themselves for pretending to believe what they did not. Such times probably came in the lives of most brought up in Christian homes, and especially in these times when the simple, happy faith of childhood, held on authority of parents and teachers, must be proved and tested, if it is to become a living power to the individual, and pass into the deep reasonable faith of maturer years. If the doubt was suppressed for fear of offending against received forms, there was a grave danger of unreality or formality, even though it be an orthodox and evangelical formality, creeping over the religious life. If it was expressed, how much depended on the treatment with which it was met. "This is the truth, and you must believe it without questioning, or you can be no true Christian," was one course, and a course well calculated to be fatal.

Tender sympathy, a gentle drawing forth of the difficulties, and a recognition that, although God's Gospel remains unchangeable, He reveals it in various ways to different persons at different times, was another way, and one which tended to lead the questioning soul into a deeper, truer, freer faith. It would be a blessed thing if that Union could help in such a work. But if so, it must not be allowed to remain as it was, and her Ladyship trusted that some means might be suggested to achieve that end, and make the Union a real power in the land.

Miss Petrie, B.A., took "Reading" for her subject, as a power universally possessed, but not always wisely used, and quoted St. Paul's exhortation, "Give heed to reading." Speaking of why we read, she said the true reason is that our minds may be nourished and exercised by study. This process must always go on, for a mind once become stagnant can never give a fresh draught to another. She defined what is and what is not literature, and dwelt on the need of choosing wisely, since reading indifferent books means leaving valuable books unread, and lowers our standard of thought and expression. We must avoid getting into a groove, and reading only what we agree with, and we must seek wisdom as well as knowledge. She urged on her audience that quality matters more than quantity, that we must be accurate, but not too critical. Lastly, she dwelt on the safeguard against error found in the Scriptures, and in prayerful reading of all books. She then proceeded to describe the Students' Branch of the C.W.E.U., which she has organised to help girls by means of correspondence classes, forming a "college by post." More than 1000 have joined the Society since it was started, five years ago.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—Distributors at Folkstone write:—Great blessing has been received at this place. Visits have been made to the French coast, where the people readily receive French tracts and Gospels, and read them.

SALISBURY CONFERENCE.

There are many Conferences which have become annual throughout the country, and some good people disapprove of their multiplication. So should we, if the same people went to all of them; but, inasmuch as they are opportunities for gathering together the children of God in the localities in which they are held, and strengthening the weak by contact with those who are stronger in the faith, we pray that they may be multiplied.

There are conferences and conferences. Some are characteristically heavy and dull, as compared with others which are characteristically bright and genial. But even the dullest are a great deal better than nothing, and gradually they may be toned up to the joyfulness of the cheeriest.

Of this last sort the twelve-year-old Conference at Salisbury is the best example that we know. A rare combination of quasi-military precision with the heartiest bonhomie makes Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites a singularly fitting convener and director of such a gathering.

In this cathedral city, as might be expected, the Churchism is High, though not highly Ritualistic; and there is absolutely not another clergyman in the place who has any apparent sympathy with the rector of Fisherton. Yet he has re-modelled his parish, and is by far the most active and useful clergyman that we hear of in the city or neighbourhood of Salisbury.

A few years after the Conference was commenced, Maundrel Hall was built, where meetings are now held; and last year a unique iron structure was put up in Mr. Thwaites's garden, where he hospitably receives to tea, on the days of the Conference, about the same number of Christ's disciples as gathered in the upper room at Jerusalem.

Close to Maundrel Hall are the rooms of the Y.W.C.A., which are placed at the disposal of the ladies for rest and intercourse, and adjoining these is Luther Hall, where friends from a distance dine. One of the pleasant features of this Conference is the hour after dinner, when five-minute narratives of God's work are given; and after tea, when the conversation turns up on his Word.

The special subjects brought under consideration this year were, in the mornings, The Privileges of Believers—Consecration, Communion, and Conformity; and, in the evenings, The Church—its Origin, its Responsibilities, and its Hopes. In these days, when all sorts of fantasies and fanaticisms spring up in the shallow soil, it is no small advantage to multiply opportunities like these where the great things of God's law are dwelt upon, and foundation truths expounded and enforced.

In opening the first day's subject, Mr. Thwaites referred to the consecration of the priests by the blood of atonement and the oil of the Spirit's grace. He insisted that we know now no altar but the cross, and no priesthood but that of Jesus, the Son of God, our great High Priest, and the priesthood of all believers. He then urged the entreaty of Rom. xii. 1, to present your bodies a living sacrifice to God, and closed with the remark that, if you want a good character from God, you must lose your character with the world.

Rev. D. B. Hankin then read an able paper which we hope to insert in an early number.

Mr. George Holland followed: his wise counsels will not be forgotten. If you are really consecrated to God, you will ask, How little can I do for myself, how much for Christ. We want very little in this world. Let us give all up to the Lord Jesus. Is your money consecrated? How carefully you will spend every penny. How anxiously you will look that home and foreign missions prosper. I said to a lady who was going to do some costly thing for my work, "It will cost so much." She replied, "It would only be the price of a new dress."

At the evening meeting a paper was read by Rev. F. Baldey, of Southsea, on "The Church: its Origin," which the pressure on our space, despite eight extra pages, obliges us to defer.

On Wednesday, at the ten o'clock prayer-meeting, Mr. Thwaites quaintly touched upon the words of Solomon: "I have compared thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots." (1) A great price was paid for them; they were his exclusive property. We are bought with a price; we are not our own, but God's. (2) They were all well fed; no musty hay; they ate Pharaoh's corn. Our souls must be fed on the unadulterated Word of God. (3) They went well—no backing or jibbing. They were under perfect control. How often we don't want to leave our own cribs, or to go where the Spirit wills. (4) They were never bargained for; not put to any other than royal uses; never employed in drawing dung carts. Let us be like the horses in Pharaoh's chariots, cantering easily and grace-fully along. Some Christians are at all meetings, overfed, never working it out, and always suffering from spiritual indigestion.

Mr. Thwaites, in his opening words on "Communion," said the word meant common union, community of interest. The Lord understands his children's prattle. Eli thought Hannah was drunken, but God knew what she was saying, though only her lips moved. Thus there is communion with the Father. There is also communion with the Son in his life, death, resurrection, and anticipation of his return. With the Holy Spirit, who comforts us by bringing to our remembrance the things Christ spake on earth. And there is the communion of saints.

Lord Cavan, in the course of his address, based chiefly on 1 Cor. i., said Satan was never more active as an angel of light than now; therefore keep fast hold of the Word of God. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly. I asked an anxious one the other day: "Do you read your Bible?" "Yes; sometimes." Ah, we want an increased and continuous manifestation of God's mind, to keep us in peace and usefulness and joy. And let us have no fellowship with darkness. Not unequally yoked in anything. Let us walk worthy of Him in everything.

Mr. Thwaites, in introducing Mr. J. Harford Battersby, said that twenty-four years ago he was curate to his dear father at Keswick, and owed him more than he could tell. He rejoiced exceedingly that the sons were following in their sainted father's steps.

Mr. J. Harford Battersby said that communion came by looking unto Jesus. Seeing Him in his gentleness and works of mercy, we learn that God is love. We hear Jesus say, "For judgment I am come into the world," and we learn that God is light. Studying his attitude toward his Father we learn the attitude and relation of the true man to God. We read of men walking with God: I think it is God walking with us. As a child cannot keep pace with his father, but the Father accommodates himself to the child, so God condescends to us. He is not impatient if we do not make all the progress we might, but our desire to please Him pleases Him, and He bows down to help us. "Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." We like to say, with Jesus to the Father, "All thine are mine," but are we equally ready to say with Jesus, "All mine are thine," to keep nothing back from Him. Between intimate friends there are no concealments. What a blessed thought that God is waiting now to have fellowship with us.

Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, spoke of ourselves like prodigals returning as sinners, servants, beggars, with no thought of fellowship; but when the Father has given us the best robe, and the ring of sonship, and lavished all his love upon us, we think no more of being hired servants, but sons in fellowship with Him who rejoices over us. Will money, ornaments, friends, popularity, make up for fellowship with God? We are not only used as channels of blessing. God can use Cyrus, or Balaam, or even Satan; but we are not so much being used by Him, or doing service for Him, as being and doing in Him and He in us. Jesus is the Vine; we are the branches, the outcome of his life. We have fellowship with Him in the Word, in walk, and in work.

In the evening, Rev. Wimms Whittaker, of Bath, spoke of the responsibilities of the Church as a city set on a hill; as the light of the world; and as the salt of the earth. Let us each remember that we are part of that goodly city which cannot be hid, and keep ourselves from all that would degrade it through man's misconceptions, vagaries, or false imagery of the lovely Jesus. As lights, let us hold forth the Word of life. As salt, let our influence be that of grace and truth.

Rev. H. G. Thwaites, after defining the Church as the body of Christ, said the chief responsibility of the Church is to shine. The great thing is to get the pitcher broken; we only want just enough of the earthen vessel to hold the light; the less of the lantern the better; the choicest believers are they who put themselves into very little space.

On Thursday morning the addresses on "Conformity" were by Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Torquay, Mr. R. C. Morgan, and Rev. R. Graves Walker.

At the evening meeting Colonel Harrington, from India, said: The hope of Christ's return has been the star of my whole Christian life. It is a most practical subject. It is the nerve and sinew of every endeavour. To us this hope ought to be brighter than to those who have fallen asleep before us. First, Christ must be in you the hope of glory, then go forth believing that the kingdoms of this world are his. The things that are seen are to me less real than the things which God has promised to those who love Him.

Rev. H. C. Sturdy followed with a multum in parvo address; but our space obliges us here to close our report this week.

MR. THORNE AT CANTERBURY.

Canterbury has just been visited by a wave of spiritual blessing through a Gospel Mission held September 18 to 30 by Mr. Henry Thorne. There were three meetings daily. At first they were held in the Foresters' Hall, but this soon proved inadequate, so the theatre was taken for the evening meetings, and, in turn, became at times more than full.

Hundreds of young men attended the services, and were not only interested, but awed into solemn stillness, as Jesus was earnestly lifted up; many were led to bow penitently at his feet, and yield their hearts to Him. Numbers said they had found their Saviour.

The Mission had the sympathy and co-operation of Christians of different denominations. The noon prayer-meetings were felt to be times of refreshment and strength of God's own providing.

The Bible-readings in the afternoons were of a growing interest. The last one, when the subject of the Second Coming of our Lord was taken by special request, was a precious opportunity. The "Praise" meetings on the evening of the last day was a time to be remembered, but difficult to describe. The Spirit of the Lord was there, consequently there was much liberty, and it found expression in testimony, hymns of praise, and was a heart-melting and very happy season; the workers and converts remaining, subsequently, when a circle was formed and, with clasped hands together, sang "Shall we gather at the River?"

An outcome of the work is that a vigorous branch of the Y.M.C.A. has been formed, so that there is good ground for believing that the blessing already reaped may bear a large increase to the Master's glory.

"SMYRNA" & "CONSTANTINOPLE" RESTS.—These "Rests" are doing splendid work, not only amongst the sailors who visit these ports, but amongst the Greek population. The home work, that amongst our sailors, has been wonderfully blessed, many conversions having taken place, and many backsliders restored to union with Christ. In connection with the foreign work, a large number of Bibles, portions, and tracts have been given away, and thus the Gospel is being disseminated throughout the land. We are glad to note that "Come to Jesus," having been printed in Greek, has been found greatly useful and greatly blessed in that as in other languages. Everyone will rejoice that such a work is going forward in these lands.

TEMPERANCE REFORM in the U.S.A.

AN INTERVIEW WITH

MR. AXEL GUSTAFSON.

A man could not very well have examined 5000 volumes on any specific subject without feeling a tolerably deep interest in it. The author of The Foundation of Death, which we reviewed last week, has well-nigh exhausted the literature of the drink question, but he has by no means exhausted his concern with respect to the ravages of the deadly demon, alcohol. Our representative recently called on Mr. Gustafson, at his residence in West Kensington Park, and obtained from him some particulars as to the progress of temperance reform in America. With his gifted wife, Mr. Gustafson lately paid a three months' visit to the States, during which time he travelled up and down and across the land in quest of the latest facts and sentiments on this great drink problem. The effects of this industry were partially seen by our representative in the perfect litter of newspapers and clippings that covered every available foot of space in the literary "workshop" where the interview took place.

Mr. Gustafson is so possessed with his subject that he seemed at a loss to know just where to commence the conversation. Once he had begun it was difficult to stop him. First of all he launched out into the general proposition that in dealing with its masses of population, each country must choose between moral and material agencies. If materialism is not to become dominant, moral considerations must have sway, and these must be based on the principle of total abstinence for the individual, and total prohibition of the traffic for the State. King Alcohol must be dethroned. The only hope of averting the disastrous results of materialistic Socialism among the masses is by securing to them greater power of self-control, and this can never be done so long as they are under the mastery of alcoholic drinks. In Mr. Gustafson's view, indeed, the alcoholic habit is the root of all evil; and where other evil habits enslave a man, they are connected with, and, as a rule, spring from this, either directly or by hereditary taint. He asserts that because of the wide-spread demoralisation caused by the alcoholic habit, it is impossible to know what man was intended to be, or might by this time have become. Descending to details with respect to the state of the question in the New World, Mr. Gustafson said:—

The drink traffic in the United States is a foreign institution. The early settlers had little time to concern themselves about the evil. As early, however, as 1696, Virginia passed prohibitory laws for the whole province, but the difficulties of government, connected with the estrangement from England, made the law practically inoperative. The first Continental Assembly at Philadelphia, in 1774, recommended the several State legislatures to take immediate and effective measures for stopping the evils of the traffic, but this also resulted in little, owing to the turmoil of the time. In that year a famous Quaker, Antony Benezet, published at Philadelphia the first pamphlet ever written advocating total abstinence; it was entitled: "An account of the awful havoc made by the mistaken use as well as abuse of spirituous liquors." The movement that followed was of course greatly hampered by the numerous questions of internal administration, the relations with foreign powers, and so forth, so that no active aggressive national movement, worthy of the name, commenced until the second National Temperance Convention, at Saratoga, in 1836, which decided in favour of total abstinence, even to the extent of disapproving the use of fermented wine at the Lord's Supper. From that year, onwards, till 1857, the movement grew at a tremendous rate. The liquor dealers displayed no opposing organisation, except in one or two instances when they were signally defeated. In 1856 a work was published by Mr. Henry S. Clubb, showing that prohibition had been enacted by fifteen States and four Territories, and the principle had been endorsed by a majority of the population in several other States. Of white male adults in all the States there was a certain majority of 321,421. These tremendous results sprang out of the adoption in Maine of the world-famed Maine Law, the passing and enforcement of which is chiefly due to the now venerable General Neal Dow. There can be little doubt that, but for the intervention of the Rebellion, long ere this the drink traffic would have been swept out of the United States. It is a singular fact to be observed that in no State where the prohibitory law has been repealed, was this done with the consent of the people.

The absorption of the people in the great Civil War set the liquor traffic free to organise itself, and it lost no time. Since 1862 the Brewers' Association, one of the wealthiest and most powerful in the world, has practically controlled liquor legislation in the United States. It is almost incredible how insolently the brewers have treated their servant, the Republican party; how abjectly this party has truckled to them; and with what awful results to the country at large. And yet this party, which has been in power from 1861 to 1884, was pledged from the very outset, that as soon as the questions involving union were settled, it should lend all its energies towards the extinction of the liquor traffic. In 1869 it had become fully apparent to the friends of temperance that the Republican party neither intended, nor had it the power, if it would, to fulfil its promise. Accordingly a National Prohibition party was formed. Its first nominating Convention was held in 1872, when James Black of Pennsylvania was nominated for President, and the first prohibition vote amounted to 5508. The second Convention, held in 1876, nominated General Clay Smith for President—prohibition vote, 9757. The third Convention, in 1880, nominated General Neal Dow—vote, 11,640. The fourth Convention, in 1884, nominated Governor St. John—vote, 151,070. I should not be surprised, judging from what I have seen in the United States, if in the next Presidential election, the balance of power were held by the Prohibition party. The growth of this party since 1884 has been phenomenal. Already there are more than two hundred papers exclusively devoted to the advocacy of Prohibition. Some of the best men in both the great parties in the United States have boldly come out in its favour —men who hitherto were devotedly attached to their own parties. Among these may be mentioned Hon. Charles Wolfe, of Pennsylvania, now nominated for Governor by that State. With respect to his nomination, The Philadelphia Times, one of the best papers in Pennsylvania, says:—"The man who underestimates the strength of the Prohibition Movement this year must be wilfully blind to clearly accomplished results. Mr. Wolfe will poll nearer 100,000 than 50,000; he may poll many more than the former figure, and his campaign will stamp uncertainty on one half or more of the Senatorial districts of the State. He is earnest in conviction and tireless in effort, and he will do more to popularise and crystallise Prohibition sentiment than any other score of men in Pennsylvania." The Lancaster Daily Inquirer, a Republican organ, says:—"Would-be philosophers may sneer and say that Prohibitionists are fanatics and cranks; and parties whose pecuniary interests they threaten, or whose privileges they seek to invade, may denounce their principles and question their honesty; but practical, hard-headed men of the world will not fail to see that they are growing stronger day by day, and that, if things continue as they are, men now living will witness the complete triumph of their doctrines and principles."

It seems that the capitalists of the United States are beginning to have faith in the Prohibition party. Mr. George W. Childs, whom I visited in Philadelphia, and who is deservedly one of the best known men in America, told me that he was in favour of it. Since then I have seen, through the press, that Mr. A. J. Drexel, the well-known millionnaire banker of New York, Philadelphia, and Paris, has come out for Prohibition, and has contributed ten thousand dollars to the campaign in Pennsylvania. A man of most exceptional character and respect within the Republican party, Hon. Thomas L. James, ex-Postmaster-General, in a recent interview expressed his sympathy with the Prohibitionists. So careful and cautious a paper as the Washington Star says:—"The Prohibitionist movement has in fact grown to such proportions that the politicians are at their wits' end."

It has often been asserted that Prohibition does not prohibit. The liquor organs do not appear to think so. Hear what some of them say. The South West, the liquor organ of Cincinnati (Ohio):—"We desire the liquor trade to be up and doing, and that immediately. Another election takes place next fall [this was written last February], and if herculean efforts are not put forth by the trade a sufficient number of bigots will be returned to the State legislature to again submit Prohibition to the people; this done, good-bye to personal liberty." Says the Bonfort's (N.Y.) Wine and Spirit Circular:—"Prohibition is becoming stronger every day, and at its present rate will control the Union in a few years. Organise for defence, liquor men, or you are undone." One more of these plaintive notes. The Champion of Freedom and Right, the national organ of the wine and spirit trades of the States, says:—"Arouse from your apathy; organise your local State protective associations; unite them in one powerful national association, and, instead of quietly awaiting the onslaught of your enemy, 'carry the war into Africa.' Fight for the protection of your business, for your wives, your children, your homes. The tidal wave of Prohibition is bursting a passage through every barrier, and will soon inundate the whole country, unless drastic measures are adopted to stop its fatal work of destruction."

Here is a remarkable statement from the liquor point of view; it is in the Cincinnati South West:—"The man who has carefully studied the signs of the times must be hopelessly blind to the situation if he fails to perceive in the near future the evidences of such a political deluge as we have not had in our country for thirty years. There is no absorbing issue before the country; there is no radical difference between Republican and Democratic methods and platforms, except the loaves and fishes. But everywhere looms up the black cloud of Prohibition, growing hourly blacker and wider, a terror and threat to both parties alike. In Iowa it has squatted, like the 'Old Man of the Sea,' on the neck of the Republican party. In Kansas it is the same. In Minnesota, Michigan, Indiana, Nebraska, and other Northern States it is rapidly becoming like the tail of the man's dog, which grew so large and strong it was able to wag the dog! In Georgia, where the Democratic party is as well grounded as the everlasting hills, when the death-hug comes between that party and Prohibition, as come it must, it looks as if the latter were able to take care of itself. The result in Georgia is a foreshadow of Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Maryland, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Prohibition—like the soul of John Brown—is marching on in the four Western States and Territories; in Oregon, Washington, and Dakota; and who shall guarantee for many years Colorado, Nevada, Montana, and even California?"

As a result of these cries and wails, we find that organisations such as "The Liquor-dealers' Protective Association" in Massachusetts are formed, in order to deliberately encourage law breaking in prohibitory States. It has raised a fund of 300,000 dollars, to defend the lawbreakers in the courts. The Sioux (Iowa) City Tribune some time ago declared that the temperance tomfoolery would be "knocked into a cocked hat." Such incendiary language was not long without its natural result. Outrages with dynamite and dagger have been common both in Iowa and Kansas. At Atchison (Kansas) an attempt was made, on August 15, to assassinate Mr. J. F. Tufts, Assistant District Attorney for Atchison County. He had then been recently appointed to that office, for the express purpose of prosecuting saloon-keepers under the Prohibitory law. He had secured a conviction a few days before the dastardly attempt to blow up his house. The Chairman of the Cook Co. (Ill.) Prohibition Committee received an anonymous letter calling for his resignation, "if he would have many more days to live." One of the active supporters of law and order in Pittsburg received a letter threatening him with death if he did not cease his efforts.

In the State of Iowa this revolt of the liquor-dealers has cost a most valuable life. The Sioux city papers of August 4 contained an account of the murder of Rev. George C. Haddock, Pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. He was one of the few in that city who dared to raise his voice against the saloon power, and for this he was shot dead in the street. Sioux city has a population of 20,000, and the action of the officials has been such as virtually to make liquor-selling as free as ever, notwithstanding the Prohibitory law of the State. Against this Mr. Haddock strongly and fearlessly protested, charging home on the authorities their responsibility. On the day of the murder, with another preacher, he had been out collecting evidence against the violators of the law, and, late in the evening, after parting with his companion, he was shot dead while crossing the street. How did the organs of the traffic speak of this infamous murder? The Champion says that through the rash zeal displayed by the deceased in the attempt to break up a business with which he was in no way concerned, he could only expect to make himself conspicuous by temerity. Another liquor paper makes a gross attack on Mr. Haddock's personal character, evidently in condonation of his murder. The Methodists of the State have expressed their feelings with respect to the crime, by offering a reward of 4000 dollars for the conviction of the assassin. This murder of Mr. Haddock will very likely do for the liquor traffic what the murder of Lovejoy, the Abolitionist, did for the slave traffic. "The shot that crimsoned Iowa's soil with Haddock's blood is ringing through the whole land, and the echo of it is, 'Death to the drink traffic.'"

In concluding his strikingly important remarks, Mr. Gustafon insisted on it that the only effective means of coping in our own land with this foe of the individual, the family, the community, and the nation, is by the formation of a party with the distinct object of abolishing the traffic. Never, he contended, was there an issue more national in its extent, and more general in its application; or one that required so solid, so careful, and so unified an organisation to meet it. Never was there an issue that demanded such singleness of purpose, such untiring devotion, and such constant watchfulness. If the friends of Temperance do not recognise and act upon this evident truth, woe be to England.

WINKLEIGH.—Miss North has been conducting a series of Gospel services in connection with the Bible Christians of the village. The meetings have been well attended, and characterised with much spiritual power.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST. — At the monthly workers' meeting at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, last Friday, Mr. Isaacs, the secretary, asked for more helpers, especially for the children's classes. A new room is about to be taken near by for them. For this £100 will be needed, and what is most necessary, a superintendent for the boys. Also literature of the British Workman and Sunday at Home type, to give the men for reading and distribution. Rev. Evan Hopkins gave an address on "Success in Service, and its Conditions."

CENTRAL VIGILANCE SOCIETY.—This Society, formerly known as the Central Viligance Committee, has now been at work over three years. The present report only refers to the first half of the present year. During this time the Society has been seeking to more fully utilise the aid of ladies in this work, and a Ladies' Central Committee was formed in April, with the Marchioness of Ailsa as president. The local committees are doing good work in London, but their number is insufficient to cope with the evil. In St. George's, Hanover-square, four convictions were obtained recently, and as a result twenty-three houses were closed through fear. The gentlemen who obtained the convictions claimed the £10 legally due to each of them as informers, and thus added £80 to the funds for continuing the work. The offices of the Society are at 15, York-buildings, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Letters to the Editor.

OUR GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.

SIR,—The same old, old plea that was vaunted upon the housetops, at the corners of the streets, and in the Council Chamber of the Nation, when I commenced the canal crusade long years ago, is now launched against me, and the simple and easy plans I propose for bringing the gipsy, van, and other travelling children under sanitation and education. "Difficulties" are again brought to the front. I unhesitatingly say, from my long experience with van and gipsy children, and the habits of the van dwellers, that there are no more "difficulties" attending legislation for gipsy and van children than with children living in canal boats.

The clause I inserted in the Canal Bill of 1883-4 was not struck out, as has been stated, because there were more real "difficulties" in the way of legislation for the gipsy and van children than for canal children; but it was owing chiefly to the flimsy pretext put forth that the Canal Bill dealt with children living in homes moving upon water, consequently the Bill, said the canal opposition, could not be made to include children living in homes moving about upon land.

The other shallow reason put forth by those who opposed the Canal Bill of 1884 was that the canal authorities and boat-owners did not like boatmen to be classed with van dwellers and gipsies in the same measure that was to improve the condition of both classes of children, and, as a consequence, the clause was thrown out bag and baggage, without either much discussion or consideration. It has been stated also that the unworkableness of my plans for the gipsy and van children was the reason why the Select Committee struck the clause out. Certainly no mention is made, or reason given, in the Select Committee's report on the Canal Boats Act (1877) Amendment Bill, for not including the gipsy and van children in the Canal Boats Act of 1884. The permanent officials have not said in the report that there would be greater difficulties in improving the condition of the gipsy and van children than children living in canal boats. Neither the Chairman of the Select Committee, Mr. W. E. Forster, nor any member of the committee, ever intimated to me that the clause was unworkable, nor that our legislators could do nothing to improve the condition of the gipsy and van children.

The legislation I propose is simply to extend the powers and principles of the Canal Boats Act of 1877 and 1884 to vans and shows used as dwellings. The difference between the two for the purposes of effecting the improvements I propose is this, one home moves upon water and the other upon land.

There will be no more "difficulty" in registering a van than a canal boat. All vans, like canal boats, pass through urban and rural sanitary districts, and as canal boats can be seen at locks and wharves by inspectors, so gipsy vans and waggons can be seen at fairs, feasts, and races.

As it has been with canal legislation, so it will be with legislation for gipsy and van children; the mountains of "difficulties" will become mole-hills when taken in hand.

Children living in canal boats and vans are stationary fully one third of the time. That is to say, in the summer time the canal boats are lying at wharves waiting for loading frequently for weeks together, and the children living in the cabins could be at school; and the van dwellers and gipsies are stationary, as a rule, for three or four months in the winter, and I unhesitatingly assert again and again that my plans for educating the canal, gipsy, and van children by means of the registration of the vans, and a free educational pass book, are as simple as they can possibly be, and with which plans the van dwellers agree. Throughout I have tried to make the plans easy, and without trespassing upon the liberty of travellers and gipsies more than in the case with house dwellers.

The shortest, sharpest, and simplest way would be to prohibit children of school age living in canal boats and vans, but the next best thing is to educate the poor children as I suggest. Of course I admit that the education I propose to be given to travelling children will not be the best in the world, but it will be a thousand times better than none at all, and the sooner we treat our canal, gipsy, and van children to some of the educational and sanitary blessings that other children are enjoying, the better it will be for us as a nation. We have thrust our travelling children into the cold sadly too long.—I am, very sincerely yours,

GEORGE SMITH, of Coalville.

BRITISH GUIANA.

SIR,—During the approaching Conference at Mildmay, would that some earnest child of God would plead the want for missionary effort in British Guiana. The natives are most gentle, and, I hear, teachable, but sunk in the lowest superstitions. Then, again, in the sugar plantations, what a field there is for devoted workers, not only among the labourers and coolies, but among the overseers; many of them young Englishmen, far away from their kind, and, alas! too many of them, living a life "without God," rarely attending even the scattered means of grace within their reach. How long shall they be left to say, "No man careth for my soul." May God put it into the hearts of some of his faithful people to do what in them lies to meet this great need, so deeply felt, though so inadequately expressed by

Yours faithfully, S. W. A.

THE MANHOOD OF CHRIST.

DEAR SIR,—I beg leave to apologise for a serious oversight in my letter which appeared in your last number. I there stated that in the New Version Heb. xii. 2 has the words "the faith," instead of "our faith," as they stand in the Authorised Version; but a friend has pointed out to me that the New Version also has "our faith."

My memory, perhaps, betrayed me, owing to my having referred to Alford, who translates, "the faith." Alford, however, fully admits that Christ's own faith is included in the expression; only he says that "the faith 'means' the faith which has been the subject of the preceding chapter." But the rendering, "faith," seems to be not only legitimate, but more simple and forcible; besides which, "the faith," in good English, means, not the quality which bears that name, but the doctrines to be believed by Christians, as in Jude 3.

I remain, yours truly, HORACE NOEL.

OBITUARY.

MRS. EASON.

ON Sept. 25, after a few days' illness, Mrs. Eason, wife of Mr. John Eason, of 16, Dalston-lane, passed away in her sixty-eighth year.

COUNCILLOR THOMAS DUNCAN

was among the victims of the recent calamity at Loch Fyne. A member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, he had been connected with the body worshipping at St. John's Church, Sauchiehall-street, Glasgow, from his boyhood. For some years he was superintendent of one of the Sunday-schools, and his genial presence will long be missed in Glasgow.

REV. J. E. PAYNE.

WE regret to announce the death from fever, at the age of fifty-one, of this devoted missionary. Born in 1835 at Avenbury, Herefordshire, he was ordained in August, 1860, and sailed for India the same year. Since that time he has lived and spent himself in India, with the exception of two visits he made to England. He was a fluent preacher in Bengalee, but he will be better remembered by his work in connection with the Tract Society. He was a member of the Calcutta Missionary Conference, and both the Decennial Conferences, reading Papers at Allahabad in 1872, and at Calcutta in 1882. He had the confidence of the natives, and leaves a distinct gap in the missionary circle.

REV. WILLIAM BINNIE, D.D.

In his sixty-third year this well-known servant of God passed away on the 22nd ultimo at Glasgow. He commenced his ministry at Stirling, in 1849, in connection with the Reformed Presbyterian Church. In 1862 he was elected to the Chair of Systematic Divinity, in the Theological Hall of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, where he had, in earlier days, pursued his studies. He received the degree of D.D. from Glasgow University in 1866, and in 1875 he was appointed Professor of Church History at Aberdeen Free Church College, which position he occupied until his death. He has written several books, which have attracted public attention. His wife died last year, but he leaves a family of three sons and four daughters.

SEVEN DIALS.—The eleventh annual report of the Tower-street Mission School shows that the attendance of children on Sunday evening has increased, being about 460; but in the afternoon has decreased. In connection with the school is a flourishing Band of Hope (200 members), a Sewing-class, Lending Library, Penny Bank, and Drum and Fife Band. In the summer 860 children were taken to Epping Forest, while, for their recreation and instruction, lectures, with dissolving views, were given during the winter months, at which an aggregate of 1500 children were present. We are glad to see that during the year ending March 31, the school have given to foreign missions £11 17s. 9d.

The Book World.

What Think Ye of Christ? 6d. Religious Tract Society of Scotland. The author has collected and arranged the leading facts recorded in Scripture concerning our Lord, giving the references for each statement, and tracing the LIFE from his first coming to the consummation of all things.

British and Colonial Temperance Congress, London, 1836. National Temperance League. This official report of the Congress in July makes a good-sized volume. The papers on Temperance in the Colonies condense and collect much information on this subject in an easily accessible manner.

The Herald of Mercy. Vol. for 1886. 1s. Morgan & Scott. The yearly volume is full of sound evangelical teaching, and the pages are brightened by a profusion of fine illustrations. It is a good volume for presentation in cases where it is desired to introduce the Gospel in a form acceptable to our rural and urban working population.

Exposition of the New Testament. By Matthew Henry. Vol. V. 4s. Jack & Co. This work is too well known as an exposition of the Scriptures to need commendation here. To the Bible student who does not possess it, this cheap edition is heartily recommended. The present volume embraces the Gospel of John, from chaps. ix. to xxi.

Two additional volumes of The Sunday Library for Young People come from Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton: "Frank Fielding, or Debts and Difficulties," by Agnes Veitch, is a capital story with a good moral—"Avoid debts and difficulties." All boys would do well to read the book. "Little Miss Matty; or, Our Youngest Passenger," by Mrs. George Cupples, is an interesting tale of the sea and shipwreck, and reads like a "sailor's yarn." (1s. 6d. each.)

General Gordon: Hero and Saint. By Annie Keeling. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. We have praise for everything in this book, except, perhaps, the title. Many boys and girls, reading of Gordon's outbursts of temper, and some of the things he was compelled to do as a soldier, will have their idea of a "Saint" somewhat shaken. Beyond this, the book appears to us to be the best that has yet appeared for size and price. It is written with much discrimination, and while the authoress confesses her indebtedness to many authorities, there is a pleasing originality in her language and treatment of the subject.

Israfel: Letters, Visions, and Poems. By Arthur Edward Waite. C. W. Allen. We have read this book twice, and are more mystified each time we read it. Perhaps the intention of the author will be better expressed in his own than another's words:—

> Thou mystic Voice, ring out through earth and sky;
> Proclaim the holy end!
> Bid man to self by self-devotion die,
> And so to life ascend.
> Cry out, O spirit of a lineage high,
> Strong human soul for man thy life expend,
> And so achieve Eternity!

This vapouring fits in spirit with the senseless quotation on evolution: "The worm that we crush beneath our feet may, in the course of ages, become a supreme Buddha." It is very possible, and may truly describe the origin of that Buddha who is worshipped in some drawing-rooms in the England of 1886!

R. T. S. Library, Nos. 9, 10, 11. Outlines of the Life of Christ. By Eustace R. Conder, M.A., D.D. Wonderful! All we can say is, Get it. Sunday-school teachers, parents, all who desire true help on this important subject, should possess themselves of this bijou volume. In a space of five inches by three "they get the results of the latest and best scholarship" on the history, harmony, contents and purpose of the four Gospels. The Crooked Sixpence. By G. E. Sargent. A reprint of one of the simplest and most beautiful stories from the gifted pen of the late Mr. Sargent. Madagascar of To-day. By George Shaw. An admirable and very complete handbook, from a competent pen, to the existing condition, physical, material, political, and spiritual, of the Malagasy people; and specially valuable at the present juncture of their history. The Religious Tract Society is certainly doing grand work in giving these healthy little volumes to the people at the cost of a few pence. (3d. and 6d. each.)

Walks in Epping Forest. By Percy Lindley. 6d. 125, Fleet-street. This excellent Guide has reached a third edition. Some additional information respecting the forest, its area and management, are given, and also a chapter on the forest birds, by Mr. J. E. Harting. The book contains a map, is replete with illustrations of a superior class to those usually found in such publications.

Bound by Fetters; or, The Evils of Drink. By Emily Foster. 2s. 6d. J. Blackwood & Co. A stirring and ably-written temperance tale full of interest, although rather old-fashioned; for in these days of temperance reform such scenes as that depicted in the account of the christening of the first baby are very infrequent. The closing chapter is a pointed appeal to "moderate" drinkers, and the book throughout speaks strongly on the subject of moderate drinking.

Grace Montrose. By Thomas Greenwood. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. A strange tale, dealing mainly with religious subjects, mission work and workers, but in a way to which we must take exception. The association of sound doctrine with contemptible men is apt to make these doctrines appear contemptible to the unthoughtful reader. Such compositions cannot aid the cause of missions, and they give erroneous ideas to those who are not acquainted with their working.

Christ's Coming Kingdom; or, The Lord's Reign on Earth. By Henry Varley. 5s. Whiting & Co. It is refreshing, in an age of feeble utterances about fundamental truths, to meet with a writer so fearless and outspoken as Mr. Varley. He has the courage of his convictions, and shows it in this valuable volume. He deals ably with a momentous theme. He knows his Bible well, and makes it throw helpful light on our Lord's coming. His words are a trumpet-call to Christians to keep their lamps burning and their armour bright.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

The following publications of the Sunday School Union will be gladly welcomed by all young people. The Horses of the Sun, by James Crowther (3s. 6d.), is a book full of information of a very wide range, presented in such a fascinating form as to make the young reader crave for more. Good engravings, clear prints, and ornamental binding will attract many readers who, will find the book well worth careful study. Lady Bird's Sea Party, by James Crowther (1s. 6d.). Truly this author knows how to instruct and amuse at the same time. This charming little book is full of graceful imaginings and scientific facts, both leading up to Divine truths. Wakefordbridge, by Benjamin Clarke (2s. 6d.), is a story of Christian service which we hope will stir many hearts with a desire to work for the Master, and to be made wise to win souls. The King's Army, by Annie Gray (2s. 6d.), is a capital story of the earnest struggles, the dangers and difficulties, and the final success and reward of some who enlisted while very young into the army of the Great King. Gideon Hoole's Secret, by William J. Lacey (2s.), is a good book to put into into the hand of any lad starting in life. The story is well told, and the principles inculcated are thoroughly sound. The way of transgressors is proved to be hard, and the ways of wisdom shown in their true light. The Heroine of Brookleigh, by Edith C. Henyon (2s.), is a well-written story, showing that true greatness can only be attained by goodness, and that all intellectual gifts are only of value when dedicated to the service of God. Villegagnon, by W. H. G. Kingston (2s. 6d.), is a tale of the Huguenot Persecution. It is well to remember the heroic struggles and patient endurance of those whose sufferings procured our religious freedom, and doubtless this book will stir many young hearts with sacred fire. Bertha Pemberthy, by Horace G. Groser (1s.), is rather a romantic and unlikely story, but evidently written with a good purpose. Rob's Broken Leg, by Mrs. W. Ford Bennett (9d.), shows how all things, even the breaking of a leg, may be overruled for good. Rob found friends in a hospital, and we are sure he will make many friends among the readers of his simple and touching tale. The Royal Road, by Florence Burch (9d.), is a story for girls, nor can any girl read it, we think, without being the better for it. It teaches the valuable lesson that the small homely, duties of life are really the means of bringing us daily nearer God. Christian Discipleship, by Mrs. Dyson (1s.), contains short chapters on important subjects connected with the life of a believer, intended for the help and instruction of young Christians. Written in a clear and interesting style, it will, we doubt not, be very useful.

Cassell & Co.'s Magazines.

Amongst Kentish suburbs described in Greater London (7d.), are Beckenham, Farnborough, Wickham, and Addington, with which are associated the names of Miss Catherine Marsh, Darwin, Anne Boleyn, and Archbishop Tait. Very appreciative comment is made upon the Christian work of the first-named lady amongst navvies and other labourers. It is gratifying to have some lasting records and illustrations of our erstwhile lovely suburbs, some of the most beautiful of which are being over-run by the invasion of bricks and mortar at so lamentable a rate. The Family Physician (6d.) gives some useful prescriptions for ordinary household necessities. Rev. J. A. Wylie's History of Protestantism is now completed—a timely issue at this time of subtle advance of Popish pretensions in whatever guise. It is well that the people should be thoroughly acquainted with the treatment which Rome bestowed upon those in past generations who ventured to differ from her. In this Mr. Wylie has done signal service. We should welcome a cheaply produced résumé of the whole volume.

Too Good to be True. 1d. By Mrs. W. E. Legg. J. E. Hawkins. The authoress uses an incident in her own life to emphasise the truth that salvation is free. A good tract for distribution among women.

Amongst Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's list of forthcoming publications we notice: Modern Hinduism, by W. J. Wilkins, of the London Missionary Society; The Bible and the Age, by Cuthbert Collingwood, M.A.

From the Pithead to the Mission Field. 2d. A. Stevenson, Edinburgh. A brief sketch of the life of the late Dr. Alex. Thomson. The difficulties he encountered and overcame in his preparation for the life of a medical missionary may well inspire other young men to give themselves to Christ for work in the foreign field.

All Joy and Peace in Believing. Partridge & Co. 4d. per dozen. This is a Gospel book of sixteen pages, being quotations, by request, from a large edition with the same title which has had a circulation of about 80,000. We consider this smaller edition likely to be most useful, and wish it a wide circulation. Those who circulate Gospel tracts may use it with advantage.

We have received a sermon by Mr. Wm. Birch, Jun., entitled, "What God Desires us to Believe." 1d. Brook & Chrystal, Manchester. This discourse was delivered at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, where, for a long period, Mr. Birch has been preaching with acceptance to a large congregation of working people on Sunday evenings. The sermons are printed weekly, but hitherto have only had a local sale.

From Drummond's Tract Depôt we have received some new series of tracts. The Blue Jacket Series (6d. per dozen), by Miss Agnes E. Weston, are well adapted for distribution amongst seafarers. Incidents connected with a sailor's life, told in their own phraseology, are then applied to spiritual things. They should prove acceptable to seamen. They are in the booklet form, neatly printed in black and red, with an illustrated title page. Jesus is All. Two packets, 6d. each. These series are similar in style to the "Blue Jacket" series, but are not illustrated. They consist of extracts from Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, and as the title indicates, directly refer to our Lord.

Present Day Tracts. The Religious Tract Society has issued two more of this now well-known series (4d. each). The Resurrection of Jesus Christ. By Rev. R. McCheyne Edgar. The author takes the fact of the Resurrection as proved. He then shows how harmoniously the Resurrection blends with the history of the times, and proceeds to point out the vastness of the issues which depend upon this fact from a doctrinal, moral, and spiritual point of view. Buddhism: A Comparison and a Contrast. By Rev. H. R. Reynolds, D.D. Here we have a comparison between the fundamental doctrine of Buddhism and Christianity, showing their similiarity in some points, but bringing out strongly the hopeless nature of the Buddhistic belief. These tracts should be largely circulated amongst thinking workmen. They will counteract many of the insidious theories that are now abroad.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

CHINA.

THE first Young Men's Christian Association in China was recently established in Pekin, and a few days later another was started at Shanghai.

BOHEMIA.

Y.M.C.A.'s having, after some disputation, been legalised here, the first Society is being established at Prague. A Committee of fifteen is elected, and this Association will start branches at any place in Bohemia where there are ten members.

HAMMERSMITH.

The committee of this branch are anxious to meet with a Christian man and his wife, to whom rent, gas and coals, with some small salary, would be sufficient remuneration for services as secretary, &c. Application should be made to the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Wycombe House, Hammersmith, W.

EXETER HALL.

The forty-first report has just been issued. It gives particulars of the work at Exeter Hall for the past year, but its chief value to the public and members of other associations will be for the List of Associations throughout the world. The number of these is given as 3215 at the end of May, of which number 548 are in the British Isles. The inaugural meeting for the winter session will be held this (Thursday) evening.

ALDERSGATE-STREET.

The winter session of this branch was formally opened on Monday week by a social assembly of a most interesting kind. The rooms have recently been re-decorated and beautified, so much so that some of the oldest friends of the institution said they scarcely knew the place. A great throng of young men filled the rooms at tea time, and afterwards the lecture-hall, when Mr. Hugh Matheson presided. Prizes were given to those who excelled in the numerous classes last winter, and Mr. Burn, the secretary, announced an attractive programme for the current session. Stirring addresses were given by the Chairman, Rev. G. Wainwright (of Manchester), Mr. George Williams, Mr. Farwell (of Chicago), and Mr. Calder (of New Zealand); several of the speakers made touching references to the late Mr. Morley, who presided at the similar meeting last year.

LOWESTOFT.

The new Y.M.C.A. rooms at this pleasant watering-place were opened on September 30. Meetings were held at 11.30 and 3.30, specially for Christian workers. In the morning, Canon Garratt took the chair. Delegates were present from Norwich, Ipswich, Cambridge, Peterborough, Framsden, and London; and an excellent Paper was read by Mr. Ormerod, secretary Norwich Y.M.C.A., on "Difficulties, and how to meet them." An interesting discussion took place, which was continued at the afternoon meeting with much spirit. The Vicar presided at the public meeting at 8, being well supported by ministers and laymen of several denominations. The hall was about three parts full, a large contingent of Scotch fishermen being present. After the opening hymn and prayer, a satisfactory report and balance sheet were read. After a few words from the Chairman, addresses were given by Rev. A. J. Begbie, Mr. Hughman, Rev. A. Driver, Congregational minister, and Rev. H. Kingdom, Vicar of Christ Church, all urging in different ways that the salvation and sanctification of young men is the object of Y.M.C.A.'s. Credit is due to the new secretary, Mr. T. Boot, for the excellent arrangements.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.—Last week completed the eighteenth year that these evangelistic and undenominational services have been held. The anniversary services were held on Sunday. In the afternoon Dr. Thain Davidson addressed a very large congregation upon "The Name that is above every Name;" and in the evening Mr. Elvin, from Mr. Spurgeon's Evangelistic Association, conducted the service.

HEXHAM.—Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, Secretary of the Monthly Tract Society, has greatly interested us here with his account of the good accomplished by the Society. Mr. Mackenzie preached in the Wesleyan Chapel on Sunday, September 26, and addressed the Sabbath-school in the afternoon. His bright, genial, Christian spirit and evident adaptability for evangelistic work cannot fail to be a blessing to any place he visits. G. B.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Temperance Monitor is the title of a new weekly paper published at Bangalore.

MRS. LUCAS has been conducting a successful Temperance mission at Sunderland.

THE Church of Ireland Temperance Society reports 682 branches and 87,000 members.

A BILL is promised for next session to close public-houses on the day of Parliamentary elections.

A POSTHUMOUS WORK by Mr. W. Hoyle, edited by Dr. F. R. Lees, is expected shortly to be published.

THE Women's Christian Temperance Unions of America will hold their annual Convention at Minneapolis, from October 22 to 26.

THE Duke of Westminster has accepted the office of President of the London Temperance Hospital, in succession to the late Mr. S. Morley.

MR. AND MISS SCHREINER are doing good temperance work in South Africa. Mr. Schreiner has induced several hundreds in the Transvaal to sign the pledge.

ONE of the regulations of a new Zulu Church is that "no member shall be permitted to drink the white man's grog or native beer, nor touch it with his lips."

THE Women's Temperance Association, Belfast, has petitioned Parliament against Mr. Sexton's proposal to permit publicans to become High Sheriffs in Ireland.

The Newcastle Daily Chronicle has had a large correspondence on female intemperance, the majority of the cases being traced to "the doctor's orders" at a time of illness.

DR. E. M. COSGRAVE, 24, Gardiner's-place, Dublin, is preparing a sketch of the early history of the temperance movement in Ireland, and will be glad of any information on the subject.

A WRITER in The Brewers' Guardian has made a puerile attempt to prove that "one of the varieties of leaven was the beer of the Hebrews." It is pointed out that "beer" was unknown till 1524.

THE Temperance Committee of the Newfoundland Methodists in their report to Conference this year recommend that the third Sabbath in December be observed as the day for preaching a special temperance sermon.

MRS. LEAVITT writes from Japan giving particulars of branches of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which have been formed in New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria, Tasmania, and South Australia. She proposes to visit China before coming to England.

THE president and committee of the National Temperance League invited the members of the Sanitary Congress to breakfast on the 23rd ult., on the occasion of the latter body's meeting at York. About one hundred and twenty accepted the invitation. Rev. Canon Fleming and Mr. A. Pease, J.P., addressed the company.

The Weekly Witness (N.Y.) says:—"We believe that the liquor-traffic is the chief source of crime, of poverty, and of demoralisation in politics, and that its toleration and legalisation is a disgrace to our Government. We therefore maintain that the first political duty of all Christians is to vote and work for the utter annihilation of this desolating and demoralising business."

MISSION AT NOTTINGHAM.—Mr. E. P. Telford is commencing a year's mission at the Albert and New Assembly Halls, under the auspices of a joint committee. The Albert Hall will hold 2500 people, and the Sunday meeting will be held in this building, while every other evening the meeting will be held in the New Assembly Hall, which accommodates 1000 persons. Mr. Telford has been engaged in mission work for some years. A sketch of his life, with portrait, appeared in The Christian Herald of last week.

EAST-END DISTRESS.—DEAR SIR,—The winter is before us, and the need for help will, we fear, be as urgent as last winter. Already there is an eager longing to know whether the soup will be again forthcoming. My daughter and I will be most grateful to any of your readers who are kindly disposed to entrust us with their gifts, from a shilling upwards, to be distributed on the same lines as before; of this further details can be given to any who desire it. A post-card enclosed by those who wish for an acknowledgment will much oblige, your obedient servant,

(LADY) BEAUJOLOIS DENT.

20, Thurloe-square, London, S.W.

Haslam, from October 9 to 19.——For blessing on the Sunday evangelistic services in the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, commencing October 10, conducted by Capt. Dawson.——For an outpouring of the Divine Spirit in connection with a fortnight's evangelistic services in the Presbyterian Church, Bristol, beginning on October 17.

FOREIGN and CONTINENTAL NOTES.

BREMEN.—The German Sunday-school will hold a Convention here from November 2 to 4. Several well-known pastors are expected to take part in it.

GERMANY.—Various police regulations in Prussia forbid laymen from giving an address at a grave, and these regulations are sometimes applied with Draconic severity. Mr. Jacob Strœssler, a German Methodist pastor, was in August last sent to prison for eight days for having held a religious service with an unauthorised sect in the principality of Reuss-Greitz. An additional aggravation of the crime consisted in his not being a native of the principality "which is about as large as a pocket-handkerchief."—L'Evangéliste.

GERMAN MISSIONS.—Germany takes no small part in the missionary work of the world. There are twelve German Societies labouring in India, China, Africa, the East Indies, Australia, and Palestine. They are represented by 517 missionaries, at 342 stations, are employing 2560 native agents, and have in charge 193,975 native Christians. Of these 72,000 are communicants, while 40,643 children are taught in their 790 schools. The total contributions of these societies last year were £255,360.—Illustrated Missionary News.

POPISH PERSECUTION.—Some months ago the Ultramontanes of Renschied, in one of the Rhenish provinces, attacked through the Press the Protestant pastors of the place. One of these pastors, Mr. F. Thummel, thought himself entitled to reply in a local journal, by an article in which he strongly criticised the Roman doctrine of transubstantiation. Thereupon the Public Minister summoned Pastor Thummel and the editor of the journal before the tribunal at Elberfeld. On August 11 last this Court condemned the pastor to three weeks' imprisonment, and the editor to one, for outraging the institutions of the Catholic Church.—Le Chrétien Belge.

JEWS IN FRANCE.—Le Reveil d'Israel, a new monthly journal, whose object is to interest Christians in the present and future state of the Jewish people, has been issued in Eure-et-Loire, France.

PIEDMONT.—A rare event in these valleys took place at the meeting of the Synod of the Vandois Church, when M. Louis Jalla was set apart for missionary work. After passing some months in the Mission House, Paris, and the same in Scotland, he has been called to the Zambesi to join Messrs. Coillard and Jeanmairet.—Journal Réligieux.

A DOMINICAN MONK has just been tried at Bordeaux for stealing at night, by the aid of false keys, 40,000 francs from the Order to which he belonged. In defending the thief, Father Lefevre said that if this had been done by a layman it would have been a crime, but having been done by a réligieux it was an insignificant action. The President silenced such casuistry. However, the jury acquitted the self-confessed burglar.—Témoin de la Vérité.

FRENCH PASTORS.—The "Schillinger Foundation" has been established to help any young men of Alsace or Lorraine who are willing to devote themselves to the service of the French churches. To any who wish to perfect themselves in French preaching, by a year's residence in Geneva or Paris, 600 francs has been promised; hitherto no one has come forward to accept it. The Geneva pastors have this year increased the sum offered to 750 francs.

FRENCH MISSIONS.—Although the interest in foreign missions has increased latterly, statistics show that out of 110 Reformed and Lutheran Consistories there are seven which give absolutely nothing to mission work; eight which give less than one centime (the tenth of a penny) per head per annum; twelve less than two centimes, &c. The largest sum averages about one franc per head per annum. An effort is being made to rouse the Protestant churches of France to greater effort in this work.—Journal des Missions Evangélique.

FRANCE.—M. Eugene Reveillaud, editor of Le Signal, who has evangelised in France, from north to south, and from east to west, has been speaking in Lausanne on "The Prospects of Evangelical Religion in France." He says, out of ten million French electors there are at least six million who acknowledge the moral and religious superiority of the reformed religion, and who passively desire its triumph. M. Reveillaud says "the progress is very real, and will certainly increase rapidly." The Lausanne Christians are about to undertake the evangelisation of Savoy.

OLD CATHOLICS AND THE BIBLE.—At the eighth Synod of the Old Catholics in Austria, it was resolved to request the British and Foreign Bible Society to supply the body with Bibles.

CRISCHONA MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.—The annual meeting was held in Bâle, in August, when 3,000 persons were present. Sixteen students were then leaving the Institute for labour in various places in the world: six for North America, two for Nebraska, two for North Germany, two for Baden, &c. M. Rappard, son-in-law of the late Bishop Gobat, is at the head of this Institution.

HAMBURG.—The Director of the Rauhe Haus at Hamburg intends to invite this autumn fifteen theological students for a visit of three weeks. During this time they will be initiated into the various Home Missions, in connection with the House, in and around Hamburg, and will take part in Gospel meetings.—Journal Réligieux.

CRIME IN HOLLAND.—About sixteen years ago Holland abolished capital punishment, and replaced it by imprisonment for life. Since that time the number of crimes against the person has diminished. The cell system was adopted, but the prisoners are visited by a special Committee, who counsel them and look after them at the expiration of their sentence. The good effects of this course are very apparent.

NATAL.—The City Fathers of Pietermaritzburg have shelved an application for the introduction of the Contagious Diseases Act which was made by some of the local physicians.

COLPORTEURAGE IN NATAL.—Mr. J. B. D. Young, a member of the Baptist Church of Pietermaritzburg, has commenced the work of an evangelist and colporteur among the scattered farmers and their families in the country districts, whose spiritual wants have been greatly neglected. He is accompanied by a Christian native, who will be able to preach the Gospel to the natives in their own tongue.

NEW ROUTES TO CENTRAL AFRICA.—Recent explorations in Central Africa have led to the discovery of two other rivers crossing the Continent from east to west, the Sankulu and the Ikata, those previously known being the Mobangi and Congo. Great have been the difficulties in reaching the interior by way of the Congo, owing to the rapids at Stanley Falls. The Sankulu forms a direct water-way for over ten degrees of longitude. In the region between these two newly-discovered rivers, the explorer, Lieut. Kund, found a people of very striking physique, such as one finds only in classes who have devoted their lives to mental work. This part of the country was very populous.

BELGIUM.—In some articles on "The Social Crisis and its Remedies," which have appeared in the Belgian daily papers, Professor E. de Laveleye calls attention to the urgent necesssty for a radical revision of the laws relating to the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors. He says the consumption of these liquors is increasing with great rapidity.

THE BELGIAN EVANGELICAL SOCIETY reports some very encouraging work. The Word of God is regularly preached in forty-nine places of worship, and in eighty houses or rooms more or less irregularly, besides open-air meetings and addresses at funerals. Several Roman Catholics and infidels have sought membership with a Church after having frequented, sometimes for months, the different Gospel meetings. Many have proved, by patient endurance of persecution and by change of life, the sincerity of their profession. The London Continental Evangelical Society bears the largest proportion of the expenses of this work.—Le Chrétien Belge.

THE ARMENIANS have for many years been the victims of Turkish annoyances; now, The Temps says, that part of the population under Russian domination is no better off. The Russian authorities have interfered in the nomination of the supreme head of their church, which has provoked strong indignation on the part of the Armenian clergy in Tiflis as well as in Constantinople. Their private schools have been closed in order to prevent the teaching of their national language. A recent ukase of the Czar extends the laws of conscription, from which the Mussulmans are free, to the Christian population of the Caucasus. The Armenians, foreseeing the danger of their young men being every year sent to the most distant parts of the Empire, refused to submit to this law, and proposed to organise a national militia, but this was not accepted; the Russian Government, however, is not likely to alter its course on account of the discontent of any of its peoples. The Czar seems resolved to tolerate only those who are of the same creed and language with the rest of the nation.

A JEWISH MISSIONARY in Russia writes:—A good piece of Gospel work has been wrought in the excellent new translation of the New Testament, by Salkinson, which has come out lately. The learned Jews read this Hebrew New Testament with great pleasure, and praise the beautiful Biblical language of this translation.

THE POPE has just taken the very important step of creating a new hierarchy of the East Indies. He has erected all the apostolic vicariates of India and Ceylon into ordinary episcopal sees, and raises to the dignity of archbishoprics the sees of Agra, Bombay, Verapoly, Calcutta, Madras, Pondicherry, and Colombo, reserving the designation of their provincial and suffragan sees for his own future decision. Rome never under-estimates the value of complete organisation.—Methodist Times.

BOHEMIANS IN CHICAGO.—In Chicago there is one solid neighbourhood of 30,000 Bohemians, and Rev. Edwin A. Adams, a graduate of Amherst and Andover, a cultivated man, and his accomplished wife and three daughters, have buried themselves in the very heart of the Bohemian population, thus isolating themselves from the refined and English-speaking people, foreign missionaries in the heart of a great city. Mr. Adams has spent some years in Bohemia, and is familiar with the language, and the Christian men of Chicago are intending to build for him a church with a great seating capacity for his Bohemian hearers.

MISSION TO THE AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.—One of the first acts of the first Federal Assembly in Australia, says The Christian Leader, was the resolution to plant a mission on behalf of the Aborigines in Northern Queensland. The Victoria Presbyterians have had a Mission in Gippsland for over a quarter of a century; and in South Australia a Presbyterian minister, Rev. J. Reed, devoted himself to the Aborigines until he lost his life on Lake Alexandrina. The effort now about to be inaugurated in North Queensland will have the advantage of the guidance of an experienced Moravian missionary, Mr. Hagenauer; and as the Government have resolved to set apart tracts of country for native settlements, it is to be hoped that the ultimate issue of the Mission will prove an enduring monument of the gratitude of the Presbyterian Church for federation.

"FAITHFUL AND TRUE."

A proof of God's faithfulness as a "covenant God," even to his backsliding children, may be found in the following facts which occurred to me some years ago. I was then a wanderer from Him and had sinned deeply against much light, but I was to prove that "if we are faithless, He abideth faithful; He cannot deny Himself."

Through no fault of my own, I was indebted to a hard creditor for £30; he pressed, and I had literally no power to satisfy his demands. I had no one whom I could ask to lend me the sum, though I knew that by strict self-denial I could repay it in six months. Ruin stared me in the face, when one morning I had a letter from an old friend whom I had not seen for some years. I opened it, and a cheque for £30 fell into my hands. She said that she had had it borne in upon her so strongly, that I was in immediate need of that sum, that she felt she must send it at once without any delay. She knew nothing of my pecuniary circumstances; so what could I do but see and own my loving Father's care for his child, though erring from the fold? S.

Nursery for Homeless Infants, Bristol.—This Institution, with many others, has suffered from want of funds, and one department of the work has had to be closed on this account. The Committee now wish to clear off the debt (£300) which exists on the building. Particulars may be obtained of Miss Marriott, Oldbury House, St. Michael's-hill, Bristol.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.—The cost of providing and maintaining the Mission smacks is very heavy, and it is desirable that the mortgage liabilities upon four out of the six vessels now in commission should be entirely cleared off before any additions are made to the Mission fleet. Mr. Holt-Skinner has offered £10, provided fifty similar sums are forthcoming; and a lady residing in Exeter £50, if nine donors of a like amount come forward before the end of October. Donations may be sent to the Director of the Mission, Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.—

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9.—I CHRON. XXII.

1.—This is the house of the Lord God.—This must be understood as meaning, "this is the site of the house of the Lord." The appearance of the angel, and the descent of the sacred fire—possibly, too, some more distinct intimation—gave certainty as to this.

2.—Strangers.—"I.e., aliens, the non-Israelite population of the land. From 2 Chron. ii. 17 we learn that David numbered these aliens, obviously with the design of employing them (as Solomon afterwards did, 2 Chron. ii. 18) in forced labours."—Sp. Com. These strangers were partly the descendants of the ancient Canaanites (2 Chron. viii. 7—10), and partly war captives.

5.—Solomon, my son, is young and tender.—An example of that beautiful consideration for youth in the weakness of its inexperience which the aged so often show. The house . . . for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical.—This is one of many similar expressions of that remarkable reverence for God—that deep sense of what was due to his holy name, which ever inspired David. Would that we, in the still nobler work entrusted to us of building the Church, the everlasting "habitation of God," were inspired by similar thoughts!

7—9.—Henry and Scott give the following pertinent explanation of verses 8—10:—"God intended Solomon as a type of Him who should build the Gospel temple, not by destroying men's lives, but by saving them (Luke ix. 56)." "David was a type of Christ in his conflicts, victories, and destruction of his obstinate enemies: Solomon represented the Saviour triumphant, glorified, giving peace and happiness to his willing subjects. In this character the Prince of Peace erects his spiritual temple. It more accorded with the nature of the Christian dispensation, as well as with the character of Jesus, that the temple should be built by a peaceable prince than by a successful warrior. Otherwise, in his wars, David did God's work." We do little more than expand the above when we observe that all that Jesus did for his Church while on earth may well be compared to the preparations made by David. Only when the victory had been won, and He, the glorified Prince of Peace, had "sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high," was his Church publicly and manifestly established upon earth as the temple of the Holy Ghost. Thus the entire history of the Church, from Pentecost to the millennial fulness, is analagous to the building of the Temple by Solomon.

9, 10.—"David gives Solomon the reason why he imposed this task upon him. (1) God designed him for it. Nothing is more powerful to engage us in any service for God, than to know that we are appointed thereunto. (2) He would have leisure and opportunity to do it: he would be a man of rest. Where God gives rest He expects work. (3) God had promised to establish his kingdom. Let him build up God's house, and God will build up his throne."—Henry and Scott.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 10.—I CHRON. XXIII.

13—32.—"David distributed the Levites to their respective posts, that every hand might be employed, and that every part of the work might be carefully done. Of all men an idle Levite makes the worst figure. Their work was fourfold. The greater number, 24,000, were to set forward the work of the house of the Lord, to attend the priests in killing the sacrifices (31), and to keep all the vessels of the Temple clean, and everything in its place, that the service might be performed with expedition and exactness. These served a thousand each week. 2. Others were officers and judges (4), but in the country. Of these there were six thousand in the several parts the kingdom that assisted in the administration of justice. 3. Others were porters to guard all the entrances of the Temple (5). 4. Others were singers and players upon instruments. This was a new office."—Henry and Scott. Though Levites assisted at sacrifices, they could not offer them by themselves. Priests only could do that. Observe the provision made for the service of praise. No less than 4000 were set aside for this, while, doubtless, the great mass of the Levites assisted them, according to their skill and opportunity. For instance, the porters or Temple guards (5) used to chant Ps. cxxxiv. in the course of their night watchings. If praise was so prominent a feature in the ancient Temple, should it not be even more so in the Church of Christ? And yet how many of us have yet to learn how to praise God aright!

Verse 13 is full of spiritual suggestion. The duties of the sons of Aaron are there summarised. (1) They were to burn incense before the Lord. This duty, which symbolises the offering of prayer and praise, stands first. (2) They were to minister unto Him. First came the personal intercourse of the worshipper with God, then service for Him. (3) Lastly, work done towards man, the work of blessing others in his name. We must first be right with God, and keep right with Him, too; then we are to do all our work for Him and before Him; lastly, from the high position of true worship and service, we are to serve our fellows, to bless them in God's name, and so become mediums of Divine help—true priests—between Him and our needy brethren. We have here a symbolical sketch of a perfect Christian life.

24.—Twenty years.—Till now a Levite was not free for full service till he was thirty, though he could begin to learn his duties as probationer at twenty-five (Num. viii. 24). David now lowered the standard of age to twenty.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11.—I CHRON. XXIV.

"This chapter gives us a more particular account of the distribution of the priests and Levites into their respective classes. The account of these establishments seems of little use to us; but when Ezra published it, it was of great use to direct affairs after the return from captivity. This distribution was made for the more regular discharge of their office. God was, and is, the God of order, and not of confusion, particularly in the things of his worship. When everyone has, knows, and keeps his place and work, the more there are the better. In the mystical Body, every member has its use, for the good of the whole (Rom. xii. 4, 5; 1 Cor. xii. 12). Among the twenty-four courses, the eighth is that of Abijah or Abia, which is mentioned Luke i. 5, as the course of Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist; by which it appears that the courses which David now settled, continued till the destruction of the second Temple by the Romans. The Jewish Church reaped the advantage of these arrangements for many ages. Let us with gratitude commemorate those eminent reformers in the Christian Church, from whose zealous exertions in the past we derive most solid benefits."—Henry and Scott.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12.—I CHRON. XXV.

5.—Heman, the King's seer, &c.—"Asaph has the title of 'the seer' in 2 Chron. xxix. 30, and Jeduthan the title of 'the King's seer' in 2 Chron. xxxv. 15, so that it is not intended here to distinguish Heman above his brethren. All three would seem to have been regarded as possessing the prophetical gift."—Sp. Com.

7.—With their brethren.—"I.e., 'with others of the tribe of Levi.' Each son of Asaph, Jeduthan, and Heman was at the head of a band of twelve skilled musicians, consisting partly of his own sons, partly of Levites belonging to other families (9—31). The twenty-four band-leaders, together with their bands, formed a body of 288 persons. Besides these we hear of there being above 3700 singers, who were probably divided, like the trained musicians, into twenty-four courses, which must have contained about 155 each (chap. xxiii. 5)."—Sp. Com. "David, having settled the courses of the Levites, puts those into order who were appointed singers and musicians. To prophesy, in this place (1, 3), seems to mean to praise God with great earnestness and devout affection, under the influences of the Holy Spirit; in exciting these affections poetry and music are employed. If the Spirit of God do not put life and fervour into our devotions, they will, however ordered, be a lifeless, worthless form. This is called a service, and the persons employed in it workmen (1), because, while that service is the greatest liberty and pleasure, it is our duty to make a business of it. In our present infirmity it will not be done as it should be done without labour and struggle."—Henry and Scott.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 13.—I CHRON. XXVI.

6, 7.—Mighty men of valour (6). Strong men (7).—Being a sort of Temple guard, the porters were soldiers. Great strength was also in request for the opening and shutting of the gates, which were so ponderous that, according to Josephus, twenty men were required to move them.

13.—They cast lots, &c.—To avoid dispute, probably. But may not the chief object have been that each band might henceforth occupy his station in the settled assurance that it was theirs by Divine appointment? To know that one is just in the place and doing the work chosen for one by the Lord Himself, is half the battle. Such knowledge may be ours, for He has a place for each, and, when we truly acknowledge Him in all our ways, He delights to lead us into our own appointed places, and to assure us that He does so.

15.—Asuppim.—Literally, 'the house of collections;' doubtless a treasure-house of some sort.

16.—Shallecheth.—"Literally, 'the gate of projection,' through which were 'thrown out' the sweepings of the Temple, the ashes, and the offal."—Sp. Com. "In this whole account the Temple is spoken of as if it were existing, when it was not as yet built. We must suppose that David formed the whole plan of the Temple, and fixed the stations and numbers of the porters, though it was left for Solomon to carry his instructions out."—Idem.

27.—Out of the spoils won in battle did they dedicate, &c.—The custom of dedicating a portion of the spoil to the Deity has prevailed among all nations. Surely the spirit of this custom, the giving of special thank-offerings for special deliverances, the offering to God according as He has blessed us, might well be more prevalent than it is among us! "When we look over our estates," says Henry and Scott, "let us consider, here are convenient things, rich things it may be, and fine things; but where are the dedicated things?"

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14.—I CHRON. XXVII.

"This enumeration is widely different from the preceding. In that, we have the orders and courses of the priests and the Levites in their ecclesiastical ministrations. In this, we have the account of that which related simply to the political state of the king and the kingdom."

At first sight this chapter promises to be of little interest to the general reader; but a closer inspection shows that it reveals a great deal of the organisation of David's government, and of the principles of promotion in his service. We have here four lists of chief officers: (1) The Military (2—15); (2) The Administrative (16—22); (3) The Civil (25—31); while (4) in verses 32—34 we have the names of those who formed a sort of Privy Council.

It is specially interesting to observe the law of promotion in each case. In one, but in one only, viz., the Administrative (16—22) did the hereditary principle hold sway. Here the chiefs, called "the princes of the tribes" (xxviii. 1) and the "rulers" (16), were the eldest lineal descendants of the patriarchs, the chieftains of the clans. It was most fitting that such men should have pre-eminence simply on the ground of their descent. But in all other departments merit was the rule. The Privy Councillors were chosen for their wisdom or faithfulness; the military chiefs, the commander of those twelve legions which, 24,000 strong, served the king each a month at a time, were all mighty men, leaders even among David's worthies. With regard to the third list, the Civil (25—30), so far as we can trace, ability was the rule of promotion. Who so fitted for the care of camels as an Ismaelite (30)? Or for the care of flocks as a Hagarite (31), a member of a shepherd tribe of Arabs?

SATURDAY, OCT. 15.—I CHRON. XXVIII.

In this and the following chapter we have an account of "David's farewell address, delivered in the presence of the assembled people and of Solomon. It was his last public appearance, and his last regal act."—Kitto.

"David opened to them God's gracious purposes concerning Solomon: 'I have chosen him to be my son.' Thus he declared the decree, that the Lord had said to Solomon, as a type of Christ, 'Thou art my son' (Ps. ii. 7), the son of my love; for he was called Jedidiah, because the Lord loved him, and Christ is his beloved son. Of him God said, as a figure of Him that was to come:—1. He shall build my house (6). Christ is both the Founder and the Foundation of the Gospel Temple. 2. I will establish his kingdom for ever. This must have its accomplishment in the kingdom of the Messiah (Isa. ix. 7; Luke i. 33)."—Henry and Scott.

8.—In the sight of all Israel the congregation of the Lord.—The appeal is to reverence for Israel as God's people. And in the audience of our God.—Here the appeal is to reverence for God Himself. The two together must have had peculiar weight with Solomon. Keep and seek.—So ignorant and unspiritual are we, that we shall not keep unless we seek. "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do," &c. (Josh. i. 8). Seek all the commandments.—To pick and choose between them, favouring some and declining others, presuming to decide which are important and which not—all this has in it the essence of disobedience. The "all" tests us.

11—21.—David gives Solomon a model of the Temple and its furniture. "He had this pattern by the Spirit (see Exod. xxvi. xxvii.). The Temple must be a sacred thing, and a type of Christ. There must be in it, not only convenience, but significance. It must not be left to man's art to contrive it, but must be framed by Divine institution. Christ the true Temple, the Church the Gospel Temple, and Heaven the everlasting Temple, are all framed according to the Divine counsels, and the plan ordained from the foundation of the world."—Henry and Scott.

ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.—"H. L. Hastings, of America, has done good service to the cause of Christ for many years; his writings are full of evangelical truth, and set forth with glowing earnestness. His periodical, 'THE CHRISTIAN SAFEGUARD,' is well worthy of the countenance and support of the Christian community of this country, as well as America. Its trumpet always gives a certain sound."

Solicitor—Francis Howse, Esq., 3, Abchurch-yard, E.C. Consulting Actuary—Ralph P. Hardy, Esq.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.
Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1835:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

SOUND-MINDEDNESS IN RELATION TO
Christian Life and Practice.
By Rev. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON, M.D.

Price One Penny; 1s. per dozen, post free.

Sound-mindedness does not lessen our enjoyment. Oh, no one knows the enjoyment of a holy life, just because no one has put it fully to the test. All the pains and griefs that come to us who try to follow Christ are from our slowness of heart, and unsteadfastness of mind, and shrinking from the path along which He beckons us. If we were to yield ourselves wholly to Him, we should be filled with all His fulness. The note of joy rings sharp and clear through all Paul's life, and yet his was a hard life; but in the midst of it he says: "Rejoice; and again I say, Rejoice." No happier man lived than the Apostle in his day; and the nearer we get to him in doing God's will, the nearer shall we get to the fulness of that joy that the unbelieving, unfaithful servants lack.

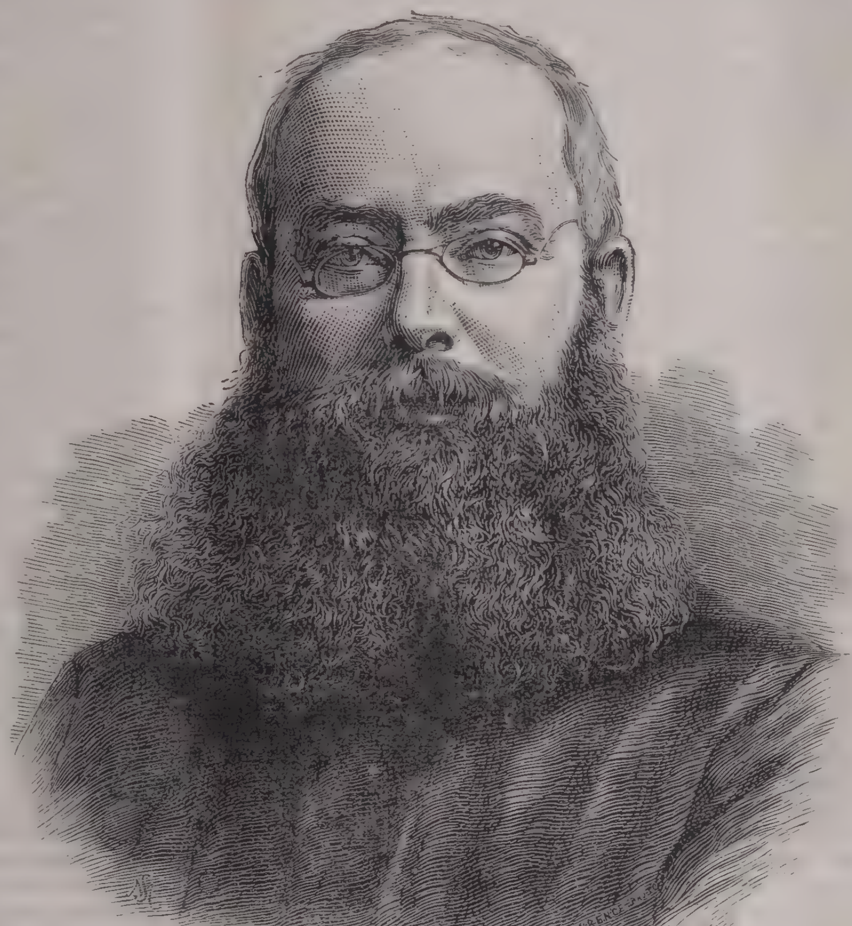
THE LATE DR. W. FLEMING STEVENSON.

THE Church of Christ has sustained a deep loss in the recent sudden death, at the age of fifty-three, of the pastor of Rathgar-road Presbyterian Church, Dublin. For the influence of Dr. WILLIAM FLEMING STEVENSON extended far beyond the limits of the congregation of which he had charge; and his name was honoured and loved in distant places by thousands who had never seen the beaming eyes and loving smile, so pleasantly familiar to the residents in the Irish Metropolis. For years back, in all enterprises involving spiritual effort, and having for their object the elevation of men and women, Dr. Stevenson had taken a foremost place; and, devoted though he was to the religious body with which he was immediately associated, there was no movement of benevolence or charity organised by Christians of other denominations which had not either his keenly practical help or his heartfelt sympathy.

Of wide and scholarly views, he was not of those who find in much learning an excuse for divergence from the truths of the Gospel. His sermons, therefore, although they were eminently pleasing to high intellectual tastes, had in them that element of simplicity which is inseparable from all truly successful preaching. A pulpit occupied by a man of varied knowledge and great experience, and whose anxiety it is to hide himself behind Jesus, will ever be attractive. The congregation at Rathgar, therefore, Sunday after Sunday, included many pilgrims, drawn to the suburban church by the preacher's name or fame. The sorrowing concourse that attended his funeral was equally representative: the mourners including ministers and people from many other congregations, not a few of them being from distant parts. Plenty of people who were by no means attached to Presbyterianism loved the man whose denominational feeling had never been permitted to take an undue place, or to interfere in the slightest degree with his Christian work. They recognised in him one of those who so learn the spirit of Christ as to be able and always ready to put sectarian feeling aside when souls are in need of the bread of heaven; so they crowded round the open grave, and wept with those who wept.



(From Photograph by Mr. W. Lawrence, Dublin.)

Born in Strabane, County Tyrone, in 1833, Mr. Fleming Stevenson in early youth resolved to enter the Christian ministry. After some years of study he attended the University of Edinburgh, and took his degree in Arts, his Alma Mater only a short time ago conferring upon him the well-merited honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. A course of theological reading in Edinburgh was followed by similar studies in Germany. It was to this period of his student life that he owed that acquaintance with German religious thought, and with the sacred poetry and noble literature of Germany, which afterwards became so valuable to him, both in his directly spiritual, and in his literary work. In 1856, when only twenty-three years of age, he was licensed to preach. As mission work was his chief desire, he found congenial employment in the Belfast Town Mission, a field in which he was greatly blessed of God, for three years. The occupation was profitable to his own soul as well as to the people with whom he came in contact. Belfast at that time was fortunate in having in the ranks of its ministry the well-known Dr. Morgan. Mr. Stevenson, like hundreds of others, almost unconsciously submitted to the far-reaching influence which that godly man possessed in so remarkable a degree, imbibing from him that keen regard for the simple truths of the Christian faith which never left him through all his subsequent career. To the Belfast Mission work there can be little doubt that Mr. Stevenson owed the development of that natural sympathy which afterwards made him so intense in regard to anything appertaining to home or foreign missions; and in it also was fostered that deep pity which tinged with such tender hues all that he wrote or spoke about the lowly and the suffering poor. Mr. Stevenson brought from the back streets and courts of the large and busy northern town a full knowledge of the needs of humanity, and a firm conviction that the mysteries of life, with its sorrows and poverty and its biting contrasts, can be explained only at the cross of Christ.

In 1860 he was drawn from Belfast and appointed minister to a newly-formed congregation assembling in a school-house in one of the southern suburbs of Dublin. Two years afterwards the new church, which stands in a striking position at the junction of four roads, was completed, the celebrated Dr. Norman Macleod preaching the opening sermons. Here Mr. Fleming Stevenson commenced his work of nearly a quarter of a century. The Rathgar Church soon became a centre of varied spiritual life. The congregation rapidly increased, until it became not only one of the largest, but one of the most potential in good works. At the head of all the movements connected with his own congregation, he was ever ready to give valuable help in those of others. His sermons showed signs of careful and prayerful preparation and thought. Visiting daily the sick and the poor, and apparently always occupied in his round of heavy duties, the young minister yet found time for literary work. Few who have read his first volume, "Praying and Working," will have forgotten its noble lessons of self-sacrifice and renunciation for Christ's sake, the simple pathos of many of its passages, and its manly Christianity. The book is as refreshing and invigorating as the wild, sweet odours of a pine forest, and is of those which can be read and re-read, each perusal revealing hidden beauties of robust thought and almost womanly tenderness. To the readers of the religious periodicals of the day, Mr. Stevenson's name soon became pleasantly familiar. There can be no doubt, judging from the charming freshness and suppressed power of his style that, if he had not been devoted to directly spiritual work, he would have taken a high place in literature. His pen, like his voice, was dedicated to his Master's service, and was blessed of God, for many are the readers who have arisen strengthened and stimulated from the reading of "Praying and Working," who sat down to it weary, after what seemed to be toil in profitless fields, with no signs of harvest.

In 1872, in addition to his manifold occupations, Mr. Stevenson compiled a volume of "Hymns for the Church and Home"—a noteworthy volume, precious to all hymnologists who have been privileged to meet with it. It contains not only many of those pieces which, as the editor said, "the common consent of Christians has approved," but also many less familiar to the Christian Church, and taken from sources far from generally accessible, and several of the editor's own fine translations. The section of Hymns for Children is peculiarly interesting, not only on account of the excellence of the selection, but because of the unconscious testimony it bears to the compiler's insight and simplicity of character.

Not until nine years had been spent in incessant pastoral and evangelistic work did Mr. Stevenson become officially connected with the foreign mission work of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. In 1871, he was requested to become the colleague of his old friend, Dr. Morgan, as Associate Convener, an invitation which, after due consideration, he complied with. Two years afterwards, Dr. Morgan entered into rest, and Mr. Stevenson was appointed Convener, a post which he filled at the cost of great personal labour and anxiety, but with blessing to the Church and with visible effect upon much of its mission work. He succeeded in first inspiring the Rathgar congregation with the missionary spirit; then throughout Ireland and part of Scotland he was enabled to kindle and develop a similar practical interest.

In 1877, as readers of Good Words may remember, Mr. Stevenson, on behalf of the General Assembly, visited the mission stations of America and Asia, his wife, a true helpmeet in the noblest sense of the word, accompanying him and continuing the pleasant task of lightening his labours; for, even upon that world-wide journey, his home work followed him. In the deeply interesting descriptive papers with reference to this missionary voyage, which Mr. Stevenson contributed to Good Words during 1879, there is ample evidence of his keen powers of observation and high literary ability.

The varied experiences of this studious visit to the distant mission fields served the Convener in good stead afterwards, and furnished him with many an apt illustration when he was pleading the missionary cause. The intense love of foreign mission work which burned within him was a passion of gradual growth, and its development was doubtless commensurate with that of his own spiritual life. The hymn-book which he compiled in 1872 contained thirty-five missionary hymns, but it may be assumed that, if he had edited another collection in 1880, the number would have been largely increased.

In 1881, Mr. Stevenson most acceptably filled the Moderator's chair of the Irish Presbyterian General Assembly. Shortly afterwards he was appointed to the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland. How he managed to crowd so many and such varied duties into each and every day, it is difficult to comprehend, except upon the line recently laid down by the Bishop of Ripon, that the minister of Christ has no right to have any spare time. It pains us to think that such valued service has come to a sudden stop.

He himself had a happy, childlike belief in the loving ministry of angels, and, as we write, we have before us these words of his, so inexpressibly touching in the light of his own death:—

> It must add to the solace of a Christian life, characteristically a life of pilgrimage and isolation, that it is watched by pure and gracious beings who bear their help to us at God's bidding, and in their own love; who come straight from the Father of Spirits, who work with unseen ministry, like the secret powers of nature, the dew, and the frost, and the fitful wind, but whom one moment's revelation might make visible. Christ, as He taught, might have hung the air with clouds of listening angels; we, as we journey, might as happily see the path lined with horses and chariots of fire. And there are troubled, baffled, lonely moments when to know that the angels are beside us is like a cup of water to a man spent with thirst.

He went on to say, "We shall see them as our fellow-servants some day when we cross the river;" as the joyous anticipation has been so richly fulfilled, and he has been welcomed to the ranks of those "who are before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple," may we not take to our hearts the comforting thought that another pure and gracious being is bearing help at God's bidding to worn out and fainting spirits here below?

After preaching on the Sabbath in Liverpool, Mr. Stevenson spent a day or two under the shadow of the Welsh mountains, and, having returned home, conducted the congregational prayer meeting on the Wednesday night. The following evening, Thursday, September 16, a few friends were privileged to spend with him, little thinking that it was their last earthly meeting. Shortly after the singing of Charlotte Elliott's lovely hymn—

Let me be with Thee where Thou art,
My Saviour, my eternal rest:
Then only will this longing heart
Be fully and for ever blest, and his voice had been lifted in family prayer, he was suddenly taken ill, and in half an hour his eyes had closed upon those whom he loved most and best on earth.

The gathering at his funeral was, as we have said, a representative one, including Canon Wynne, and others who had been his co-workers at the Dublin Conferences, the Archbishop of Dublin, and about seventy ministers of the Episcopal Church, with those of various other denominations, many members of Dublin and provincial congregations, and deputations from societies with which Dr. Stevenson had been closely associated. The coffin was hidden beneath the flowers sent from all parts of the island and from Scotland, fit emblems of the pure life, with its lingering perfume.

In the funeral address, Rev. Robert Ross paid a just tribute to the worth of the deceased:—

> To know him was to love him. All the elements which gained esteem and confidence were shown with increasing lustre in his character. He was truly a living disciple of Christ, as it was not difficult for those who knew Christ to understand, and that was proved by his power to influence men more by his spirituality than by his culture. . . . His life was marked by singular freedom from all trace of selfishness. He seemed oblivious of self, and worked solely for the spiritual good of man, and for the glory of God. Few men worked more than he to spread the Gospel of Christ amongst heathen nations. He realised the condition of millions who were long without God and without hope, and few had laboured as he had to bring them into the life and liberty of the children of God, and in making known to them the unsearchable riches of Christ. . . . His spirit was truly Catholic, and his heart was large enough to open to all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and who call on his name. . . . He knew life was short, and he tried to press into it as many and as good results as one man could. God in his good providence has taken him in the prime of life.

If he had not been ripe, he would not have been gathered, and the noble example he set of untiring devotion to the Master will stimulate many to imitate his life of love to humanity, in its every phase, of self-sacrificing service for Christ, and of full consecration to God.

"I have not time to be weary," he said quietly, only a little while ago, to a friend who had asked if he was not sometimes tired of such unceasing work. The words are a message to the many Christians who are too troubled about many things to spare any portion of their days to work for the good of others; and they would form a fitting epitaph for the grave of one whose every moment was utilised in labour for Jesus.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.—At the Convention held at Chautauqua, in August, it was decided that the next Convention should be held at Chicago, on June 1, 2, and 3, 1887. It is intended that the gathering shall be international and missionary in its spirit, having for its object the best methods of reaching the neglected.

SHOULD WOMEN PROPHESY?

On the afternoon of the first day of the Missionary Conference at Mildmay, last week, this question was very satisfactorily answered by Mr. C. H. Judd, of the China Inland Mission. He completely exploded, as it seems to us, the idea that has been so tenaciously held by many in the Churches for these centuries past, that the Bible forbids or discountenances the public ministry of qualified women.

"To the law and to the testimony" was his motto. First of all he quoted the well-known passage in Ps. lxviii. 11, the revised version of which runs thus: "The Lord giveth the word, and the women that publish the tidings are a great host." This rendering, continued Mr. Judd, gives the clear meaning of the original. Many of us cannot have failed to notice that God in his sovereign grace uses the instruments that He Himself prefers; not those that we should think best, but those which He thinks best.

In Acts i. 14, we read, "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren." Continuing the narrative we find in chap. ii. that when the day of Pentecost was fully come, the disciples "were all with one accord in one place . . . and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." The men and the women were there together, praying together, filled with the Holy Ghost together, speaking with tongues together, the Spirit giving them utterance together. The multitude began to complain, and said they were drunk—"filled with new wine." You will remember the passage in Ephesians, where it says, "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess; but be ye filled with the Spirit." We know how similar are the natural symptoms in both cases — gladness, joy, merriment, and supernatural power, completely subduing the man. No wonder the people thought they were drunk. But what did Peter say? He said it was not drunkenness. It was what the prophet Joel foretold, when he said, "It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy . . . and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy." There was no "women's meeting" there. You never read of a women's meeting in the New Testament; it is altogether a modern invention, so far as I know. Here at Pentecost they are all together, filled with the Holy Ghost.

Does the Word of God anywhere contradict this? Surely the Holy Ghost will never go back on his own sure prophetic word. Look further at Acts xxi. 9, where we read that the four daughters of Philip the Evangelist prophesied. Does Paul regard this disapprovingly? Instead of that, he stayed "many days" at the place where these virgins were prophesying. . Go on a little further to Paul's Epistles, in which some are inclined to imagine that the Apostle forbids the ministry of women. No such thing; it is the very reverse. In the Church at Corinth there had been some disorder, and the Apostle desires to set them right. The tenth and eleventh chapters of his Epistle are fully taken up with the regulations at the Lord's table. Right in the middle of these, what do we find? That the Apostle tells the women they are not to prophesy and pray in public? No; he tells them how they are to do it. "Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered dishonoureth his head; but every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoureth her head." The Apostle simply regulates the matter. If a woman wanted to pray or prophesy in her own chamber it mattered nothing how she was attired; but if one prophesies in public she must have her head covered, as a mark of subjection to her husband.

Look now at the two passages in Paul's Epistles that are generally supposed to go against the practice of women prophesying. He has told them how they are to pray or prophesy when at the Lord's Table. Will the Holy Ghost contradict Himself a few chapters further on? In 1 Cor. xiv. 34, he says, "Let the women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak." Consider this passage in its more literal translation. If I may give to this word "speak" (λαλεῖν) one of its meanings, the first one given by Liddell and Scott, it is to "chatter or talk;" hence they are not permitted to be talking in the Church, but to keep silence. If they would learn about any matters, let them ask their husbands at home, because it was a shameful thing for women to be talking or chattering in the churches. I have spoken with many persons from India, China, Syria, and other Eastern lands, and I have found the reasonableness of this injunction. In these countries, where women have no education, they go into the chapels, and sit in groups talking and chattering together, and sometimes asking questions of the most ridiculous kind. The Apostle says they must not do this. A lady who is here from Syria has seen it again and again. The command of the Apostle, therefore, has no reference at all to women's exercise of the gift of prophecy or of prayer; it simply deals with this inconvenient practice so common among the uneducated women in these Eastern lands.

Take another passage: "I will therefore that men pray everywhere . . . in like manner also that women adorn themselves . . . let the woman learn in quietness with all subjection; but I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but be in quietness." Let me remind you—probably you know it already—that the words here, "man" and "woman," are translated from the same Greek words that mean "husband" and "wife;" the only way of distinguishing them is by the context. If you turn to 1 Pet. iii. 1, you will find the same expression in the Greek translated husband and wife. "Likewise ye wives be in subjection to your own husbands." From a comparison of the two passages we will find that there is no difficulty about this matter. The last verse of the chapter in Timothy settles it to my mind completely. "She," that is, the wife, "shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and love and sanctification with sobriety." "They" refers not to the man and the woman indiscriminately, but to the husband and the wife. "She shall be saved in childbearing," that is God's promise to the wife as a wife; and the command is that she is not to usurp or domineer over her husband. The question of prophesying in the church is never raised at all, for "in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female" (Gal. iii. 28).

Take one more passage. We have referred to the prophecy in Joel, where there is the promise that the sons and the daughters alike should prophesy when the Holy Ghost should fall upon them. What is prophesying? Is it for the unconverted or for the believer? "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification and exhortation and comfort" (i Cor. xiv. 3). If God puts the Holy Ghost into a woman for prophecy, she is to edify the Church. Let us be very careful that we do not hinder that edification. There are thirty or forty passages of Scripture at least on this subject, and they are all on the same side. There are only two that are apparently against it, and, as we have seen, one of them, and the most important, refers to foolish or needless talking in the public assembly. Nowhere is a woman forbidden to pray or prophesy; but it is assumed that she will pray and prophesy both in the Church, and at the Lord's Table.

Do we find any examples of women prophesying in the Bible? We have the case of Miriam. The word prophesy does not necessarily mean to foretell. John the Baptist was the greatest of the prophets, but he did not mainly foretell. To prophesy simply means to speak the message given from God. Hannah went into the temple to pray. The only complaint against her was not that she prayed too loud, but that she did not pray aloud. When King Josiah was in trouble about his kingdom he sent to learn from one Huldah, a prophetess. The great Apollos, a man mighty in the Scriptures, yet knew little of a full Gospel. Whom did God use to teach him? Aquila and Priscilla. Paul speaks of certain women as his fellow-labourers in the kingdom of God. (See Phil. iv. 3; Rom. xvi. 3, 7.)

Has not the devil too long blinded our eyes so that we have for centuries bound up one of the most powerful arms of the Church of God? Peter was baptized by the Holy Ghost, but even after that God had to give him special revelation in order to open his eyes that the Gentiles might be brought in. It seems as if the Churches of God in this century need to have the scales taken from their eyes that they may see God wants women to prophesy in the power of the Holy Ghost. Shall we not break down the barriers that God has never set up, but that Satan has put in the way?

Whom do we find doing the greatest work among our soldiers and sailors? There is a remarkable work among seamen in China, and the experience of all who know it is, that five men are converted through the women for one converted through the men. The same may be said of the work among soldiers at Gibraltar, Malta, and elsewhere. The Holy Ghost is not bound down to one way of working. Let us take care that in this matter we are not quenching the Spirit of God. I know of one church in Scotland which shut out a dear sister. What is the consequence? God has pretty well shut out the blessing from that church ever since; I think there has been hardly a conversion since. God will not have his Holy Spirit quenched. "Quench not the Spirit. Despise not prophesyings." Let us pray God that He will clear this obstacle to the progress of his kingdom out of the way.

THE BIBLE TRIUMPHANT!

[Voltaire's house is now used by the Geneva Bible Society as a repository. The old premises of the British and Foreign Bible Society, in Earl-street, Blackfriars, stood where, in 1378, the Council forbade Wycliffe circulating portions of Holy Scriptures, and where he uttered the words, "The truth shall prevail." The Religious Tract Society's premises are where Bibles were publicly burned. A large hall, says Rev. Henry Loomis, was begun in Tokio by the opponents of Christianity, and it was proposed by a series of lectures to destroy the power of the Gospel in Japan. But before the building was completed the founders of the enterprise disagreed, and it passed into other hands. This was the place where Rev. Joseph Cook dealt such fatal blows to infidelity, and it was also used for a series of lectures by some of the ablest men in Japan in defence of Christianity.]—Sussex Daily News.

Great God! how wise and wonderful thy Word
To charm the world and chase all foes away:
By all the conquering sweetness of its sway,
And that strong tenderness its truths afford.

Long centuries of curse from sin's hot tongue,
And all deceits, intrigues, and scorn and lies—
The doubter's jests, and disbeliever's cries—
Have failed, Grand Book, to do thee lasting wrong.

False weapons forged to force the holy story
From that supreme command of righteousness,
Have strangely aided missions meant to bless,
And godless men promoted Heaven's glory.

Behold the hand of God destroy the wiles
And powers of dark design bad men conceive:
The scoffers build the house where saints believe,
And Bibles disinfect what sin defiles!

Great Father! here is faith's divine success
O'er disbelief's cold gospel of despair:
A fragrance, as of vineyards, on the air,
Where pestilence proclaimed its past distress.

The guide of olden Israel stands as sure
As mountains silvered with the dew of dawn:
Will witness nations die—new peoples born,
And conquer alien hearts and make them pure.

Enthral my soul! bless'd record of God's love,
Repeat eternally, salvation's plan,
How Truth prevails despite the schemes of man,
With earth obedient to a law above.

As flowers yield honey to the golden bee,
And perfumed meadows feed the musing kine,
Or globe of grape beget untainted wine,
So may thy Word, O God, yield sweets to me!

Mildmay Missionary Conference,

OCT. 5, 6, 7.

The ordinary meetings of this Conference, held last week, were preceded by much prayer, as is customary at Mildmay. A meeting on Monday evening was well attended. Earl Cavan read Ps. lxvii., and prayer was offered by Rev. D. B. Hankin and Mr. Broomhall. Mr. Herbert Tritton, who presided, read and briefly expounded Eph. iii.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson said a solemn suggestion was thrown out at a meeting held in the morning, that in no part of the world is there any special revival of the Christian religion going on at the present time. We associate with the latter part of the promise, "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty," what we are accustomed to call revivals of religion. If what was then stated be true it is a solemn fact, and no wonder there are no "floods upon the dry ground." During the last fifteen or twenty years, there has been Conference after Conference until the people of God in this land, and in Scotland, are better instructed than ever before about God's purposes and will concerning his work in the world. We need to press home upon Christian people, for the purpose of self-consecration, the thought of individual responsibility. We hear little or nothing of revivals in Scotland, or England, or Ireland. Why is it? There must be something radically wrong, contrary to the mind and will of God, in our method of going to work. Even Societies which have been established only fifteen or sixteen years, have got into traditional ways of working. What is wanted is that men should go forth, in the simplicity of the early ages, two by two. Instead of attempting, by great institions here and there, to try and convert the heathen peoples, we must go back to apostolic days, and revise our methods by the plan then adopted. Think of the guilty silence imposed on the laity by our churches, and to this hour acquiesced in by the laity, who go forth bearing the Christian name, indeed, though hardly one in a thousand ever dreams of speaking of Christ to the people about him. Think of the guilty silence imposed on our sisters, and of the guilt of our own Church in connection with God's ancient people. There has grown up in all churches a mighty spirit of traditionalism that nothing but a spiritual earthquake can overthrow. We need in all our churches to reconsider our ways, and throw away a great deal of rubbish before much progress can be made.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said: It is a fact, if we look at the accounts of missionary work from all parts of the world, whether from China or India, or European countries, we see nothing at all like the flood that took place in America in 1803. There was a wonderful flood at Pentecost, and afterwards there was flood upon flood. God is the God of floods, and it is as easy for Him to move a city or a province as two or three souls. Our first business is to humble ourselves before God, and then to strike home among the millions living without God in the world. Let us bear up before God the missionaries in India, China, and Africa, and in many a solitary place, where they cannot gather a company like this to cheer them. Let us not doubt that God will pour out a blessing not only upon ourselves, but upon those for whom we plead. Mr. Radcliffe concluded with earnest prayer, and was followed by several others.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5.

At the early prayer-meeting Mr. Mathieson made sympathetic reference to the death of Rev. Clarmont Skrine, of Wimbledon, on the previous morning. After partaking of a cup of tea he breathed a sigh, and then passed away to be for ever with the Lord.

The Chairman (Mr. Robert Burn) read a portion of 2 Cor. viii., and John xvii., pointing out that the Macedonian Church first gave themselves to the Lord, and then placed all their means at the service of the Apostle, yielding themselves to the Lord, spirit, soul, and body. In the course of a brief address, he said he once heard a missionary sermon preached from the words: "He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." The preacher went on to say: "If this is so, the world ought to know it." We who know it are stewards of this wonderful grace of God. The reason why there is little blessing at home is because we are not faithful to the trust committed to us. If there were a famine in any part of the world, efforts would at once be made on behalf of the starving people. And what a reflection it is upon the Church of God that they should be so indifferent in giving the bread of life to the millions who are perishing around us. We must not attempt to shift the burden to other shoulders; it is a question of individual responsibility.

JEWS AND MOHAMMEDANS.

The Earl of Cavan presided at the first meeting of the Conference. In his opening remarks, having read Ephesians i. 15, he said:—I am overwhelmed with the vastness of the subject before us. We need to be humbled in the dust at the thought of the shortcomings of the Church of Christ, and each one of us as a part of that Church. How thankful should we be that our loving Lord is ready to listen and to forgive as we pour out our hearts in contrition for our neglect. These meetings will be a great blessing if we really humble ourselves in confession before God that we have fallen so far short of what He required of us.

"TO THE JEW FIRST."

Rev. John Wilkinson said:—In the subject before us this morning, the Jews are in their rightful place in relation to the world. This is not a meeting for a detailed account of work amongst the Jewish people done by the various Societies, or for our encouragement in regard to what has been done, but rather to look on the other side, and see what has yet to be done. We want, as Christians, to understand God's way of doing things, to discover his mind and will. We should consider the relationship of the Jews to the world in the revealed purposes of God. Let us start with this statement, that universal blessing is guaranteed already in such passages as "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea," "All flesh shall see the salvation of God." God has guaranteed universal blessing. By what means? We have a most clear revelation on this subject. He elects one nation, and to the father of this nation, whom also He chooses, He gives a promise in varied terms. He formed them, and has preserved them to this day for the purpose of unfolding his love in the redemption of the world. In that beautiful sixty-seventh Psalm—the prayer of which there is no harm in Christians using; for, in proportion as they are blessed, will they be a blessing to others—the doctrine set forth is that the blessing of the nations shall follow upon the blessing of the Jews—"God shall bless us, and (then) all the nations of the earth shall fear Him." And they shall be blessed, wait they never so long. Never expect the ends of the earth to "fear Him" while the Jews remain unblessed. We are praying continually that "the glory of the Gentiles" may be "like a flowing stream;" but notice the immediately preceding context, for never shall we get that which represents blessing on a large and universal scale till God extends peace to Jerusalem "like a river." This is in the Book, and cannot be altered. We must bring all our machinery, powers, and effort into the line of God's revealed will and purpose.

Passing along the ages of prophecy, we come to the advent of our Divine Lord. How completely were his prophecies, doctrine, and practice on this same line. After his resurrection He tells his disciples to wait at Jerusalem "till power be given you from on high." They did wait; and how abundantly was his promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost fulfilled. They got three thousand souls under one sermon, and that by a converted Jew. What do we see in apostolic times? Wherever they went, they sought out the synagogue and preached therein, and even when their message was rejected, and they turned to the Gentiles, it was not from all Jews to all Gentiles; they only turned from blaspheming Jews to waiting Gentiles. All along the line of prophecy, of Christ's ministry and of apostolic work, the Jew was first.

Where are they now? In all lands, speaking the languages of all peoples, familiar with the customs of all nations. They believe three-fourths of our Bible. They are waiting for the Messiah; and if it had not been for the prejudices of the Gentiles, the conversion of the Jews might have gone on as it did in the times of the Apostles. For thirty-five years the conviction had been deepening in his mind that a secondary cause for the closing of this dispensation in judgment will be the culpable neglect of the Jews by the Gentiles. Christians would be held responsible for persecuting the Jews. Mr. Wilkinson concluded by reading an extract from a Jewish paper, giving statistics of a census of the Jews in the south-western province of Russia in 1885. Out of a total population of twenty-five and a half millions nearly three millions were Jews; and in the towns, while in four the Jewish population was 80 per cent. of the whole, the average population of Jews was from 20 to 40 per cent. He mentioned also that he and Mr. Mathieson had recently waited upon the Russian Ambassador with reference to the distribution of the Hebrew Testament amongst the Jews in Russia, the result of which, he hoped, would be that thousands of Jews in that land would be brought to Jesus Christ.

MOHAMMEDANS.

Rev. Mr. Bowman, from India, said:—The Church of Christ in all ages has been a struggling, striving, and finally, a triumphant Church; but at present she has lost very much this characteristic of struggling and striving for the extension of Christ's kingdom. The enemies of the Church of Christ are three without and three within; without are Jews, Roman Catholics, and Mohammedans; within, indifference, unbelief, infidelity. Working amongst the Mohammedans of North-western India, I may say their enthusiasm is worthy of a better cause. And anyone who would convert them must have a deep love and a great enthusiasm for Christ. Formerly, the talk was about Moses and Abraham, but now the great questions that occupy their minds all centre about Christ—how his blood could atone for the sins of mankind; how He could die on the cross and yet be the Son of God. In India, people are beginning to see that our religion is the true one, but we want more striving mixed with it. Do we realise sufficiently the position of Dr. Bruce, isolated in Persia, and other men similarly situated?

Having given an outline of Mohammedanism and its doctrines, the speaker showed how earnest Christian converts must be, giving as an illustration the story of one who, having turned from Mohammedanism to Christianity, was so persecuted that he had to give up his home. When, on a visit to his brother, he told of the miracles performed by Christ, he nearly lost his life through poison, his brother saying, "Now we shall see whether Christ can perform the miracles you told us of, and whether He has greater power than others."

Mr. Glenny, of the Kabyle Mission, said that when, five years ago, he started for North Africa in company with Mr. George Pearse, in all that district, amongst sixteen millions of Mohammedans, there was not a single missionary. Thirty or forty generations had gone down to darkness and death without hearing the glad tidings of salvation. Out of 173 millions of Mohammedans in the world there was this little group easily accessible to evangelists, within four or five days' journey of that very spot. The difficulties to be met with there were nothing to be compared to those which confronted them in India. Missionaries are gladly received into the homes of the people; who also gladly accept and read the Scriptures; and this is true, with very few exceptions, even in dark Morocco. Thousands of tracts have been distributed amongst the people, as well as the Gospel of St. John. Though they could not point to many converts, there is no reason to be discouraged, for there is the living God to trust in. As showing how great was their field, he further said, if they could have two women missionaries to every ten thousand of the native women, they would require one thousand sisters to go out; while three thousand missionaries would be required to give one to each ten thousand of the entire population. Then he insisted that for spiritual work they must have men and women who know their God and can do exploits.

WOMEN'S WORK.

This was the subject of conference in the afternoon. Mr. C. H. Judd presided, and gave a brief but weighty exposition of Scripture teaching as to the public ministry of women. Full notes of this important utterance will be found on a preceding page.

CHINA.

Miss Ricketts, of the Presbyterian Mission, China, repeated the oft-quoted last command of the Lord: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature . . . lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." So difficult did Christ deem the work, that He gave the promise of his continual presence. We are here to-day to ask how this command has been obeyed. The churches alas! have mostly delegated the work to societies and individuals, instead of making it their chief concern. So at this stage of the Christian era there are a thousand millions of heathen yet without the Gospel; while only some three millions have been converted to Christ. The annual contribution of the churches to missions is about one million pounds; while 124 millions are spent on intoxicants, 13 millions on tobacco and snuff, and 12 millions on amusements. Notwithstanding the depression of trade, there seems to be plenty of money for self-indulgence. The Lord is calling us as a nation to self-examination, and it may be to judgment, because of our failures in these matters. Our talk about consecration means nothing unless we carry our faith into action. Consecration is not merely singing hymns and being moved with fine feelings; it involves crucifixion of the world and the flesh, and daily self-denial. Two texts come to my mind: "There remaineth much land to be possessed," and "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." We must look on the whole round earth, and not on any little corner of it.

Think for a moment of China, with its social miseries and cruelties. No woman in South China would think of rearing more than two female children; all the others she will destroy. Those who survive are mutilated by the cruel custom of foot-binding. The unhappy children sometimes die under the agony of the pain. The parents do not scruple to use violence and cruelty in this torturing process. When of a marriageable age the girls are married by arrangement of their parents; they have no voice in the matter. They not infrequently drown themselves in order to escape this misery. When they grow old the poor women are neglected, and their wretchedness is extreme. They long for death. Any kindness shown to them by strangers overwhelms them with gratitude. If English women could experience for a little while the hopelessness of heathenism they would be more willing to leave their pleasant homes in order to carry the Gospel to these Chinese sisters sitting in such gross darkness.

Miss Ricketts spoke of the remarkable increase in Chinese missions in recent years. The circulation of the Scriptures in the vernacular tongue will do much to deepen and establish the spiritual life of the converts. The British and Foreign Bible Society have helped greatly by grants to Bible women. The Chinese, as a race, have splendid possibilities, and our English sisters would be well rewarded for going forth to China; there would be many to take up the work at home. The labours of Chinese missionaries in the past have been abundantly blessed. Since God has been faithful to us in all our work, let us be faithful to his command and to our glorious calling. God grant that we may continually feel the burden of the heathen upon us!

SYRIA.

Miss Poulton, from Syria, said that country, though small, must claim our deepest interest as the land that was consecrated by the feet of our Lord. Alas, it is now in great darkness! There are in it many followers of the false prophet. Others call themselves Christians, though they know not the name of Christ. If ever Mohammedans are to be reached it must be through the women. Above all things, Syria needs Christian mothers. American missions have been at work in the land for many years, and have planted schools. The English Church missions are also at work, and so is the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. Their schools are a great blessing. Here and there an individual labourer is at work. But the largest agency is the British Syrian Schools, which has a number of institutions, and sends out Bible women. The work is most encouraging. The people are intelligent, and freely send their children, who are very industrious and attentive. The children impart to those at home what has been taught during the day; thus the Gospel message is carried into places where the teacher cannot go. There is no caste feeling among the people; all ranks and nationalities come and sit together and learn the same lessons. There is a great readiness to listen to the teaching from "the Book," as it is called in the Arabic. Miss Poulton gave some interesting examples of receptiveness, from her own experience among the better class of Mohammedans. When the story of the Cross is told, the tears come to the eyes of the listeners. They gather their neighbours together to hear the good news of the Gospel. There are many Bible and Prayer Unions among them, and these bind the people together in the study of God's Word. Mrs. Mentor Mott, the head of the work, was very ill lately, but she has been raised up in answer to the prayers of many of these Syrian children. These children show many signs of the reality of the work among them. Sunday classes and week-day classes are held, and Gospel songs are in great favour. So great is the change in the lives of many, that their friends are constrained to believe in the truth of the Christian faith. The men are beginning to find out the advantages of the young women being trained in the schools. The girls marry young, and they take their Bibles with them into the households, where the husbands also learn to study it. There are many signs that the Gospel is permeating the people, and that Mohammedanism is being undermined. The difficulty is in openly confessing Christ, which is done at the risk of life. If some of the converts were brave enough to become martyrs for Jesus, probably there would be a removal of this restriction on the freedom of confessing Christ. The Mission, said Miss Poulton, needs several lady helpers to engage in the work of teaching the young.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Mrs. Osborn said the greatest hindrance to the Gospel in South Africa is strong drink. A law has lately been passed abolishing the excise —a most diabolical scheme for introducing free liquor, which will demoralise the natives in order to increase the gains of the liquor sellers. There is need of prayer for the removal of this great evil. Dr. Andrew Murray's Young Girls' Seminary at Mount Holyoke has been a great blessing in training lady missionaries and teachers. We want experienced workers from home to go out and stir up a missionary spirit, so as to get workers among the natives. Let Mr. Radcliffe and other friends go out, and apply the spiritual thermometer among the churches, and show them how to organise missionary conferences.

Mrs. Osborn's special work has been amongst the soldiers in Cape Town; this has reacted on missionary work among the heathen; as these men are converted they go to other lands, or return to civil life, where they spread the knowledge of the Gospel. At the Soldiers' Home there are meetings not only for the men, but for the women and children. There is also the Sailors' Rest at the Docks. Lady helpers are much needed, she said, to enable them to extend that work. Then there is a Y.W.C.A in Cape Town. A lady is greatly needed to take charge of the work in connection with it throughout the Colony. It is also desired to extend the work among the railway-men, and for that workers are needed, as well as for work among the police. If we want to see results a hundred-fold in the heathen field, said Mrs. Osborn, let us "give up" houses and lands for Christ. I know a happy English household with five Christian daughters. The father will not allow one of them to go to South Africa. How different was it with the great God, who gave his only begotten Son for the life of the world! Our labour is only for a little while, and we have the promise of the Master's presence, and his speedy appearing.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson prayed that lady workers might be raised up and thrust forth to these needy places of the earth, and specially to South Africa.

EUROPE.

Mrs. Gardner James represented the Y.W.C.A. with its European branches, and the International Association for the Protection of Young Women. Through the latter agency young women leaving England get safe homes and sympathisers wherever they go. At a recent Conference in Exeter Hall, nine Continental countries were represented. Mrs. James proceeded in some detail to report progress in the work among young women throughout Europe. Speaking of Sweden, she said there had recently been a great spiritual revival at Stockholm, the influence of which, through Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, has extended to Finland and to St. Petersburgh. The workers in Sweden have Bible-classes, prayer unions, and shelters for girls, that have been the means of great blessing. In Norway the International Association is at work, and a branch of the Y.W.C.A. is about to be organised. In Germany Miss Römmele is spreading Christian work among women in different parts of the country. The evangelistic labours of Dr. Baedeker and Dr. Ziemann have been much blessed in stirring up effort among young women. The workers require to be German. Miss Römmele wrote lately that she wished all the converted German young women in England were turned out of that country, and sent back to their own land. Miss Mudie writes of a good work going on among children in some country villages in France. The isolated members of the Union in France and Spain are much cheered and encouraged by the correspondence and literature. In Turkey there is a Ladies' Christian Association affiliated with the Y.W.C.A. In Germany a wonderful work is going on among cabmen.

CONTINENT OF EUROPE.

This was the theme of the Conference at the evening meeting, which was largely attended, and was presided over by Mr. Radcliffe.

FRANCE.

The first speaker was Mons. Saillens, of the McAll Mission, who pleaded on behalf of France. He began by referring to the spiritual destitution in the populous towns of that country as compared with English towns. There are at our very doors millions of people who are in ignorance of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He often wondered why so many English Christians pass by France and shirk their duty to their nearest neighbours. Was it because France is so near at hand; or because there is little romance about the work; or because the people are highly civilised, and are not savages; or do not wear a pigtail? Though France is highly civilised we do not need to go very far below the outward varnish to find that there are wild and savage hearts there as much as in any part of the world. Is France neglected because there is in the country a Protestant Church? People forget the great persecutions by which that Church has been kept low; and it takes some time to recover from such an ordeal. Do any imagine that the Roman Catholics of France do not need the Gospel so very much, since they are already half Christians? M. Saillens contended, on the contrary, that nothing is so poisonous as the truth corrupted; so it is most difficult for Roman Catholics to see through the veil of false teaching that has been cast over them, and recognise the simple truths of the Gospel. As a matter of fact, France is not now a Roman Catholic nation; she has largely thrown off the rule of the Pope. At the same time, the people generally are not atheistically disposed; they are too philosophical to accept the idea that there is no God. But many of them are infidel, only accepting what their reason can grasp. The influences in this direction have, to a very large extent, come over from England; Voltaire was very intimate with prominent English unbelievers, and took back to his own land many of their teachings. There is really no more promising mission field in the world to-day than France. There are no obstacles from the authorities or the people. The last war has softened the hearts of the people, and the Gospel preacher is sure of an audience wherever he may go. There is no instance during the last fifteen years of a mission hall being opened in any locality, that has not been very soon consecrated by the conversion of souls. So the hearts of the people are open; why should we not take advantage of this and carry the Gospel to them? In the very heart of the fashionable boulevards a mission hall has been open for three years, and every Sunday the place is crowded. Strangers are continually coming in, and are reached by the proclamation of the Gospel. What is needed now, in France, is consecrated men and women. M. Saillens asked prayer for Mr. McAll, who was unable to be present through bodily exhaustion in connection with the work. The missions at Tunis, Algiers, and Corsica have been languishing for want of support, and are about to be given up. Frenchmen in Paris can never forget that it was Mr. George Moore, an Englishman, who brought the first bit of bread for the people after the siege; and another Englishman, Mr. McAll, brought the Gospel. The speaker closed with a touching appeal for sympathy and prayer on behalf of all mission work in France.

Mr. Radcliffe, from recent personal experience in Paris, corroborated what M. Saillens had said about the eagerness of the people who frequent the boulevards to hear the Gospel preacher.

RUSSIA.

Colonel Paschkoff, of St. Petersburg, quoted Zech. iv. 6, and said if ever these words have been verified they are in Russia at present. Notwithstanding all the opposition of an autocratic government, and all the methods adopted to shut the mouths of the Christians—imprisonment and banishment—the work of God goes on. After the Crimean war a copy of the New Testament fell into the hands of a Russian soldier in England. He took it to Russia, and a peasant, by the reading of the Gospel, was converted. He began to speak to others, and soon gathered a large following. The priests commenced to persecute him, but this only served to spread the truth. A man was removed to a distant place, and he began a work there. So this whole movement, extending through the western borders of the Empire, grew out of this one copy of the Testament. One man converted in a college was used of God in the raising up of Christian churches in another part of the country. In the North of Russia, some years ago, Lord Radstock was instrumental in the conversion of a few in the better classes of society. There was then an open door for the Gospel in that part of the country, and it spread among the prisons and hospitals. Meetings were held among cabmen, which were soon crowded. As many as 1500 people were gathered at once in the speaker's own house, including ministers of state and beggars in rags. Through the prison meetings the Gospel was carried to the vast regions of Siberia, where many prisoners are sent. In all this the hand of God is most plainly seen, as there are no religious organisations in the country. Mr. Newman Hall's tract, "Come to Jesus," was translated into Russian, and some copies were circulated in a distant part. This prepared the ground for the visit of a colporteur, who has sold many copies of the Scriptures, and there has been much Gospel reaping in that place. There was an exhibition in Moscow some years ago. The Government had by that time been excited against the work, and were doing all they could to stop it. It was lawful, however, to distribute tracts at this exhibition. In God's providence they got two of the best positions in the whole exhibition, and 30,000 tracts were scattered every day; and during the summer season 1,250,000 copies were distributed. These were spread over the whole country, notwithstanding the opposition of the Government. It seems now as if everything were at a standstill. Almost all the missionaries in the country are either in prison, under sentence, or waiting trial. The Government may do its worst, but they cannot stop the work of God, because every convert spreads the good news wherever he goes.

We must pray the Lord to multiply the colporteurs who are still able to circulate the Word of God. The whole of the Continent almost is now permeated by the Scriptures; thank God the Greek Church is not opposed to this, and even some of the priests help on the circulation of the Bible.

Mr. Broomhall led in prayer for the extension of the work in Russia, and that the converts through all the other parts of the Continent may become "Russianised"—begin to confess Christ, and thus be instrumental in spreading the work, even if the prominent labourers are stopped.

GERMANY.

Dr. Baedeker was the third speaker. In introducing him, Mr. Radcliffe said he had been on the point of going out to labour among his fellow Germans in Canada, but Colonel Paschkoff had besought him to return to Germany and South Russia once more. Dr. Baedeker said the Russians were so ready to receive the Gospel that it was not hard work to preach there. In the south of Russia he gave away and explained a copy of "the wordless book." Several years after it came to his knowledge that a revival had broken out through that simple act. He did not speak Russian himself, but he had preached in ten different languages in that country through interpretation. He would ask those whose hearts were on fire not to be deterred by reason of the language; they could easily preach the Gospel by an interpreter. In Russia to-day it is as it was among the early churches; all the converts became preachers of the Gospel. They did not need a special missionary conference to stir them up to it. Oh, that such a spirit were abundantly poured out in this privileged land. England has been heaping up the riches of the Gospel, when she ought to be scattering them abroad. He felt ashamed to come to England and preach, when there are so many professing Christians throughout the land who ought themselves to be preachers. Dr. Baedeker told of a valley in Switzerland that was at one time a stagnant pool, where vegetation was killed, and all human life was stunted. A channel was opened up by which the water was carried to other valleys; now it is a most fruitful place, and so are all the places where the water flows.

When he went to Russia, he first of all looked up the Germans, his own kinsmen. Would that more were done for the German nation! Why should not a band of English Christians go out and help Dr. Ziemann? A man living in England can hardly escape hearing the Gospel; let some of the Christians go out to other lands, where there is no Gospel message heard. Reverting to Russia, Dr. Baedeker said that Finland was a free land. In the Caucasus, too, which he recently visited, he found hundreds of those who had been banished for their faith, and for whom no one seemed to care. It was such a delight to minister to them in the Gospel. Then there are the Roman Catholic countries of Austria, Hungary, Bavaria, and Bohemia. There might not be liberty there for formal preaching and singing, but there was liberty to speak on certain subjects, and it would be easy to introduce the Gospel. In Bavaria the men have shaken off the trammels of Popery, but they have nothing to take its place. Why should there not be a Christian agency like "Cook's Tours," for sending bands of Gospel workers all through Central Europe, going to the great capitals, preaching from platforms, if there was no liberty to go into pulpits. The work is of God, and it cannot be stopped. Let us continue to pray for the Continent of Europe, and for the Roman Catholic provinces of Germany which have been scarcely touched by the Gospel. May God cure the churches of their stagnation, and inspire us to send forth the healing streams of the Gospel.

Mr. Radcliffe read part of a letter from Mr. Spencer Walton, who asked prayer for guidance. He purposes going out to India in October on a pioneer mission among the English-speaking people there, and then returning to get recruits before settling down in foreign work. If the younger evangelists in our day, said Mr. Radcliffe would go out to foreign lands, it would be good for England; we could get ten others to take the place of one. Then followed a most earnest appeal for volunteers to go to the heathen fields. Implicit obedience to God's commands is the condition of the fulness of the Holy Ghost. If He commands us to stick at home, let us do it; but, if He tells us to go to distant fields, let us go, and He will go with us.

Some closing words came from Mr. Wilkie, of the Emigrants' Home at Blackwall. As a German born, though with an English heart, he pleaded for his native country. No people have been so greatly blessed as the English people in spreading the Gospel; is not this a reason why they should obey the call still more widely? As it was in the early days of the Church, let all the converts scatter themselves abroad telling out the good news wherever they go.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6.

Mr. R. C. Morgan presided at the early prayer-meeting. Having read 1 Kings xviii. 41, "There is a sound of abundance of rain," he said:—We are all familiar with a diagram of deep dark colours representing the heathenism and false religions of the world, and three or four tiny spaces of white representing Christianity. It might well fill us with despair; but let us engrave over the black portion the rainbow of God's covenant and promise. He is the God of hope, and let us, by the power of the Holy Ghost, be filled with hope for the future of this dark world. The present missionary revival is like the cloud out of the sea, and in it is the sound of abundance of rain. The Man is upon the throne; and the living creatures upon earth are ready to do his will: "Whither the Spirit was to go they went, thither was their spirit to go. And they went and returned like the appearance of a flash of lightning." If the Church were ready with this Pentecostal readiness, how soon the world might be evangelised!

Rev. F. B. Meyer (Leicester), referring to the twenty-ninth Psalm, said, that just now we seem to be surrounded by storm and darkness in the social and political world, but we who stand in the temple may look complacently upon the wreck and the storm, because we know that the glory of Jesus must be promoted, even by that which is terrible.

HEATHEN LANDS.

The change in the weather from summer brightness and heat to a steady, depressing drizzle had its result this forenoon in a somewhat diminished attendance. Major-General Sir R. Phayre presided, and some time was spent in praise and prayer.

INDIA

was the great subject first submitted to the attention of the meeting. The Chairman read extracts from various missionary reports, showing very gratifying progress in different parts of the vast dependency of India. The reports thus dealt with were those of the Church Missionary Society, London Missionary Society, Indian Female Normal School Instruction Society, also Dr. Lowe's well-known work on Medical Missions. Facts were cited and statistics given, showing that, while Christianity is making headway in many places, much more could be done if the churches at home were more liberal in their support.

Mr. A. H. L. Fraser (of the Indian Civil Service) said he was a firm believer in the words of our Lord, "The field is the world." At the same time he naturally had a keen and special interest in the great Empire of India, where so many millions of our fellow subjects are lying in heathen darkness. During a residence of fifteen years in that land, he had seen a good deal of the mission work carried on there. Speaking of the Zenana work, he described the strict seclusion in which native ladies are kept, shutting them away from all outside influences, and virtually leaving them without hope and without God in the world. He could testify from many a personal experience to the gross mental and spiritual darkness in which the people of India are to-day. On one occasion, a deputation came to him with a petition for the restoration of heathen atrocities which had been suppressed; they actually thought that their suppression had caused the cholera visitation! Mr. Fraser urged that ladies should not be discouraged from going to India for Zenana work by any lack of medical knowledge, though this was of immeasurable value. There was a great field for Christian ladies who are able to support themselves. It is a very gratifying fact that, apart from the actual confession of Christ in baptism, Gospel teaching is permeating the people to a great extent. Many are held back from baptism by reason of the tremendous social and personal sacrifices that have to be made. They sometimes argue that, as Christianity is a spiritual religion, the formal observance of such a rite as that of baptism cannot surely be necessary. There may be some excuse in the circumstances for this kind of reasoning, but it indicates a deplorable lack of sincerity and courage in obeying the plain command of Christ. The Broma Somaj teaching, Mr. Fraser incidentally remarked, is political and anti-Christian; he had no faith in the system or in its leaders. There may be many causes of despondency in connection with Indian missions, but the sight of the groups of converts gathered to the name of Jesus, had often banished from his mind the feeling of despondency, and he had great hope for the future. He related some of his personal experiences of Gospel work in remote villages, showing how the knowledge of the Gospel spreads, even without the presence or instrumentality of a foreign missionary. Individual native converts carry the truth with them into these distant places, where it takes root and spreads. Such facts as these encourage the hope that one day ere long the whole land will be permeated; so that instead of the cry, "Glory to Krishna," there will be the cry, "Glory to Jesus."

Mr. R. C. Morgan, in petition, thanked God for every servant of the Queen in India who is also a servant of the King of kings, and he prayed that their number might be greatly increased.

CHINA.

From vast and populous India we were carried in thought to still more populous China. Rev. C. G. Moore, of the Inland Mission, presented the claims of its unevangelised millions. While it is true, he said, that the work is God's, we must not permit this thought to lessen our feeling of individual responsibility. Our love to Christ must result in practical work and devotion. Let there be no thought that anything like an adequate provision has yet been made for the spiritual needs of China. Yards are behind us, but miles are before us. God has given us a splendid start in the fact that, as a rule, the missionary goes before any of the usual agencies of western civilisation. This state of things, however, may soon cease to exist, as China is fast opening up to these agencies. This is a critical time for China, and ten workers sent out now will be worth that number many times multiplied ten years hence. God expects us to fully utilise this immense advantage. The practical question of the division of the field in China must soon be settled for good or for evil. He must candidly say that any difficulties in this matter lie with the Churches at home, and not with the workers in the field. As the Apostle complained that some among the Philippian believers "sought their own, not Christ's," so this is one of the greatest evils of modern missions, and it must be honestly and boldly faced. As to the immediate duty of the hour, it is necessary that we should recognise the transition process now going on. The Churches of Christ are being lifted out of local feelings and aims into world-wide thoughts and purposes. As a symptom of the lack of this far-reaching sympathy in some churches, Mr. Moore spoke of the decadence of the prayer-meeting. He told of a prayer-meeting eminently helpful and fruitful. The claims of the great kingdom of Christ in all its developments were kept before the minds of the people. A map of the world was always there to rebuke any narrowness in their thoughts and prayers. Various needy places of the wide world were continually borne up before God, and thus the link was maintained between the individual soul and the Church universal.

On the question of Christian liberality, Mr. Moore said that its lack was not itself the disease so much as a symptom. The standard of the spiritual life of the Church and of the individual believer is always the standard of Christian liberality. We must bring in the tithes into God's house not only "that there may be meat" in God's house, but that the windows of heaven may be opened. Christ calls us his friends. Shall we not show our friendship by a whole-hearted consecration to his service?

Rev. D. Maciver (of the English Presbyterian Mission) glanced at the advances made in Christian Missions to China since the last Missionary Conference at Mildmay. Touching on political points, he said he thought that, as one good result of the recent war between France and China, the people were able to distinguish between Protestant and Popish missionaries. Another result is that the Chinese have discovered something of their own national strength, and this tends to make them more independent and overbearing; this may cause trouble in the future. As to the increase of missions in China since 1868, there were then about 300 missionaries; now there are about 500. In 1877 the estimated number of converts was 13,500; now they are put at from 25,000 to 30,000. Mr. Maciver gave some further figures, showing the relative fruitfulness of the different societies. Among all the agencies at work in China, he quoted with approval the opinion of Dr. Nevius, that the most fruitful is that of itinerating work. He believed, from his own experience in South China, that seven-eighths of the conversions had been the result of effort on the part of the converts themselves. The spread of Christian literature and improved methods of work are also doing much. There are still 200 millions in China outside the possible range of existing agencies. This is a tremendous fact, and it ought to carry its due weight with us. While we need more men and more money, our greatest need is that those already at work and the native Christians themselves should be filled with the Holy Ghost. If that can be secured, all else will follow. Let the Church at home unite in praying for this result. The Presbyterian Mission, with which he was connected, labours exclusively in South China; the number of converts in all the missions is 3000 or 4000. It was his privilege to work among the Hakkas, and a very promising field it was. He was the first Englishman who had been privileged to learn their language and tell out in it the wonderful works of God.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

In the unavoidable absence through illness of Dr. Burns Thompson, the afternoon meeting was presided over by Dr. Gauld, of Mildmay. If he had been present, said the Chairman, Dr. Thompson would have spoken of the Scripture warrant for medical missions. Dr. Gauld, following out this suggestion, read passages of Scripture bearing on the point — Matt. iv.; Luke ix., x.; Acts v., viii. Such passages clearly indicate to us the mind of Christ on this question. Among all the agencies at work for the evangelisation of the world, this combination of preaching the Gospel and healing the sick is the most fitting and the most potent. As to the somewhat disputed question of "unqualified" medical missionaries, he was not predisposed in favour of those not fully competent to deal with every emergency. At the same time, there is so much misery to be relieved in the heathen fields that there is ample room for workers of every grade and qualification. It is often said that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," but sometimes no knowledge at all is deadly. Probably some of those missionaries who have fallen a prey to the deadly climate would now be alive and at work, if they had known a few simple facts as to the rules of health, or the remedies for disease.

BIRMINGHAM.

Dr. Thomson Crabbe, before describing his work in this great Midland city, recalled some early experiences in connection with the commencement of the work in Edinburgh under Dr. Burns Thompson, at a time when medical missions were very little understood or appreciated. After an experience of twenty-five years in this work in Aberdeen, Edinburgh, and Birmingham, he rejoiced that he had ever been privileged to enter on it. This work is a great handmaid to aggressive Church effort. It brings the people within the sound of the Gospel. In Birmingham, the work has been marvellously successful; men and women have been turned to God in hundreds and thousands. The people come from all the regions round about. On one occasion a man started at half past two o'clock in the morning to walk to the mission dispensary. There are prejudices to be removed. An infidel who came on one occasion in Birmingham objected to his speaking to him about his soul. By and by, however, he was thoroughly broken down, and accepted Christ. His son was afterwards converted, and entered the Gospel ministry. The work would be a most depressing one if they were dealing only with the healing of their bodies; but having a message of healing for their souls as well, they are amply rewarded by seeing them take Christ to be their Saviour as well as their Healer. The work has greatly grown. There are now some 100.000 visits to the mission premises every year, besides the visits of the medical men to the homes of the people. There are now many agencies at work in connection with the Mission. Those who have been healed and blessed themselves go out to the courts and alleys and preach the Gospel to the masses of the poor. They conduct a Sunday children's service, Sunday-schools, and evangelistic meetings, all of which are greatly blessed to the salvation of souls. The poor people do all they can to help on the work with their pennies and "widow's mites." The worth of this work is now being recognised by the employers around, who are tendering to it substantial support.

INDIA.

Dr. William Carey (the great-grandson of the pioneer of Indian Missions) spoke of medical missions in India. During a visit to Calcutta he discovered that out of the 680 European missionaries and their wives in India only twenty-eight were medical missionaries. It had been his privilege since 1875 to labour in the important and largely populated city of Delhi. There has been a great blessing in connection with the work among the Hindoos, but not much progress among the Mohammedans. The dispensary now in use is the fifth opened in the city, so greatly has the work spread and prospered. Dr. Carey described the daily routine of the work from early morn. Men, women, and all children of all classes and all castes and no castes attend the dispensary and hear the Gospel with the greatest attention and interest. As an example of the success of the work Dr. Carey told of a bigoted Mohammedan who came to the dispensary and was healed of some complaint. He continued to attend, and soon showed spiritual anxiety. He was ultimately baptized, and was a most consistent member of the Church. The work extends beyond the bounds of the Mission itself. The villages around are visited, and the Gospel is preached to the people as well as cases of sickness treated. Even in Mohammedan villages a hearty welcome awaits the medical missionary, and God is everywhere blessing the efforts put forth.

ROME.

Dr. D. Young, of Rome, remarked on the danger in these days of substituting money gifts for personal service. Christ does not so much ask ours as ourselves. Would that Christian parents felt the privilege of yielding up their sons and daughters to the Lord's work in the mission fields. Some years ago he was enabled to commence work in the Ghetto, Rome, where there are 6000 Jews clustered together. At first the people were somewhat suspicious, but before the end of three months the rooms were crowded. The Ghetto was opened to them in all its length and breadth for a time. By and by the rabbis raised opposition to our work, and they banded themselves to prevent them getting a room, as the first had to be given up. However, the Lord interposed, and they got the best room that could have been chosen. Now for the last year the work has gone on with great acceptance among the people, and not a little spiritual fruit. Dr. Young made a pathetic appeal that more solicitude should be shown towards the Jews, as God's chosen people.

CHINA.

Dr. Maxwell, as an old worker in China, said it presented the fullest scope for medical missions of any heathen country. It combines the populous centres needed for an extended work, with the absence of the caste feeling, the absence of native medical skill, and the readiness on the part of the people to support the work at their own charges. Medical missions began in the country in 1835, but for some time they did not spread rapidly. There are now in China, some fifty or sixty fully qualified workers, from Britain and America. There are six provinces, however, in which there is no medical mission hospital. The number of patients now under treatment is very large. What have been the results? For one thing, it has smoothed down the prejudices that for various reasons exist in China towards Westerners. The whole of the government students are now under the tuition of a medical missionary, who is under the special patronage of the Viceroy, Li Hang Chung. In different ways gratitude is being shown by the people, high and low. The medical work prepares the way of the evangelist. In due time the growing Christian sentiment will put a stop to the cruelties of female infanticide. Besides, there are many evidences of the direct results of the work in the conversion of souls. Converted lepers have gone back to their own homes and have commenced Gospel work among their neighbours and friends. Native Christians are being trained in the hospitals, and these will in the future spread the work. As to the future, there are 1400 cities in China, and there is ample room for as many medical missionaries. There is nothing in the matter of expense to prevent the rapid spread of the work. Rent is cheap. £50 a year will pay for all the necessary medicines. The only question is: Can we get the men and the means to support them? Societies probably cannot meet the need; we must look to the Lord Himself to pour out a spirit of devotion on qualified men, and send them out that this great lack may be supplied.

THE DARK CONTINENT.

At the evening meeting Mr. H. Grattan Guinness presided, and gave the opening address. He said:—The portion of the missionary field concerning which I have to speak is the Continent of Africa. You know more or less about the Continent of Europe; the Continent of Africa is three times the size of that of Europe, and embraces an area of some 12 millions of square miles. It is by no means easy to form an adequate or just conception of the extent of this vast country and its population. The mind needs to dwell on the details, to give itself time for reflection, to allow the facts to make their own natural and deep impression with reference to such a country and its people; and, after prolonged reflection, light will dawn on the subject, some new aspects will present themselves, and the mind be then prepared to consider, justly and wisely and soberly, the spiritual needs of the enormous population concerned. For my part, I confess I feel overwhelmed when I consider Africa with its 200 millions of people. We are here to night to represent this people, and to plead their cause, and, in order to help you to realise the wants of this people, I shall be compelled to give you a few facts as briefly as I can.

First, as to the area. From west to east it is 4600 miles; from north to south is 5000 miles. If you travelled at the rate of ten miles a day (and that is as much as could well be done in a country just under the equator), it would take 500 days to make the journey from east to west, and about the same from north to south; while to travel around the coast (a distance of no less than 16,000 miles) would occupy from four to five years. As to its geography, it is a country of great mountains, great deserts, great rivers, great lakes, great plains, with an enormous population. One of its deserts is three times the size of the Mediterranean. One of its rivers is 5000 miles in length, and has in its waters an island 1000 miles in length. Of lakes, there is, to mention only one, the Victoria Nyanza. As to the languages spoken in this country, they are 600 in number, and the Word of God has been rendered into only a very few, in fact, only a very few have been reduced to a grammatical form.

The religions are mainly two—Mahommedanism, a monotheism, hard, bitter and bloodthirsty, in the past; and heathenism in the centre and south—a heathenism not of the highest, but of the lowest form, consisting of the worship of a fetish, the worship of devils, heathenism with all its dark accompaniments. Here and there, few and far between, along that 16,000 miles of coast line, there are a few taper lights amidst the general darkness—a few mission stations representing the religion of Christ, of the Bible that we profess to believe, and are charged to spread throughout the world; but the vast mass of the Continent is in unrelieved darkness.

The population of Morocco (one-third larger than France, Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli, together) amounts to twelve millions, that of Egypt sixteen millions, Abyssinia three millions; around one lake there is a population of thirty-two millions; Liberia, the Gold Coast, Ivory Coast, Ashantee, Dahomey, and the region known as the Congo (as large as the United States this side of the Rocky Mountains) have a population of forty millions; and, roughly speaking, in the Northern district there is a population of one hundred millions; altogether, a population of two hundred millions. As to the moral and religious condition of this vast country, the north is civilised, the centre is fairly civilised—highly civilised for a Negro kingdom—the south is savage. Throughout the whole of Africa there is slavery—one-half the people are slaves to the other half. Speaking generally, throughout the whole there is slavery with all its horrors, and throughout many parts the most sanguinary practices, including human sacrifices and cannibalism. Now, how can these peoples be illuminated with hope, righteousness, love, and the light of life?

What has the Church of Christ done to illuminate this vast dark Continent? There are certain spots on the coast where are missions; up the Niger River, for a short distance only, there is a mission, and deeply interesting is its history. The Niger is the grand water-way to the Soudan, and the enormous population along its banks is wholly unevangelised. There is not a solitary missionary here; whilst for thousands of miles right across the vast Continent of Africa there is not a single witness for God and his Christ. The Church Missionary Society has one great mission, which still is but a feeble light. There is Captain Hoare (a solitary missionary) on one lake. In the Barbary States there are two missionary stations; in Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli, a few mission stations, but quite new, only five years old. That wonderful region, the region of the Atlas Mountains, is within four days of this spot. I have been there, and felt the healthy breezes, pure and fresh from the Mediterranean. The people are excessively friendly in disposition, yet they are neglected, no man caring for their souls. What a country for you, for me, for Christian gentlemen and ladies who could go and support themselves; what a field for Christian effort! Two ladies could live together in the Kabyle district perfectly safely, and find doors opened to them which are closed to men. Christian ladies, of intelligence, with earnest, gentle spirits, can do more amongst the men than can male missionaries.

What, then, are you doing? Does your work elsewhere so demand your presence that you cannot go to this people? Must they live, and die, and perish without the Gospel? Millions upon millions of people: will you let them perish without doing anything to tell them of Jesus? The other day, at a meeting of the Kabyle Mission, I referred to Tripoli. No missionary could be sent there. As regards the Soudan, if only all the facts concerning its moral and spiritual condition could be made known, you would be led to pray and work for its enlightenment. We have sent soldiers to the Soudan, to Ashantee, to Zululand, to Abyssinia, to Egypt, and have slaughtered tens of thousands of their peoples; but of missionaries to enlighten them, to save them, we have sent only a handful, and these just on the coast—the multitudes in the interior are left to perish in heathen darkness. The centre of Africa was supposed to be a vast desert, like that of Sahara; but it is a magnificent, vast, well-watered plateau. Of this district Dr. Wolff tells us of chiefs surrounded by more than 1000 warriors; and recently, on the death of one king, 1000 female slaves were immolated on his tomb!

In conclusion, what is, what must be, in the nature of things, the duty of the Christian Church with reference to the continent and populations of Africa? To whom is the Gospel entrusted, if not to the Church of Christ? To whom was the commission given to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, if not to the Church of Christ as represented by its members? To whom is this continent committed if not to the Church of Christ? Who is called to bind up its wounds, and to lead it out of darkness, if not the Church of Christ? Consider again that the people multiply at a rate which utterly casts into the shade all calculations as to what can be done by present missionary effort. Suppose now that in the south there are two and a half millions in course of being evangelised, and in the rest of that vast continent another two and a half millions also being evangelised. This after all would be but five millions out of 200 millions. But at what rate dies this people? In thirty or thirty-three years the whole present population will be gone. Death is busy, and the fact is, heathenism is increasing in the world over seventy times faster than Christian converts are increasing in heathen lands. In one hundred years there have been about three million converts to Christianity, but heathenism is vastly on the increase, and so is Mohammedanism.

What is to be done? There is one thing only that ought to be done. The Church has to evangelise the world, or answer for it. She cannot do it by her present methods—by a miserable handful of missionaries, representative of a few societies; she must put her shoulder to the wheel, invent new methods, and improve the old. There must be sacrifices—sacrifices large and deep. Men and women must sacrifice themselves, their children, their substance for the work. It is a question of the redemption, of the salvation of the world. Have you ever yearned over the world? Do you now yearn over, pray for, the world? Do you ponder what that word means? Have you come up to the call given, and felt the obligation to say, "'Here am I, send me'—anywhere; I give myself, my children, my substance to thy work?" O friends, let this night, by the help of God, be a night of resolution, of high and holy resolve. Let your mind take its right attitude with regard to this question to-night. Consecrate yourselves to the Lord afresh, body, soul and spirit, energies, money—all; and God will bless you and others through you. But now be practical. Do not let these thoughts evaporate, or these facts be forgotten. You have heard them; heed them, and act upon them! How much waste there has been already; but God now gives you another opportunity. In simple words it has been said:—

> The sons of ignorance and night
> May dwell in the eternal light,
> Through God's eternal love.

What are you doing to bring the sons of ignorance and night into the eternal light? Oh, let out the eternal love; then will shine in the eternal light, and men will come out of their darkness. By the grace of God, be practical. Do not act under impulse. I would not overlook the counsels, "Not a novice," "Lay hands suddenly on no man." But, with these restrictions, let all go forth into the great harvest-field; then let the light in and the love out, and you shall bring back the banished ones. If you have to go into the thirsty desert after wandering sheep, what a privilege!

The last news from the Congo! I wanted to have had here one of our dear Congo lads, now in Scotland, but though I telegraphed for him he could not get through. I should like to have had him on this platform for you to look at him. He has face, eyes, feet, hands, like yours; heart, intelligence, conscience, affection, just like you; and he is the representative of 200 millions of his people, who yet have not got what you have. They are waiting for it; you have it to give; will you give it? But the last news from the Congo! Efforts that tell, whether at home or abroad, are those which are concentrated, sustained. If you hold a burning lens long enough beneath the concentrated rays of the sun, they will make their mark. I spoke of the Congo Mission. The first year there were no results, and so on in the second and third years; the fourth year, one or two converts; fifth year one or two; and now the latest news from the Congo is, that at one of the Congo Mission stations 700 candidates for Christian baptism have come forward. And a missionary writes, with reference to the gods the people had been worshipping, that they are flinging away those things. My old teacher once exclaimed, holding up one of these idols, "These be thy gods, O India; these be thy rivals, O Jehovah!" But they are now flinging them away through the preaching of the Gospel. I was standing with a converted native the other day, and as he listened to what was said his face shone. So I said, "And you believe in it, too." "Oh, yes," was his answer, "and we are expecting it at every station." When Central Africa begins to move, it will be like the moving of the ocean; and so with India and China. Don't you want to have a part in that glorious harvest-home—that reaping for life eternal? May God grant that the facts brought before you to-night may remain in your memories for years to come, and bring forth practical fruit for years to come and for eternity!

CENTRAL AFRICA.

Mr. J. D. Moir (of the African Lakes Company) said he had lived nine years in Central Africa, in the district of Lake Nyanza. After speaking of witchcraft as a great hindrance to Christianity, he said:—As to the slave trade, very few in this country realise the extent to which it is carried on. At least 10,000 slaves cross Lake Nyanza alone every year. Over the whole land domestic slavery exists. The people, however, are beginning to learn better things. When, some time since, one of the chiefs near our station died, many of the slaves came down and cried to us for protection, fearing that they might be put to death on the occasion of his funeral. The sons of the chief also came and told us they had resolved that the customs usually observed at the funeral of a chief should be set aside. I shall never forget when on Lake Nyanza my attention was called to a dhow. I went in our dingey to the vessel, and, looking down into the hold, saw eighty or ninety little children there. They gazed up into my eyes, as if, having perhaps heard something of Englishmen in connection with the slave trade, they thought I could help them, but I was powerless. O friends, if you had seen those eyes gazing up into yours, you would pray earnestly that this "open sore," as Livingstone called it, might be healed. I asked the trader, "How many of those children do you expect to reach the coast?" His reply was, "Oh, many will die, no doubt." I told him—being a Mohammedan, he believed in a God—that God would certainly judge him for such things. He said, "Oh, they are not like us. They have no souls." Dear friends, will you not do something to give these people the Gospel? They believe in a God; in times of trouble, they go to the graves of their chiefs that these may pray for them. One asked me, "Can you tell me of the God who loves us?" Another said, "Have you white people a road that leads to the spirit world, that you know all these things?" The people will listen to all you say. There is nothing to hinder the spread of Christianity but the evil heart of unbelief. And, let me add, out of a few natives whom we have gathered together at our mission, ten or twelve who have been baptized support one of their own number to go and preach the Gospel to others. We can already see the little cloud, that by and by may overshadow the whole land. Christ left us a double legacy—of work and of power. Power is what all true Christians strive after and pray for, but it seems to me this point is forgotten. If we have a legacy left us, we study the terms. But do Christians? The terms of the legacy which Christ left his people are, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and earth: go ye therefore and teach all nations. . . and lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." Do Christians think of these words enough?

NEW ZEALAND AND JAPAN.

Mr. D. Blakeney, R.N., said:—Of all races of men that we Englishmen have come across, we have never met with such noble, and yet such barbarous savages as the New Zealanders were. First seen by white men three hundred years ago, Captain Cook went to their land in the middle of last century, with the result which all know; and such was their savage nature that a French warship visiting the coast at the end of the century, though her crew were dying of scurvy, durst not put her men ashore. Down to 1842 they were cannibals. Having in one of H.M. ships to explore and map the coast in 1851, I had opportunities of seeing phases of New Zealand life which few men have seen, except the godly missionaries whom I found here and there dotting the coast with the light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ.

We have heard something about woman's work at Mildmay. I stand here to say that in my own person I am a living testimony to the power of woman's work amongst the New Zealanders. We were at anchor under Cape Runaway, so called because Captain Cook, when off that place, seeing a large number of natives evidently intent on attacking him, sailed away rather than assail them. Before morning came we were in such dire extremity that in all human probability the ship must have been wrecked and all lives lost but for New Zealand women. On shore we saw the houses of a few white men—whalers—a godless set of men, indeed; but though we had a flag of distress flying from the mast, for some hours there was no answer. Let me say here that the greatest obstacle to the progress of the Gospel abroad are the men who, going by the name of Christians, are not so. God forgive us for not looking more after the men we send out! After some hours we saw a boat with three white men and three New Zealanders coming off to us. The captain indignantly asked of the white men, "Did you not see our flag of distress?" "And did you not notice that we had the flag of a British man-of-war?" "Yes." "Then, why did you not come to help us?" "We said, Let her alone, she will come ashore, and we shall have her bones." "What, then, made you come at last?" "The Maori women shamed us into coming off to you, and here we are." We have been told in Mr. Froude's book, recently published, how low and degraded the Maoris have become since the days I speak of. Have they? Only, allow me to say, in the track of the white men. Only there. There are tens of thousands of Maoris just as good Christians as you or I; the land has been won for Christ. Not many weeks ago we had an account of the terrible earthquake that devastated a portion of New Zealand, and in that awful night, when many of the white men were paralysed with fear, as Godless men always are, what was the behaviour of the Maori women? They stood to their posts, like the Pompeian sentinel, and though the earth rocked to its centre, they saved the white children.

Miss Butler also has been out to that land, and has written a book concerning wha she saw there. One story she tells, which may well be given here. Standing one Sunday with a crowd of Maori children and women around her, she took for her subject the parable of the Prodigal Son. And the thing that touched those Maoris with reference to that Prodigal Son was this, that when he was in such extremity, no man gave him to eat. The very hospitality of these converted Maoris rebelled against the thought that any man should be denied hospitality. With them old things have passed away. "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creation" is, indeed, exemplified in them. We have been looking at a dark picture, but here is one bright spot and let us take courage, for what has been done amongst the Maoris shall yet be done in the Dark Continent. Before I leave New Zealand, let me add one fact as to the corrupting power of the white man—the Maori oaths are the oaths of the white man; they had none of their own.

Now as to Japan. In 1858, not so long ago, I was one of an expedition for exploring and mapping that coast also, and it was as much as our lives were worth to get out of range of the ship's guns. Now, in 1886, we find that not only is Japan on the highroad to becoming a Christian nation, but amongst the Japanese themselves there are some splendid examples of Christian life and character. In a missionary magazine I was reading only to-day, I found this incident narrated, and it is one which refers again to woman's work. The writer says, in a certain room he found about sixty men and women gathered, and one of the Japanese women proposed to begin speaking. She was asked if she would like the men to go out. "If they make no disturbance they can remain," she replied. And then in clear and simple language she told about the true God, and every person listened with the greatest attention. A strange sight this, a woman sitting on the floor and teaching so many persons the way of life. God bless the women! May they be multiplied a thousandfold to carry the Cross of Christ to the nations. As has been said of the British army drum, that every morning it circles the world around, so, catching the spirit of Malachi in reference to the evangelisation of the world (chap. i. 11), let us pray that England may shine forth as a Christian power whose morning anthems rise with the sun, and, swelling with the hours, circle the world with the song sung by the angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill towards men."

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided at the early prayer-meeting, and gave a brief exposition of 1 Sam. xiv., the central thought of which is expressed in the words of Jonathan to his armour-bearer, "For there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." Notwithstanding the thick darkness in China, India, Africa, which the little light of the Protestant Churches in those parts only serves to reveal, yet it is for us to go forward in great joy, in great faith, and, as in the camp of the Philistines, there will be a great trembling among those hosts. It is no more difficult for the Lord to raise up witnesses to Himself than to cause the beautiful white mushrooms to spring up amongst the green grass in the field, which has been picked clean only the day before. May the result of these meetings be that many may be thrust forth. You cannot advance upon Africa without a back-water of blessing coming upon backsliders. In England, Scotland, America, there are many backsliders—a vast number of dear brethren and sisters truly converted, engaged in the Lord's work, perhaps to some extent, but yet living in spiritual adultery, as are all who love the world. For the sake of these, who want to see true self-denial in religion, go forward, advance upon the foe; the way to get our brethren and sisters out of the caves in which they are, is to go forward in the strength of the Lord, even as did Jonathan and his armour-bearer.

BIBLE LANDS: PALESTINE.

Mr. Eugene Stock presided at the forenoon meeting, and gave three texts for consideration: Zech. iv. 6; Matt. xvii. 19, and Micah iv. 1. Mohammedanism is the great mountain which shall be levelled as a plain; but, with reference to the mountain of the house of the Lord mentioned in the third passage, and which shall be established on the top of the mountains, the promise is that "people shall flow unto it," the ordinary process of flowing, which is downward, being reversed in this figure.

Is there anything that should humble us Christians more than the fact that the Holy Land, the land of the Bible, is Mohammedan? The Apostles and their successors planted churches there which did triumph over Paganism, but the salt lost its savour, the purity of the Gospel was corrupted, and Mohammedanism was the God-appointed scourge to sweep them away. The remains of these churches are to be seen in the present day in the Armenian, Coptic, and Nestorian Christians, over all of which Mohammedanism is dominant. Passing by the attempt of the Crusaders, which had a kind of heroism in it, Christendom made no attempt to win back the land for Christ till about seventy years ago. The early converts of the Church Missionary Society did, indeed, look out upon this land, and in the earliest reports of that Society we see how anxious the committee were about it. Rev. William Jowett, a graduate of Cambridge University, went out on behalf of the Society in 1815, and was well received by the heads of the Eastern churches, and it was hoped that, by giving them the Word of God, they would make it known amongst the Mohammedans by whom they were surrounded. In Egypt also the Scriptures were circulated, and some good work was done amongst the young men in the colleges, and many ministers and one bishop were sent forth by the Coptic Church. But, owing partly to the crystallising influences of Eastern lands and other causes, the effort died out. In 1831, the American Board was established, and the question at once arose, Why not attack Mohammedanism directly? This, however, was impossible before the Crimean war, two Mahommedans having been executed for becoming converts to Christianity; but after that event, a distinct demand, worthy of a Christian statesman, was made by Lord Clarendon, that no punishment should attach to a Mohammedan who became a Christian, whether he was originally a Mohammedan or Christian. The fact, however, remains, that to this day Mohammedanism is a mighty power against the Church and the Gospel, and it is a sad fact that its adherents can point to the members of the Christian churches around and say; "If that is what you call Christianity, we would rather not be like that." We feel, however, that the time is coming when the results of what has been and is being done will be seen. Dr. Bruce (in Persia) had written:- "I am not reaping the harvest, I am scarcely sowing the seed, scarcely even ploughing the land; but I am gathering out some of the stones." And this holds true of our work in Palestine.

Rev. C. T. Wilson (Jerusalem) said:—The work among Moslems is especially hard, but still we are making progress. As to difficulties, there is first the opposition of the Turkish Government. Few people in England realise how great that is. Anyone who attends a service is at once suspected of wishing to become a Christian, and for safety must be sent away to some other part. Another difficulty is the corrupt state of the Christians of the Latin and Greek Churches. The Greek priests are taken from the lowest of the people, and lead grossly immoral lives. With regard to the educational work being carried on, besides its own direct influence and benefit, there is an indirect benefit from the fact that no sooner had this been started by the Protestants than both the Greek Church and Mohammedans took alarm, and themselves established schools. But the people had found out that the education given by the Protestants was superior to the other, and as a Protestant school can only be established in a place where the population is either mixed or altogether Protestant, the Moslems of one village, where there were no Protestants, sent to another village and asked some of its people to come and live amongst them, that they might have the benefit of our education. Were religious freedom given all over the country, the Protestant schools would be filled with Moslem boys and girls. The Female Education Society, a German Society, and the Society of Friends, are all doing good educational work. Perhaps the most important work of all is that of colporteur evangelists lately set on foot as an experiment by the Bible and Church Missionary Societies conjointly.

Palestine is mapped out into districts, and to each a colporteur is assigned, who goes through the whole district once in four months. Very few books are sold, because scarcely one per cent. can read; but, as the evangelist goes from village to village, reading in the guest-chamber, where he meets with many people, much is to be hoped from this work.

An exceedingly interesting incident occurred lately. An evangelist was visiting a village near Bethany, and in the guest-chamber met some Bedouins, who, being much interested in what they heard from the Scriptures, invited him to visit their tribe. Of course the invitation was accepted, and he spent a whole week with them, reading to them and telling them about God's Word and the Gospel. The Turkish Government have tried hard to stop this work, but a treaty gives perfect liberty to travel about Jerusalem. The work of the colporteurs has also encountered bitter opposition from the Roman Catholics, which, however, is likely to bear fruit in a remarkable way. Fearing that their influence would be weakened by the circulation of God's Word, the Jesuits issued from their press a really excellent translation of the Bible. There were some notes at the end; but, as we all know, notes are but little read, and we look for great things from the circulation of this Bible, which, having the imprimatur of the Romish Church, will be free from the suspicion with which sometimes the Protestant Bible is regarded.

Then there is the Medical missionary work, and this is of very great importance. There are two Medical Missions in connection with the Church Missionary Society. The Berlin Mission has started one in a place which is, as it were, a back door into Arabia, and there is the hospital, under Miss Langdon, to which thousands of patients from all parts of Palestine have come, and there heard the Word of God. Thus the Gospel is made known far and wide, and even amongst the Bedouin tribes.

TURKEY.

Rev. C. H. Brooks (Constantinople), a representative of the American Board, said:—There is a noble work being done in the Levant by your English sisters, quite independently of any society. To the Smyrna and Constantinople Rests we are very much indebted; they do a much-needed work amongst the sailors, and we find there a place in which to preach the Gospel to Greeks, Armenians, Turks, and others. God has wonderfully blessed those Sailors' Rests, and they are a bond of union between men of many different nationalities. In Constantinople there are the Church Missionary Society to the Jews, the Church of Scotland Mission to the Jews, and the Free Church of Scotland Mission to German-speaking Jews. We entered upon our work of evangelising the Mussulman population sixty years ago, and our preachers were readily received by the Armenian Church, with which we worked in harmony for ten years. But, as the people became Bible readers, they began to think for themselves, and said there were many things in their own system contrary to the Word of God. At length those evangelically inclined were cast out of the Church with all manner of ignominy.. The people were thus deprived not only of their church rights, the Armenian Church alone having any status then, but tradesmen were forbidden to supply them even with bread and water; without any recognition by Government, and without any known right to live, they were in dire distress. From that day to this our work has been largely confined to Christians, but I claim that still our Mission is to Mohammedans. I persuade the Greeks to forward this work, not merely by removing from the Mussulman path the stumbling-block of nominal Christianity, which is ever a serious hindrance to the spread of the Gospel, but to accept of God's providence in this matter—to realise that upon them has been laid of God the evangelisation of their neighbours, and that thus they should conquer those who first conquered them. We have about one hundred evangelical churches nearly self-supporting and self-directing, including three with congregations of 600, 800, and 1000 each. From the first our Society has been against the machinery of educational work, fearing lest it might in some way divert attention from our great object, the preaching of the Gospel. But in different parts of Turkey we have four colleges, including the Robert College at Constantinople, from whence has gone out that influence which has made it possible for there to be a semi-independent Bulgarian State, which we pray may be the beginning of a great independent Christian state in the East; we have also four theological schools, and in many of the villages common schools.

Woman's work is very important in Turkey, and I may refer also to the Girls' College in Constantinople, where are always 100 young girls being trained for Christ. In this the women of America take great interest, and in their beautiful homes at Scutari girls of all nations, many of them of Mussulman parentage, are being prepared for the work of evangelisation. From the Bible House in ancient Byzantium, there has been, since the Crimean war, an issue of about 5000 copies of the Word of God each year, and this represents a large total. Though we have not yet seen much fruit, we know the seed thus scattered is germinating, and believe there will soon be a large ingathering from the Mussulman population. The Government is more and more hostile to our work, but this we may accept as an indication that it is true work. During the past year two young Mussulmans have been baptized, one by the Church of England, and one by our Mission; the one left to go to America—the land of liberty to him. "I am going to America to find heaven," he said; the other is still in Constantinople, and at present suffers no persecution.

Let me add that the spirit of sectarianism is a great hindrance to our work. We do not ask your sons, or your daughters, or your money to help us, but that you will draw together here in England. Mildmay has been set up to remove hindrances between evangelical Christians. And, remember, other peoples say, "What is good for the English people must be good for us;" and there is danger lest presently we should have duplicates of all the "isms" in this Christian land. Why should not evangelicals be united together for one common object, the advancement of the Master's kingdom, instead of trying to pull one another down, and so hindering the great work all ought to have at heart. More than anything else we want that Christians should be Christ-like. When England, which is as a city set on a hill, is full of the Spirit of Christ, it will be an easy thing to bring Turkey into the kingdom of our God. If there had been more of this spirit here, I think a young Moslem who came to this country for training, who became a Christian, and attended your churches, would not on his return have lapsed into Islamism. If you had surrounded him with the spirit of Christ that terrible fall would have been impossible.

SPAIN.

Mr. Blamire said:—Fourteen years ago, in company with a friend, I went out to Spain, under no society or committee, but simply trusting in the Lord for everything, and the Lord has looked after us, and supplied our need. We took a house at Corunna, and went to the Governor to tell him we were going to preach at a certain time. He replied, "I prohibit public teaching, and am very sorry I cannot put you in gaol now!" We went then to the British Consul, and he told us to go to the Governor again, and tell him the day and hour we were going to preach. We went, and that threw him into a rage; he telegraphed to Madrid, and the reply came:—"You had better not touch those gentlemen; we will hold you responsible for their safety." And then he actually sent seven policemen to take care of us. We bless God for the work done at Corunna, and have since opened another place near that town, and at ten other towns or villages. Thousands of people come to hear us preach, mostly from curiosity, as all sorts of things are said about us, but I believe souls have been saved in every place. In one some 300 people have given in their names as wishing to have nothing to do with the Church of Rome, and about 150 belong to the Church of Christ. In another, a young lady gave us a house, and then a piece of land on which to build a hall; in building this the people worked most heartily, sometimes all night, in getting the stone for the purpose. In another, the first convert was the parish priest, whose ignorance was such that if asked to look at Genesis he was just as likely to find Revelation—we had to find book, chapter, and verse for him. Directly after his conversion he stood up in our preaching place and said, "All we priests are liars." He was put into prison, but we cried to the Lord for him, and, though he was in danger of his life, the Lord graciously answered our prayer and delivered him. Cases are being continually got up against persons, sometimes for not taking off the hat and kneeling when the "host" is passing. It is terrible to see what Rome has done for that beautiful country. The Lord save her from its clutches. Rome is a little whitewashed here, but she is just the same as ever where she has the power. We are always having persecution difficulties, but blessing too. In every place we go to there is a fresh battle, but we mean to go forward.

VALEDICTORY MEETING.

On Thursday afternoon, the large hall was occupied by the friends of the Church of England Zenana Society, which held a dismissal service for fourteen ladies, who are entering the foreign field. As might be expected, ladies formed the majority of the audience, the body of the hall being filled and the front portion of the gallery. Major-General F. T. Haig presided. After singing, "Spread, oh, spread thou mighty word," Rev. Mr. Lloyd, of Foochow, engaged in prayer, and read a portion of Scripture.

The Chairman said that every recurring anniversary of this kind, when they bid farewell to ladies going out, seemed increasingly solemn. The evidence that God is working in these latter days, that He is preparing to pour out his Spirit in a remarkable manner, and the consideration that the time is short, make these occasions increasingly full of solemnity. Our feeling should be one of joyful expectancy and hope, because God is with us. These sisters go forth in obedience to God's command, and He will be with them, carrying them through difficulty and trial, giving them strength, and crowning their work with success. The Society is sending forth fourteen missionaries. It might be surprising that we can send such a number, but the Lord has laid it on the hearts of not a few to contribute to the support of these ladies. Three are entirely honorary, four will draw no salary, two have their salary provided by friends, five only are chargeable to the Society. Our sisters are going forth with everything to encourage them. Most of them are going to India. If there is one portion of the world where the Lord is working more than another, it is India. The mind of the people is waking up. How important that the Gospel should be presented to the awakened intellect of India. Communication is being multiplied, and there is a marvellous thirst for education. Everything shows that the education is telling most powerfully on the mass of the population. Illustrative of this, in 1883, there were 14,000,000 newspapers passed through the post-office in India, and in the same year there were 187,000,000 letters and books passed through against about half that number ten years before. In these ten years the number of village postmen have been increased threefold. How infinitely important that now we should teach them about the Lord Jesus Christ. We want enthusiasm in this work. While he was glad to see workers, trained workers, going to the field, and was thankful for increase of funds, he was conscious that some far greater effort must be put forth. We must not be surprised if we see new methods. He sympathised with the Salvation Army going forth in India. If the mind and heart of the Church of Christ is aroused to anything like a proper appreciation of the will of the Lord in this matter and the duty that lies upon them, he would not be surprised to see methods of this kind multiplied indefinitely.

Rev. Gilbert Karney, the clerical secretary, then read the instructions to the departing missionaries, three of whom—Miss M. Smith, Miss A. Sharp, and Miss Bartlett—go to Amritsar. The other names and stations for India are: Miss Dixie to Batâla, Miss Good to Barrackpore, Miss Clark to Calcutta, Miss Parsons to Chupra, Miss Thorp to Krishnaghur, Misses Wallinger and Synge to Ootacamund, and Miss Blyth to Palamcotta. Miss I. and Miss H. Newcombe go to Foochow, China; and Miss Harrison to Nagasaki, Japan. He then urged on them the importance of having fixed principles of missionary action, ready to be applied as the work demands, and gave some instances of how, without these, a missionary might do harm while desiring to do good.

Rev. Canon Hoare then addressed the forthgoing missionaries. He had a word to say on four points: their work, their motives, their power, and their hope, Their work was a very remarkable one in the Church of God, a new work that was never thought of when he first joined the Church Missionary Committee, this work in the homes of the heathen. It was pre-eminently a woman's work, a work from which man is excluded. The most gifted missionary could not find an entrance into the Zenana. They go to teach the power of Jesus in the home, and, although they can preach, it is in the home that women are supreme. As to their motive, he hoped they would feel the motive of true loyalty to the institution that sends them out; but they wanted more than that. They wanted a yearning for souls, but that would not also supply a sufficient motive in time of discouragement. There are times when the most ardent love for souls is disappointed. They wanted the love of that blessed Saviour in whom there is no possibility of disappointment. They must say, "I have set the Lord always before me." What is the power? They wanted a power, they were not going with power of eloquence. They must have the power of a loving heart. If they prayed for a person habitually, they could not help loving them. They wanted something beyond this—the accompanying power of God the Holy Ghost.

A NEW SOCIETY.

At four o'clock a meeting was held in Room No. 5, with the object of starting a new organisation to provide a means of communication and reference for all interested in mission work. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided. After prayer, the Chairman said that such a plan as was now suggested had been proposed by the late Mr. Pennefather, and now Mr. Fry and Mr. Meyer had it laid upon their hearts. It was now brought before the meeting, and he hoped that something of a practical character would come of it. He then called upon Mr. H. W. Fry to explain the scheme.

Mr. Fry said that the way in which he came to take up this work was peculiar. He saw a letter from the Rev. F. B. Meyer in The Christian, and he answered that letter, asking those interested in such a scheme to communicate with him, and they would endeavour to draw up a scheme. He had some replies, and the present plan was drawn up. He would read the paper. The title of the Society was the "Missionary Intelligence and Registration Office;" and the object, "for the registration of missionary information and the encouragement of vigorous self-supporting missionary enterprise in all parts of the world." They wanted a centre where information could be collected. When anyone wanted information now, they did not know where to go for it, and when they have used it, it is not available for anybody else. Then they wanted to encourage self-supporting work. These meetings must have proved that the way mission work has been done hitherto will never meet the need. The alteration must and will be that self-supporting effort should be encouraged to a very large extent. If we have to preach the Gospel to every nation, we shall not do it by societies alone. The Churches, as a body, will not do it. Individual agency must be encouraged. He then read the objects of the Society, commenting on them as he read. They are as follow:—

(1) To collect and put into practical form, reliable information concerning spiritually destitute and neglected places, as well as Christian work in operation, throughout the world, and to disseminate the same through suitable channels.

(2) To call attention to promising fields of labour, and to encourage all (men or women) who are willing to be used in the Lord's service, for the evangelisation of the world, and to furnish missionary information.

(3) To establish a system of correspondents in foreign lands, who will report on suitable openings for missionaries, self-supporting or otherwise, and act as referees to those who go out; also generally to keep the office furnished with suitable information, and to put those of the Lord's people who may travel, en rapport with Christian people in the countries they may visit.

(4) To urge on Christian people throughout Great Britain and elsewhere, the claims of the heathen, and their responsibilities respecting them, and to seek to infuse zeal and energy into the Christian public at large for the support of missionary enterprise with their means and influence.

(5) To stimulate Christian congregations to seek representation on the foreign field, by members selected, sent out, and maintained from amongst themselves.

To carry out these objects, three registries have been decided on, (a) a registry of missionary effort in all parts of the world; (b) a registry of requirements as a means of bringing work before workers, and workers to the work; (c) a registry of employment for missionaries. Forms have been prepared proposing questions on these various points, and Mr. Fry read some of them. Information was invited from all in a position to give it; this will be registered so as to be available. The object was to help and encourage those who are willing, to find support to send out the people. We do not want to have anything to do with the means. The object is not to interfere with any existing work, but to supply a missing link. It wanted to be in harmony with all societies and to help them. It expected to get valuable information from them, and on the other hand to supply them with information that they want. If we look at the mission field we see that to some extent it is like a lot of regiments with no head-quarters. We have regimental head-quarters, but there is no central place where the regimental head-quarters can compare notes. We do not know how far we can supply this want, but we shall try.

Rev. F. B. Meyer said that this scheme had survived an immense amount of adverse criticism. If after passing through adverse criticism it can yet justify its existence in its amended form, it should abide.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said the Gospel must be spread by men and women making their own living; he called attention to the money spent in our homes and church architecture which might be used to send men abroad.

Mr. Judd then described the openings that exist in China for men who would go to the ports to work and preach the Gospel. There were the Chinese Customs, where hundreds were employed. Shipping clerks could also find employment. He gave one instance of a young man who learned to speak Chinese, hired a room at his own expense, and had, during the first year, baptized nine converts from the heathen.

Rev. J. Wilkinson wished that the organisation should extend to home as well as foreign work; to Jew as well as Gentile, taking in the whole field of missionary effort.

Mr. R. C. Morgan said that it was a good beginning. There was a good deal of voluntary work, which must be thought of. Mr. Paton looked at the question from another side, and said, when God wanted a man to enter the mission field, He would thrust him forth. Dr. Young, Mr. Russell Hurditch, Rev. J. Fordyce, and others also addressed the meeting, and at the close a resolution approving of the scheme was passed unanimously.

FOOD FOR THE LAMBS.

At six o'clock, a small but very interesting meeting was held in one of the lower rooms. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, in some introductory sentences, quoted the text, "To every man his work," as characteristic of the times. Mr. Spiers and the Society with which he is connected have a most important sphere of work in looking after the children. The Church has not been anything like ingenious enough in adopting new methods, so as to recommend the truth to those who know it not. "A happy thought" had come to Mr. Spiers, and he would expound it to the meeting.

With the briefest of prefaces Mr. Spiers rushed into the subject. Mr. Pennefather and other friends, he said, started the Children's Special Service Mission some twenty years ago. Its object was to make more direct effort for the salvation of children. It has developed wonderfully, and now it makes itself felt all over the world. Ten years ago we made the remarkable discovery that there were other children in the world besides those born within the British Isles. We found, moreover, that comparatively little was being done for their salvation. So we set to work in a small way to publish and scatter abroad illustrated Gospel tracts; now these are circulated in some forty languages: millions of them have gone around the globe in these different tongues. Mr. Spiers read out quite a polyglot list of languages, some of them seldom heard of, in which these Gospel missives are published. The tracts are all narratives, translated carefully, and ably, from the English. There have been many touching testimonies of the blessing bound up in these printed messengers; time would fail to rehearse them. God, as I believe, has given me an idea that I want to lay before you. During these three days' Conference I have been greatly struck with the fact that work among the children has very seldom been mentioned. (Mr. Mathieson interposed the remark that they would give him a special innings to himself at the next Conference.) All over the world the children are learning to read, but what do they, or what can they, read? Alas! the stuff that has been provided in most cases has been very terrible. In every one of the tracts we issue, the way of salvation is made plain, even to the feeblest comprehension. But I feel that we ought now to take a new departure and bring out pictorial leaflets entirely composed of passages from the Word of God. Of course, we will not stop the publication of the others. We desire to give them to missionaries and workers without any cost to them. If we could only have these Scripture tracts in a couple of dozen of different tongues scattered about by the thousand or the million, what a blessing they would prove to the work of foreign missions! They could be given to children in the schools, and also in the fairs and other great assemblages in heathen lands. For such work they would be even more useful than larger portions of Scripture. The picture is essential; it is found that the illustrated leaflets are so much prized on the Continent that though the people give up to the priests copies of the Scriptures and Gospel portions, they absolutely refuse to give up the tracts with pictures. A wealthy Hindoo in the North West Provinces of India has lately distributed, at his own expense, a million tracts against Christianity. Who will covet the privilege of publishing in these regions one or two millions of tracts to counteract the evil influence of this shoal of sceptical literature?

In brief, the value of this movement was confirmed by testimonies from Dr. Baedeker (Germany and Russia), Mr. Blamire (Spain), Mr. C. H. Judd (China), Mr. St. Dalmas (India), Mr. H. S. Newman, and others.

UNITED KINGDOM AND COLONIES.

Reversing the usual order, which somewhat selfishly teaches us that charity should begin at home, the promoters of the Conference kept back the subject of the United Kingdom till the very last.

Mr. Robert Paton, Chairman, pressed home the exhortation, "Occupy till I come." He said he had never, in all his experience, found such a mass of human misery and ungodliness as in this great city of London. After all that has been done, and is being done, it is probable that not more than ten per cent. of the population are under any religious influence whatever. The Church of God may well take shame to herself that she has had so little faith in her Lord, and so little devotion to his cause. The devil is busy spreading all kinds of evil in our midst, by the Press and otherwise. How much need there is for us to be up and doing, to extend the kingdom of our Lord among our own neighbours. There is much to encourage us to personal dealing. There are constant proofs of the fruits of it in the salvation of men. Let us be up and doing, not only engaging in individual effort, but promoting the circulation of the truth by the printed page.

Mr. C. R. Hurditch said the great work of the Church is the Gospelising of the world, so that the coming of the Lord may be hastened. This is to be done through the preaching of the word by those who are themselves saved, sanctified, and sent. Mighty obstacles to the work come from the indifference of the great masses of the people; from the scepticism and agnosticism that are so rife; from formalism, ritualism, and rationalism in the Church itself; from worldiness, prayerlessness, and the lack of unity among Christians. We need to look these things in the face and to humble ourselves before God. Think, too, how much unconsecrated wealth there is in the Churches; what a hindrance that is to the work of the Lord! This Gospel work must be undertaken in the spirit of gratitude to Jesus Christ, of deep self-humility, of indomitable courage, unflagging zeal, and expectancy of results. Yet all is to be done by the power of God's Spirit. It is a solemn fact that such a small percentage of the masses go to places of worship. Yet the bulk of the people of our great city are ready and willing to hear and receive the Gospel. It is a shame that so much money is being spent on ornate buildings, when so much might be done by erecting plain mission-halls in the crowded and needy parts of the city. The fields at home and abroad are indeed white unto harvest. Who will go forth and be God's reapers among those whom Christ has redeemed with his precious blood?

Mr. Broomhall said he solemnly believed there was no place on the face of the earth that stood so much in need of prayer and work as London. He read an extract setting forth vividly the unique importance of London in its relation to the world at large, and led in earnest prayer for the great city and for all Christian workers throughout its vast extent.

Rev. F. Meyer (Leicester) said the reason of the rapid spread of the Gospel between the ascension of Christ and the fall of Jerusalem (which closed that age) was to be found in the fact that the whole of the then known world was one Roman colony. With one law, one coinage, and one citizenship, it was easy for the messengers of the Cross to pass quickly through all its wide extent. The function exercised in that age by the Roman Empire is being served by the Anglo-Saxon race to-day. Our trade, our language, our colonisation, so all-pervading, combine to make it easy for us to go to all parts of the modern world. Every Church in the land ought surely to recognise this, and to send forth its representative as an ambassador of the Cross. We want also to see many individuals, of all classes and all occupations, going forth on their own account, with the purpose of being witnesses for Christ in distant corners of the earth. Probably, there are some now present whose hearts have been stirred with impulse and desire to lay themselves on the altar of service in many lands. We want picked men for this work—the very best men that can be found; men of intellectual gifts and rhetorical power. At the same time, we want the "nobodies." The work will be accomplished, not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of God using the weak things, the base things, the despised things, and things that are not, that no flesh may glory in his presence. There are four conditions of this service. First, the eye must be on heaven; second, the soul in the dust; third, the coal of fire on the lip; fourth, the will on the altar. Mr. Meyer closed with a pressing personal appeal to the young people before him to yield themselves to the call of God to go wherever He might direct.

CLOSING ADDRESS BY MR. RADCLIFFE.

I would have liked, if there had been time, to have read you some lines from Dr. Duff, declaring how we in Scotland and England have got into a state of dislocation; that whilst we are constructing churches and chapels, and spending our money upon them, at least nine-tenths (it would be better to say nineteen-twentieths) of that money, if we had been following Christ's directions, would have been spent on the far away heathen. And thus it comes to pass that we are in a state of dislocation. When a man has his thigh dislocated it is very difficult for him to walk. The Dean of Llandaff says that when we forget our own people, and think of those people generously whom the Lord would have us think of, then, and not till then, can we get a blessing upon London; it is when we begin to remember the Lord's command to think of the far distant ones, that we may expect a blessing on our own little England. No wonder that our city and our land are full of licentiousness, and our streets a disgrace to any heathen town. No wonder that we print Bibles and sell Testaments for a penny, and the blessing of God is not with them—the people do not even buy them. We do not need anyone to teach us this; we have it so plainly in God's own Word. We read in Haggai i., "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; . . . Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little." Why? "When ye brought it home, I did blow upon it;" or, as it may be rendered, "I did blow it away." Someone has referred to bringing in the tithes into the storehouse. We are not doing so; we refuse deliberately to do it. When a Conference like this is called that would turn our stores into worldwide blessings, the place is not filled. There are not ten thousand people coming rushing here to learn about what is occupying the bursting, longing heart of Christ. If He had compassion upon the bellies of five thousand people who were only hungry for a piece of bread, He has ten thousand times more compassion upon perishing souls in India and Africa.

We do not want, in these closing minutes of the Conference, to say so much to you about going to the heathen as about surrendering yourselves to the Lord Jesus Christ. Only let this night be a time for decision, for implicit and instant obedience. Let Christ come into every heart, and let there be surrender to Him. Ground your arms to-night at his feet, and we will not trouble you about going anywhere. Let Christ be King within you. What a mean thing it is to receive Him to be our Saviour, and not to let Him be King! If every man, woman, and child here would let Jesus be King, there will be a shout that will lift the roof off. By the power of the Holy Ghost in us, we will not only become a blessing to London, but many of us will get out of London and go to the ends of the earth.

Follow me now for a moment or two. It is said that after one hundred years of labour since Carey went to work and roused the Churches of this nation to have a little pity on the heathen, we have won from the Mohammedan and heathen world three millions of converts. But the missionaries who are near me on the platform will begin, like a doctor, to dissect the three millions; out of that number they will tell us that only 600,000 of them, or say, possibly, 750,000, are communicants. Where are your three millions gone to? They are only members of the community, something like our church-goers in London.

You recollect the Church Missionary Society published it a little while ago that all our wealthy nobility contribute almost nothing for work among the heathen. Come with me a step farther. In Alexandria, near Glasgow, a minister came to me not long since (it was in the house of dear Orr-Ewing, who threw up his business, and is now in China), and said that in the Free Church of Scotland there had scarcely been a placed minister who had gone out and settled for work among the heathen. Some young men, he said, had gone out who would have become ministers, and some others who had not been able to get churches, but no settled ministers. After Carey aroused us, we could not get a single clergyman of the Church of England to go out, and we had to borrow men from Germany. But that was only at the start, you say. Let us come down then to this evening. Where is there a beneficed clergyman who has ever given up his "living" and gone to the heathen? *

Well, now, see how the devil has been stopping God's work. We are almost all alike. Where are the laymen who have gone at their own expense until in very late years? They have gone to India—Scotchmen and Englishmen—and made fortunes, it is true. Where, until lately, had we any sisters going out? Here again we were deluded by the devil. I go back to the clergymen and ministers, to show you how the devil has thrown hindrances in the way of the work. They have not only not gone themselves, but they have made a sort of rule that no young man should go out until he has gone through a long college curriculum. One barrier after another has been raised, and thus the devil has been shutting us out from the heathen. If we look at the Jews, we have had them scattered amongst us in our large towns in England; we could have gone across the street, so to speak, and told them about the Saviour, so that many of them might have been converted. Yet we wonder that we have such things going on in London. I would say, we must not expect anything else until we begin to obey the Lord Jesus Christ. Then we shall see a mighty flood of blessing; I trust and believe it is coming.

Mr. Radcliffe went on to say that very possibly within five or seven years hence we might see on our London platforms Chinamen, or the most degraded of our black brothers from Central Africa, who have taken Christ for Saviour and King, and have come to rebuke our licentiousness, and teach the communicants their duty to the perishing heathen. He believed in his heart that God was about to make bare his mighty arm for India, and China, and Africa, in spite of all that has been said about the state of London.

On Friday morning, at seven o'clock, there was a praise meeting, at which Mr. Radcliffe gave an address based on Matt. xiv. 14; in the course of which he insisted that the feeding of the five thousand with a few loaves and fishes was intended to convey a lesson to the Lord's people in all time—to trust Him, not indeed to give loaves and fishes, though He would surely supply their temporal wants, but for the extension of his spiritual kingdom in the world through a feeble few, and for his coming and rule and reign in our hearts, making them his dwelling-place.

* Surely Mr. Radcliffe is mistaken. Was not Bishop Hannington one instance? Perhaps our readers can furnish us with others?—Ed.

MISSIONARY MEETINGS, IPSWICH.

On Sunday and Monday, Sept. 26 and 27, a vigorous and simultaneous effort (due, doubtless, to the February simultaneous meetings) was made in Ipswich by friends of the Church Missionary Society. In eight churches sermons were preached, morning, afternoon, and evening, by local clergy, assisted by Dr. Weitbrecht, of Batâla, Punjaub, Rev. W. S. Price, the well-known East African ex-missionary, and Rev. A. J. Begbie, Vicar of Framsden. At St. Margaret's Church (Vicar, Canon Garratt) £5 more was collected than last year, and similar results were, it is hoped, found elsewhere.

On Monday, meetings were held at the Town Hall, afternoon and evening, under the presidency of Archdeacon Groome and Canon Garratt respectively. Special interest was felt in the selected speakers, who represented the mission fields of India, Japan, and West Africa. Rev. J. Warren, a twenty years' labourer in Osaka, Japan, gave an animated account of the marvellous changes, social, commercial, and religious, which have earned for Japan the honourable title of "Oriental Britain."

No less interesting was the picture drawn by Dr. Weitbrecht (son of the well-known missionary) of villages in the Punjaub, and the various victories of grace over Hindoo and Mahommedan, high caste and no caste. But in the third speaker all felt even deeper interest. To see the dark-skinned grandson of Bishop Crowther, after two years' preparation at Islington Church Missionary College, pleading for his heathen countrymen, and, in view of his immediate return to the Niger as a Gospel messenger, asking the prayers of English Christians, was a spectacle which none can easily forget. Loving allusions were made, and prayer solicited for China Inland, American, and other missionaries.

BIBLE STUDIES.—33.

THE WILL OF GOD.

I.—What is his will?

(1) That all should be saved.—"Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. ii. 4). "The Lord is . . . not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Pet. iii. 9). "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live" (Ezek. xxxiii. 11).

(2) Everlasting life for all believers.—"This is the Father's will which hath sent Me, that of all which He hath given Me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of Him that sent Me, that everyone which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day" (John vi. 39, 40).

(3) Their adoption to Himself.—"Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of his will" (Eph. i. 5). "If children, then heirs" (Rom. viii. 17). "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke xii. 32).

(4) Their sanctification.—"This is the will of God, even your sanctification" (1 Thess. iv. 3). "Jesus . . . gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works" (Titus ii. 14). "Preserved blameless . . . He also will do it" (1 Thess. v. 23, 24).

(5) Their dwelling with Him.—"Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am" (John xvii. 24). "Our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with Him" (1 Thess. v. 10). "Where I am there shall also my servant be" (John xii. 26).

II.—Doing his will.

(1) We are subjects of his kingdom.—"Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. vii. 21). "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city" (Rev. xxii. 14).

(2) We enter into close relationship with and grow in likeness to Jesus.—"My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish his work" (John iv. 34). "Whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and my sister and mother" (Mark iii. 35). "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them . . . I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him" (John xiv. 21).

(3) We walk worthy of the Lord.—"Filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing," &c. (Col. i. 9, 10). "Walk circumspectly . . . redeeming the time, because the days are evil. Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is" (Eph. v. 15—17).

(4) We know of the doctrine.—"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God" (John vii. 17). "Hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments" (1 John ii. 3).

(5) We abide for ever.—"He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever" (1 John ii. 17). "My sheep hear my voice . . . they follow Me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand" (John x. 27, 28). "Your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3).

"In the sanctuary of his presence we can alone understand his will."—Anna Shipton.

"Let us suppose a steamer in a mighty river, steaming against the current. This is opposition to God's will. Let us next suppose the steamer, with its engines stopped, drifting with the current. This is submission to God's will. Finally, let us suppose the vessel to be steaming at full speed with the current. This is the cordial adoption of God's will."—Christian Progress.

THE TABERNACLE, CAMBRIDGE.—Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have closed a very successful mission here. The power of the Spirit has been experienced, and many persons have come over to the Lord's side. The evangelists are now labouring in the mining district, Wellington, Durham, and are having full houses every night.

For the Young.

THE REASON WHY.

I dare say you would have wondered as you looked at Davie's little, white sickly face, why God had thought it well to send him so much pain during his short life. He was six years old, but the lines of weariness and suffering round his mouth and eyes gave him an older look than children of that age generally have. No winter passed without severe bronchitis laying him low, and it took all the bright, summer days to get Davie well and strong again! Robin, his younger brother, was stout and sturdy, and never knew what it was to feel ache or pain. Why should one child suffer so, and the other be found free from it?

Davie could tell you the reason why.

Down in the village near his home lay a young girl dying. Davie heard his father tell how Sarah Dunn longed, with a great longing, to live till the primroses starred the green earth again, and he crept closer to his mother's side, and listened, with his grave, wistful face, to the news that the girl must pass away into eternity ere her longing was gratified.

The next February day dawned soft and mild, so breathless and warm that even Davie might be allowed to venture out. He came with his petition to his mother. Might he visit Sarah Dunn? He had something to ask her, and a present to carry her. The present consisted of three pure-leaved snowdrops that had nestled in a sunny garden nook and blossomed that very February day.

"I do not like to let you go, darling," answered his mother, "you have enough of sick-rooms and suffering; go out for a good run with Robin, and forget Sarah Dunn altogether."

"But, mother," pleaded the boy, "I am just the one to go to a sick-room, because I know all about it. I think God lets me be sick just for the sake of the other poor people who are in pain too."

And tears filled his mother's eyes, as she stooped to kiss the strangely grave face, and bade Davie go his way.

So Davie went. Down the lane, holding nurse's hand, and gaining a delicate pink flush on his pallid cheek by the gentle exercise, Davie walked. Sarah Dunn's cottage and sick room were soon reached, and nurse and Davie entered together. And then Davie walked up to the bed, and laid his flower-offering in Sarah's thin hand.

"I thought you would like them, because I heard you were sick," he said.

The girl thanked him, and looked lovingly at the flowers.

"I wanted to ask you something," said Davie, very gravely, gazing intently at the sick girl's face. "Have you got Jesus to be with you all day long, and to help you bear your pain? And, if you die soon, have you got hold of Jesus' hand to help you in the valley? You see," he continued, "I know all about it, for I have been very sick myself, and I could not have borne it without Jesus. Do you think you have Him?"

"Yes, I do," said the girl, with a sudden burst of tears, "and God bless you for speaking like that to me."

"I often think," said Davie, thoughtfully, "that's why God lets me be sick. It is just that I may know how good Jesus is, and tell other sick people how He helps us to bear pain, and to like even to die. Don't you think that's the reason why, Sarah?"

"I do, indeed," said the girl, as she kissed the child.

"And so do I," said nurse, brushing away a tear. "We must go now, Master Davie."

And when his mother and I talked it over we agreed that God's ways are always wise and always best, and that out of suffering Davie would gain a power for ministering to weary souls that he could learn in no other school.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give portraits, with accompanying biographical sketch, of Mr. and Mrs. Axel Gustafson.

We are desired to state that the Missionary Conference at Exeter Hall, fixed for next month, has been postponed.

In order to furnish an adequately full report of the deeply interesting Conference last week at Mildmay, we have been compelled to omit our notes of the Liverpool Conference and many articles. Friends who desire to fan the flame of missionary zeal might profitably circulate our present issue among their younger friends.

We have frequently called attention to the painful fact that low wages are the most influential factor in driving girls into a life of shame. It is with thankfulness we observe other journals giving prominence to the opinion. We are satisfied that when the public mind once becomes thoroughly disabused of the mistaken notion that in most cases evil courses are voluntarily chosen, and grasp the idea that perhaps after all economic conditions have more to do with the matter than has hitherto been generally supposed, the foundation will be laid for large-hearted and extensive remedial and preventive action with regard to the sad testimony of the streets.

Recently our contemporary, The Church Times, had an excellent paper upon the subject, in which, after quoting the starvation wages, in no case exceeding eight shillings per week only, earned after wearing toil from dawn to dark, the writer mentions a mission woman who could "point to at least sixty girls working in one factory who eked out their scanty wages by leading disreputable lives." She asserts that "it was impossible for a girl or woman wholly to maintain herself on the rate of pay ordinarily given, and, consequently, such girls drift, only too naturally, into the 'outcast' class."

That "consequently" goes very far to shift the responsibility from the outcast to the employer who does not pay a sufficient wage to keep the toiler's body and soul together. We would commend its thoughtful consideration to all such, for whatever their recognised business may be, they are in reality engaged in the devil's work of sending girls upon the midnight streets. But the purchasers who will have cheapness at any price are equally guilty.

The son of the Premier of Japan is arranging with publishers for text-books in English for use in the schools of Japan, and it has been commanded that the English language shall be taught in every school of the Empire. To what wondrous possibilities with regard to the spread of Christianity does this fact point!

We have received three letters opposing our remarks on the marriage of a deceased wife's sister. We have no space to discuss this subject, nor any desire to advocate such marriages. All we claim is liberty of conscience. It may be very clear to some that the Levitical law prohibited such marriages; to others it is equally clear that it did not. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." No legislation which goes beyond the conscientious convictions of a people will be respected by them. And Christians quite as enlightened and sincere are found on the permissive as the prohibitory side of this discussion.

There are, again, multitudes who have no conscience at all about it; and who will form such alliances, if not with the sanction of marriage, then without it. We protest against a legislation which constitutes them adulterers and bastardises their children, notwithstanding that such marriages are sanctioned by law in our colonies and in other countries.

The Bishop of Oxford, on the 30th ult., instituted Rev. A. M. W. Christopher to an Honorary Canonry in Christchurch Cathedral. Our readers will be glad to hear of this recognition of a very worthy minister of Jesus Christ.

Heads of missions are requested, for their own good, to note this. A lady writes that out of limited means she sends contributions to various missions, giving her full address, but seldom receives an acknowledgment. We hope this statement of the omission will lead to more care being taken by those who have been negligent in this matter.

The work of the International Oriental Congress, which has just closed its week of conference in Vienna, possesses interest to the Christian as well as to the scholar. Three hundred men of distinction were present from Germany, England, British India, France, Russia, Greece, Turkey, China, and the North of Europe. Young Hindoos and Chinese were present, and produced a powerful impression by their learning, firmness, and candour. Inquiries respecting the meaning of Oriental words and literature will now be more systematically pursued, and promise invaluable results in reference to Christian evidences and interpretation.

The Bible received due honour and respect in this Congress. An important discussion took place respecting the poetry of the Psalms, their ancient rhythm, and the music that accompanied them. We shall doubtless have more light on these interesting aspects of the Temple worship. It was shown that translations of the British and Foreign Bible Society has now made the Bible accessible to 500 millions of those to whom its teaching was closed not a long space ago.

The key-note struck by the Bishop of Ripon, as President of the Church Congress, was fitted to the times. The Church of England, he held, should not clamour about her rights, but should aim to aid, direct, and elevate the life of mankind; she should be as one who serves; she had happily got out of the non possumus stage in relation to Church reform; she needed simplicity, variety, more of Christ; it was not pedigree or coronets that would make her great, but Christian graces—charity towards one another, courtesy towards opponents, and sympathy for men.

In the matter of internal reform, the discussions of the Congress laid stress on reform of Convocation and in the system of ecclesiastical patronage. To guard against abuse, and yet to give parishioners a voice in the rule of the Church and in the selection of their pastor, are objects that would not only remove strong objections, but would go to restore primitive order. No less important and timely is reform advocated with respect to the pew system. In all denominations this system alienates multitudes from public worship, and is, in many places, a flagrant scandal and stumbling-block. It is rather discouraging to find that, after an inadequate discussion on Recreations, The Times reporter thus sums up the debate:—

> On the whole, the feeling seemed to be in favour of using dancing, novels, and the drama, as means of recreation and social elevation.

Christians passing through Havre are invited to go and see the Sailors' Rest and the need of real Gospel work among British seamen. It is only a work for experienced ladies and for men. Both are needed. The drink is the monster, and the root of nearly all the evil. A detective who has been at Havre for some months says he never saw such wickedness in his old beat, the New Cut, as at Havre; and this is the testimony of others.

It is always profitable to go from vague generalisations and unauthorised opinions to direct testimony and authoritative statement. Most people are familiar with the accusations which from time to time have been brought against mission work in India, chiefly by hurried travellers and irreligious military men, either writing at random, or basing a thoughtless attack upon a great system on the failure of an individual. In striking contradistinction to such calumnies is the tribute recently published by the Government of India in a Blue Book:—

> No statistics can give a fair view of all that the missionaries have done. The moral tone of their preaching is recognised by hundreds who do not follow them as converts. The lessons which they inculcate have given to the people new ideas, not only on purely religious questions, but on the nature of evil, the obligations of law, and the motives by which human conduct should be regulated. Insensibly a higher standard of moral conduct is becoming familiar to the public. The Government of India cannot but acknowledge the great obligation under which it is laid by the benevolent exertions made by the 600 missionaries whose blameless example and self-denying labours are infusing new vigour into the life of the great populations placed under English rule.

In those cases in which Christianity is blamed because it has failed to regenerate society, observation will generally reveal the fact that the failure has been due to the imperfect realisation of the idea, and not to any defect in the idea itself. The religion of Christ has within it the solution of all our social problems. If it remains a painful and discreditable fact that these difficulties still are unsolved, we are bound to attribute it to this, that we apply the test of the teachings of Jesus to such matters only after we have fined them down, and shorn them of the strength that would make them potent in their application and effect.

☞ The Evangelical Alliance and ourselves have received a great number of letters in reference to the important address on "The Papacy," by Dr. Wylie, at the Conference at Ryde. Many of these letters have been forwarded to him. In response to very numerous applications, arrangements have been made for the publication of this address as early as possible. Dr. Wylie is now revising it, and it will be published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, in conjunction with the Evangelical Alliance.

CHRISTIANS IN COUNCIL.

They that fear the Lord are speaking often one to another in these days. Last week we had the Church Congress at Wakefield, the Baptist Union Meetings at Bristol, the Clifton Conference, and the Missionary Conventions at Mildmay and Liverpool, all taking place simultaneously; and these are to be followed in succeeding weeks by the Dublin Convention, the Congregational Union Meetings at Norwich, and Missionary Conferences at Cardiff, Sunderland, Newcastle, and Manchester. Surely the Lord hearkens and hears, and a book of remembrance is written before Him for those that fear the Lord, and that think upon his name.

The Record says that "the Congress of 1886 will be remembered as the Reform Congress." The President (the Bishop of Ripon), we are told, spoke "graceful words marked by happiness of expression and elevation of thought, with a lightness of touch seldom attained in a written speech." But "there was more light than leading in Dr. Boyd Carpenter's address." "It is," continues the writer, "a noticeable feature of the late Congress, that neither in the President's address nor in any subsequent utterance, so far as we have noticed, has there been any marked statement which will be remembered as revealing a hitherto unobserved drift of public opinion, or as initiating and directing some new movement. We mean a speech such as Prince Bismarck makes from time to time, which takes hold of us not on account of its manner, which may be very defective, but for the gravity of its matter." Nevertheless, "we gather from the general tone of the Congress the strongest encouragement. Public opinion amongst Churchmen seems in a peculiarly reasonable phase; and the disposition to push forward real reforms, and to do so persistently and prudently, with a view not to a showy programme but to effectual action, is all that can be desired."

When we note that not only subjects relating to the Establishment were treated, such as Disestablishment, Patronage, and Endowments, the Church in relation to State questions and to the Rural Populations, the Increase of the Episcopate, Tithes, the great question of a Representative Church Body, and how and to what extent the laity are to be represented therein: but also more spiritual matters of equal interest to all banches of the Church of Christ, such as Christian Evidences, How the Lapsed Masses may be won, Foreign Missions, How Missionaries are to deal with Polygamy in Heathen and Mohammedan countries—the recent Congress, with the "present reasonableness of public opinion among Churchmen," and their "disposition to push forward real reforms persistently and prudently," must be regarded as a sign of the times, having great significance.

We believe that the end is nigh, that "the coming of the kingdom draweth near." But whether that nearness be measured by days or centuries, there is no doubt that we are in a transition era, that old methods of thought and action are breaking up, and that while the truth is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, our conceptions and apprehensions of it are passing into other phases, which may be marked on the one hand by advance in truth, and on the other by retrogression into error. Therefore we greatly need the good and guiding hand of our God upon us.

The Presidential address of Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, at the opening of the Baptist Union, was an important manifesto, in the form of an appeal to his hearers to "stand in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." With very much of this address all good men will agree, but we do not think that a true idea of the present will be conveyed to the children of this generation by comparing Church and Dissent, Conformists and Nonconformists, as they were three hundred years ago, with what they are to-day. There is a large amount of evangelical truth and testimony in the Church of England, and there is a large amount of broad-churchism, under the name of "modern thought," in Nonconformity; so that the Church of England does not represent worldliness, nor Nonconformity unworldliness, in anything like the same proportions as in the days that produced the Puritans.

We warmly echo Mr. Williams' declaration that "the neglect of the Bible means the decay of Puritanism." And no less do we sympathise with The Nonconformist and Independent in saying that "a knowledge of the substance of Scripture, amounting to command of its contents, was, we fear, more common fifty years ago than it is now; and yet no age was ever so richly furnished as this with means and facilities for the study of the written Word. Advances there have been in our knowledge of the origin and history of the books of the Bible; but the knowledge thus gained, so far from making study less necessary, makes it more so, and enlarges the promise of a rich reward. 'The children, who in a few years will fill the posts we occupy, will not be Puritans unless they delight in the Word of God, and make his testimonies their counsellors.' History well attests this proposition." It is cause for deep thankfulness that it has been emphasised from the chair of the Baptist Union.

The series of Missionary Conferences begun last year at Manchester, carried thence to Leicester and Mildmay, and to be continued in the towns we have named above, and in many others, are a manifest token of the awakening which is taking place with regard to the dying millions of the heathen world. Dr. Dykes said at Bristol that through natural increase, and through Christian influence in arresting pestilence, restraining wars, and relieving famine, the vast heathen populations are growing far faster—Mr. Grattan Guinness says seventy times faster—than we are converting them. If this be so, and there is little reason to question it, no amount of money, no increase of Christian enthusiasm at home, no multiplication of missionaries abroad, will of themselves avail to meet this gigantic and overwhelming need. Nothing short of the fulness of power given to our Lord Jesus in heaven and on earth, made ours in actual possession by the omnipotent operation of the Holy Ghost, can equip the Church of Christ for her mighty mission. We must have waiting upon God as at Pentecost; we must have a sevenfold Sabbath-rest of faith in our risen Lord; we must be all with one accord in one place, and that place the throne of grace, and Pentecostal power will be given, and grace to help in time of need.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER held a series of special services at Winsford, in the Methodist Free Church, closing on the 23rd ult. There has been much blessing and large congregations. Amongst the converts was an old man, seventy-two years of age. Mr. Weaver goes to Wimbledon on the 17th instant, and afterwards to Norwood, if his health will permit.

THE LATE DR. JOHN KER.

By the death of Dr. John Ker, who died suddenly and unexpectedly on the evening of the 4th inst., the United Presbyterian Church has lost her greatest preacher, and Scotland one of her most gifted sons. Distinguished as a student for his brilliant attainments and fervent piety, he devoted himself early in life to the work of the ministry. His first charge was in Alnwick, where his poetic diction, striking thoughts, and intense earnestness attracted large congregations. He was not allowed to remain long there; he was called to a wider sphere of labour. In Glasgow he more than sustained the reputation he had already made. He became a power in the city, and his pulpit was a light set on a hill. He spared not himself in efforts to do good. Besides preaching on the Sabbath, week-day lectures, and house-to-house visitation, he took a special interest in the young. He organised and presided over classes which promoted their intellectual and spiritual welfare. The long-continued strain was too much for a body never strong: he broke down, and had to retire from active duties. For years he was a helpless invalid. When careful nursing and travel in foreign lands restored him to a measure of health, he could not be idle. His shattered nervous system forbade his resuming pulpit work, but a suitable sphere opened up for him in the teaching of Homiletics to the divinity students of his own denomination. A great preacher himself, he was well qualified to teach others how to preach. His lessons are bearing fruit in sermons wiser and better because of his influence.

Dr. Ker was a many-sided man. First and foremost he was an able minister of the New Testament, rejoicing in the honour which belongs to an ambassador of the Cross. He was also a scholar, knowing many subjects better than those who made a special study of them. He was a writer who could have left a mark on his country's literature, if he was ambitious to do so; but he preferred to write living epistles on the hearts and lives of his hearers. He published one volume of sermons, which has enjoyed a phenomenal success. It is full of deeply spiritual thinking, clothed in language at once simple, and rich in literary charm. It ran through several editions, and is still in demand. His society was eagerly sought. He excelled in conversation, touching no topic without adorning it; and through all he said ran the saintliness which came from walking with God. D. S.

THE LIVERPOOL BIBLE CARRIAGE.—The report of another year's work has been issued, and it shows what an efficient instrument for the propagation of the Gospel such carriages are. During the year ending June, 1886, about 164 towns and villages have been visited, chiefly in the west and central districts of England. The receipts from the sale of Bibles, Testaments, &c., amounted to £558, and, besides the Gospel teaching which this represents, the word is preached at the various villages visited. The number of Bibles and Testaments distributed amounted to 31,372, and the other publications to 174,109. Information respecting the movements of the carriage may be obtained from Mr. Northcote Willy, 17, Severn-terrace, Worcester.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS' ASSOCIATION.—On Monday week the members and friends of this Association met at the Metropolitan Tabernacle to hear the report of the work during the past year. After tea, to which a large number sat down, a public meeting was held in the lecture-hall, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon presiding. In his introductory remarks he said that the first stage in life was to get good, the next and higher stage is to do good, and the best combination is when we get good and do good at the same time. Mr. Elvin, the secretary, then read some statistics as to progress of the Mission, which showed that the open-air work had been vigorously carried on, as had also the work in the various mission halls. Messrs. Branscombe, Gregory, Marshall, Phillips, G. E. Elvin, and Evans, members of the Association, spoke, and several solos and anthems were rendered during the evening.

THE SALISBURY CONFERENCE.—2.

We have said that the little after-dinner talk about the work of God is one of the most interesting features of this Conference. Rev. D. B. Hankin spoke very warmly of Mr. E. P. Hammond's visit to Mildmay. All his choir boys had been brought to the Lord. One went back, and all the others had a prayer-meeting about it. They saw him in the street, had prayer with him on the pavement, and he was restored. The churchwarden had a list of ninety boys with whom he corresponds. One day Mr. Hankin went into one of his schools. A most unearthly stillness fell upon them, and that day twenty were brought to the Lord.

Miss Macleod spoke of the Travellers' Aid branch of the Y.W.C.A. After The Pall Mall revelations a notice was put in The Christian that any girl coming up to London would be met and taken care of. On the following Monday there was one letter, ill written and just legible, from a poor mother in a remote village. Her daughter had a situation offered on the other side of London, but she had been sorely troubled how she should get her across the great city. She had prayed for weeks about it, without any way opening. At last a lady brought her The Christian, and showed her the notice from the Y.W.C.A., which she welcomed as the answer to her prayer. Her daughter was met, and arrived safely at her destination. When it is known that 8000 girls and young women come to London every week, and that wicked people are watching for them, the value of this Travellers' Aid will be appreciated.

Miss Reade, of Y.W.C.A., Bromley, said they had been praying for some way of showing kindness to the girls working in a factory at St. Mary Cray. They saw in The Christian a picture of factory girls at tea at Dr. Barnardo's, and thought that would be the very thing. The young women subscribed among themselves £7 or £8, and invited 100 girls from St. Mary Cray, paid their fares, and gave them tea. After that the girls in another house went to St. Mary Cray, and gave another hundred girls a tea there. A Bible-class has been formed, and 67 take Our Own Gazette.

Rev. J. J. Luce said that during a mission he was having at Gloucester his helpers were nearly all working men. They met of their own accord at 7.30 for prayer, and then went and brought in twenty or thirty every night.

Mr. George Holland one day got among some rough boys, with the result that he was unable to recall an address he had carefully prepared. But the invitation of Jesus to the weary and heavy laden was pressed on his mind, and now, fourteen years after, he was hearing of souls blessed through that unprepared address given him of God.

Rev. J. Wilkinson had gone a few years ago to a locality near Buxton, which seemed to have been neglected and God-forsaken for a hundred years. On his arrival he was received with a muffled peal, and hissed from the platform. But the Gospel preached in its simplicity had won its way, and now a good work is going on among young men, young women, and railway men.

Mrs. Thwaites contributed a very touching story of a conversion, and of meetings specially for nurses, in the Y.W.C.A., in which she is an indefatigable worker.

Mr. Coate, a young farmer near Blandford, said that after he had been converted he had been working in cottage meetings. Captain Smith suggested to him to have a tent. He wrote to the clergymen all round, but they did not welcome the proposal. One sent half a sovereign, but would rather the tent did not come into his parish. The first tent was put up in September three years ago, and was a success. This year they have had four tents in the county. He had been encouraged in open-air work. He had gone alone outside a large public-house in his neighbourhood; some of the people would come out to hear.

Mr. Harrington was the son of a sailor—hated the sight of a red coat. Hoped he should never have anything to do with soldiers. After the Indian Mutiny the Lord led him into the military branch of the service. He had a little hut to live in, and another for an office. Three soldiers came and asked if he used the office of an evening. No. What did they want with it? For singing, said one. Another nudged him, and said, "Hymns." He heard them singing, but would not go near them. But his heart would go out to them. Then he went and listened outside. They were thanking God for the hut, and praying Him to send Mr. Harrington to be their leader in Christian work. He went in among them, and has been working among soldiers ever since. There was a regiment at Moultan, all Irish, and he was told he could never do anything with them. To his first meeting one came; but before the year was out there were seventy at the Lord's table. He endeavoured to get places for the soldiers to meet in. Sir Robert Macleod, and Sir John Lawrence the Governor-General, heard of it, and now the prayer room is part of the soldiers' accommodation in India.

The praise-meeting after the Conference has always been a time of special blessing; never more so than on this occasion.

MR. S. WALTON AT GLOUCESTER.

Our hearts are full of praise for the blessing experienced during Mr. Spencer Walton's mission. Night after night the numbers increased, the open-air services helping much to bring the people in, and many who came once were seen the next night as seekers after salvation. The speaker dwelt much upon the awfulness of sin, especially that of unbelief, and the necessity of repentance toward God. The result was soon seen in a deep work of conviction and the consequent joy of realised salvation. The addresses at times were most solemn and heart-searching, as the preacher spoke of the Lamb of God, his sufferings and glory.

The afternoon Bible-readings on the Christian Life were well attended. The possibilities of faith and full sufficiency in Christ for a life of rest and victory were declared, and true separation from the world and devotedness to Christ strongly urged. These readings proved a great help to many.

The children, too, were not forgotten, three services for them being held in the old church of St. Nicholas. The last one was most remarkable for the blessing manifested, in fact, one of the best meetings of the whole mission. A great breaking down followed the address, and all over the church, seekers, old and young, were to be found on their knees weeping, a good many of the first class of boys were too much broken to leave. It was a grand sight to see a whole row of rough fellows brought one by one to rejoice in the Lord. The Gloucester Fair was on for the last two days, a great attraction to children, but we heard that some of our young friends refrained from going, feeling it was not the right place for young Christians. J. J. L.

THE BRETON MISSION.—A large number of converts have been baptized at Tremel, and a general movement is taking place in the district. Among the last candidates was a case for great rejoicing. One Sunday Pasteur Lecoat was preaching, when a man came in, after walking thirty-one miles, ostensibly to consult the pastor (who holds a diploma of jurisprudence) upon a point of law. This question had to be deferred until Monday, but the all-important question was settled there and then, and he returned home rejoicing. There he made a compact with his wife and two daughters, whom he had greatly persecuted because of their belief, which, however, they had not openly avowed. They should henceforth publicly serve the Lord. They have since been baptized. The schools are now again in full work, and the meetings for the winter commenced. The Trinitarian Society announces that the Old Testament, translated by M. Lecoat into Breton, for the first time in an available form, is now passing through the press. The hon. secretary is Mr. J. Wates, 4, Princes-road, Lewisham-hill, S.E.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

MISSIONARIES FOR THE NEW HEBRIDES.—Messrs. Thomas Watt Leggatt and Alexander Morton were ordained as Presbyterian missionaries at the Scotch Church, Melbourne, in July. They were to sail in the Dayspring on September 25 to Mallicolo, which will be their station. Rev. J. G. Paton selected them for this work when he was in Scotland.

TAHITI.—Rev. J. Green, who has been labouring in Tahiti twenty-six years, is about to retire in favour of the French Protestant missionaries who have been at work in the islands for some years past in conjunction with the London society. As Tahiti belongs to the French it is deemed advisable to hand over the work to the French Protestant Society, more especially as its agents are working so successfully.—Christian Leader.

LEEDS MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY commenced on Sunday, October 4. Sermons were preached in the Oxford-place Chapel by Rev. John Walton, M.A. in the morning, and in the evening by Rev. W. King Coppin, from West Africa. The missionary breakfast on Monday was held at the Headingley College, and Dr. R. N. Young, the President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, took the chair at the subsequent meeting. In the evening the public meeting was held in Oxford-place Chapel. Alderman Quibell, of Newark, presided, and, after the report was read, Dr. Young gave a spirited address, advocating more aggressive missionary work.

FAREWELL OF AMERICAN MISSIONARIES.—On September 15, a valedictory meeting was held in Pilgrim Hall, Boston, U.S.A., to bid farewell to fifteen missionaries, who are about to start to their respective spheres of labour. Their names and destinations are:—Rev. G. F. Montgomery, Rev. W. W. Merd, Miss A. D. Graham, and Miss S. Webb, to Central Turkey; Dr. and Mrs. D. M. B. Thom, Miss. H. L. Dewey and Miss M. G. Nutting, to Eastern Turkey; Rev. L. S. Crawford, Miss G. Greenough and Miss M. E. Sheldon, to Western Turkey; Rev. L. Bissell, D.D., and Miss J. Bissell to Marahti, and Rev. and Mrs. G. Rowland to Japan. The hall was filled and the meeting was very enthusiastic. Dr. Clark addressed the missionaries, and afterwards Messrs. Montgomery and Mead said a few words; the latter, going for the first time, expressed his determination to spend his life in the field. Among others, Rev. J. K. Browne, of Eastern Turkey, and Rev. Geo. W. Wood, D.D., one of the oldest missionaries in the service of the Congregational Board, sought to encourage the departing band. Drs. M. L. Gordon and Cyrus Hamlin, also briefly addressed the meeting.

MARY WARDELL CONVALESCENT HOME.—Opened by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales in July, 1884, this Home at Stanmore was the first established for persons recovering from scarlet fever. Between September, 1884, and December, 1885, one hundred and thirty-eight patients were admitted, the majority being under twelve years of age. Great precautions are taken against infection—a special conveyance is used to fetch patients, and there is a laundry attached. Unfortunately the Home is not fully furnished, and an effort is being made to fit the other rooms for the reception of patients, and to build the suitable laundry. Towards these objects a lady has offered an annual subscription of £10 for four years if nineteen others will follow her example. Fourteen responses have been received up to the present time. Information respecting the Home may be obtained from Miss Mary Wardell, 55, Stanley-gardens, Belsize, N.W.

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.

THE annual gathering of Christian friends was held on three days of last week, in the Victoria rooms, and a goodly number responded to the invitation of the convener, Rev. J. Ormiston, Rector of Mary-le-Port. On Monday evening there was a devotional meeting, when earnest prayer was offered for the Divine blessing to rest upon all the engagements of the week. Prayer was asked on behalf of the venerable Rev. H. Barne, who has for so many years been a constant attendant at the Conference, and the conductor of the Bible-readings, but is now laid aside by illness. Next morning, at seven, there was an early prayer-meeting, when an earnest hour was spent in supplication that the Holy Spirit might graciously touch the hearts of speakers and hearers.

SIN: ITS ORIGIN, NATURE, AND EFFECTS.

At eleven o'clock the Conference was opened in the large hall of the Victoria Rooms, and the attendance appeared to be as numerous as that usually seen at the morning meetings. Mr. ORMISTON, on taking the chair, said that to-day's subject was, some might think, a sombre one: "God's mind and man's mind contrasted concerning Sin—its origin, its nature, and its effects." But unless we are clear in our thoughts and feelings respecting sin, we shall not be able to appreciate the second topic of Conference: "God's Free and Sovereign Grace." At Mr. Ormiston's suggestion a telegram of fraternal greeting was sent to the Missionary Conference at Mildmay; later in the day a warm message of response was received.

Rev. TALBOT A. L. GREAVES, Vicar of Clifton, spoke first upon the topic for the day. Perhaps the chief value of his address consisted in the ground he took, that on the subject of sin we must take God's view of it, and not man's. We must find a place in our theology for the fall of man. Men are continually evolving a god out of their own consciousness, and this is a source of great error. The human mind has invented the strange doctrine of "the evolution of humanity," and we are told that sin is only one of the qualities resulting from man's brute ancestry—a quality not yet fully eliminated. Of course, when people talk after this fashion there is no room for the fall of man or for the Atonement. It is, however, contradicted by fact. What evidence can there be adduced of man having advanced from a brute ancestry? None. The coils of the serpent may have become more graceful in the progress of civilisation, the various colours of the skin may have become more delicately shaded: but the venom that lurks within is untouched, unmitigated, by any process of development. And thus as regards the guilt of sin, the contrast between God's judgment and man's is equally great because estimated according to totally different standards.

Mr. BENJAMIN THOMAS inclined to think that the subject of this morning was one more for the room alone with God than for a public meeting like the present. My heart, he said, seems to say, with Joseph's brethren, "God has found out the iniquity of thy servants;" and I feel as Nathan felt when David thundered into his ear the stern words, "Thou art the man." One feels that the only place we can take is that of the poor woman who crept into the Pharisee's house, and there washed the Saviour's feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head. As to the "Origin of Sin," which was one of the topics before them, he thought that the Apostle James gives the true and simple answer: "Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God." In Proverbs the high look is sin, the transgression of the law is sin, the thought of foolishness is sin. In proceeding, he pointed out that sin is like a vampire bat, sucking out the life from what it fastens on. He also dwelt upon the great mistake some were making in trying to distinguish sins when they spoke of "white lies," and such things. There is no such thing as a little sin, because there is no sin that can be put away, except by the blood of Christ. We do not want to be asking, "Is this wrong?" or, "Is that bad?" The question always to be asked is, "Is it sin?"

The meeting was closed by a few remarks from Colonel SAVILL upon the universality of the effects of sin.

THE AFTERNOON MEETINGS

were all interesting and all well attended. Rev. Dr. DOUDNEY presided over a meeting on behalf of Aged Pilgrims, and in his opening address gave an interesting description of a series of visits he had paid to some of the aged who were receiving help from the Society. It was very beautiful, he said, to hear the testimony of one after another who were about to quit this mortal state, cheerfully owning how good their God had been to them. Mr. J. E. HAZLETON, the secretary, said the Society existed solely for the comfort of those who are of the household of faith. It was Protestant, he need hardly say, and while it was undenominational it was not latitudinarian. Rev. W. Frith and Rev. James Ormiston added a few words in support of the Society's claims.

Several other interesting meetings were held, but there is not space now to refer to them.

In the evening the subject of the morning's meetings was resumed in the large hall, Rev. J. Ormiston, Rev. T. Davies, Mr. Stantcomb, and Mr. Inskip being the speakers.

On Wednesday morning the topic was

GRACE: ITS FOUNT, ITS SUBJECTS, AND ITS OPERATIONS.

It had been expected that Rev. H. Barne would open the discussion of it, but in his regretted absence his place was taken by Rev. W. ELLIOTT, of Plymouth. In olden time, he said, Pagan priests had learnt to adorn the heads of their idol gods with things borrowed from Christianity, and the same kind of thing is going on now in another way. Rome has not changed, unless to become a great deal worse. Every priest in it was sworn to declare his adhesion to deadly error, and the Church was in a far worse condition than when Martin Luther came out of it. He begged all to remember, in dealing with the errors of Rome, which ever opposed the doctrines of grace, that they had a far greater enemy to contend against than Cardinal Newman. They wrestled not with flesh and blood, but with evil spirits in high places, and the victory would not depend upon them, but on God.

Rev. W. FRITH spoke upon the source of grace, the discipline of grace, and the preservation of grace. The source was the God of all grace, for it can be traced to no other fountain-head. Then discipline, or affliction, was the evidence of the Father's hand, and that was the preservation unto glory which grace guarantees.

Dr. DOUDNEY said he had been endeavouring to spell the word "grace" for sixty-two years, and he believed he was further off than ever.

In the afternoon there was a very interesting meeting of the

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Lord CAVAN could not take his usual post as President, as he was engaged at Mildmay. He wrote a kindly letter, expressing his regret, and testifying to his unabated interest in the Society's good work. Mr. ORMISTON, who presided, said that his acquaintance with every part of the Society's work, after thorough investigation of it, enabled him to speak as cordially of it as ever. It should be borne in mind that it was not devoted exclusively to Roman Catholics, but took in the general population of the country. The Readers went upon the sound principle that unless men be born again they cannot see the kingdom of God. They take the Bible to the doors of the humbler classes, and the cottagers gladly throw open their doors to receive them. They were never more cordially received than they are at present. This was something for which they might be profoundly thankful, and enabled them to contemplate the future with hope. Among the Society's fifty Readers in Ireland there are men strong in faith, who were once Roman Catholics, and they are fitted to speak with authority to those who are in the darkness, out of which they have happily emerged.

Rev. PRESTON BALL said he had been for some time the Examining Chaplain, to find out whether those who offered themselves as Readers were suitable for their posts, and he had been greatly pleased with them. He spoke of them as men well fitted to the work in which they were engaged. Rev. W. ELLIOTT, of Plymouth, who had known the Society since 1849, had some very pleasant memories of the Readers, and the manner in which they did their work.

In the evening there was an excellent meeting in the large hall, when addresses were given by Rev. J. Ormiston, Rev. W. Rolleston, Rev. F. Beship, Rev. J. Battersby, and Rev. Dr. Gregg.

On Thursday morning Rev. H. E. BROOKE delivered the closing address of the Conference, after Rev. J. Ormiston had read and commented upon the 45th Psalm, with special relation to the subject of the morning.

"GLORY, ITS SOURCE, ITS INCREASE, AND FRUITION."

Mr. BROOKE said it was desirable to have clear views as to the meaning of the word "Glory." He defined it as the recognition and reward of merit. This definition at once excludes all Adam's fallen children, as such, from any participation in it, "for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." But there is One who could say to his Father, "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do; and now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with thine own self. Here is merit justly claiming its reward, and obtaining it too, for in 1 Peter i. 21, it is written, "God raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory." Thus it is seen that Christ is the only One who can claim glory as his due; but then He bestows it freely upon all his people. "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them." And thus the glory to which the believer cannot lay claim in himself, becomes his through the free gift of Christ. True believers have this in Him as something of which they are called to partake because it is his. "Whereunto He called you by our Gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. ii. 14). This contemplation of glory as due to Christ alone, nevertheless, as being what his people are called to share, sets at rest many questions which at times agitate them. Mr. Brooke went on to speak of another aspect of glory as connected with the Second Coming of the Lord. It is, he said in conclusion, to his coming kingdom and glory He hath called us, and this is, and should be, practically the great hope of the Church.

In the evening the observance of the Lord's Supper at the Memorial Church brought the Conference to a close.

OBITUARY.

MRS. MARY JANE TALBOT CROSBIE.

WE regret to announce the death, after a long illness, of this lady, the wife of Mr. Talbot Crosbie, of Ardfert Abbey. The eldest daughter of Major-General Sir Henry Torrens, K.C.B., who was born 1811, she married Sir Ralph A. Anstruther, Bart. Being left a widow in 1863, she married Mr. Talbot Crosbie, in 1868, and since that time has lived almost continuously in County Kerry—beloved and esteemed by all. The Kerry Evening Post, in an obituary notice, says:—

> Alike by the earnest philanthropy of her life as by the perfect calm and confidence which marked her contemplation of the slow approach of death, she left behind her a valuable testimony to the truth and efficacy of the Christian faith. Ever active in search of opportunities of doing good, and prompted by the grateful love of one who knew herself the subject of the redeeming grace of Christ her Lord, she laboured and spent for the poor around her, sought by wise and systematic effort to stimulate habits of thrift among them, and received for her reward their esteem and affection.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—October 17, Mark iii. 1—19; October 18, Mark iii. 20—35; October 19, Mark iv. 1—12; October 20, Mark iv. 13—29; October 21, Mark iv. 30—41; October 22, Mark v. 1—20; October 23, Mark 5, 21—34.

THE NEW BISHOP OF MELBOURNE.—Rev. Field Flowers Goe has been appointed to succeed Bishop Moorhouse. He has been rector of St. George's, Bloomsbury, since 1877, having been rector of Sunderland for four years previous to that date. He is an evangelical preacher, a good organiser, and hard worker. The Bishop designate has also considerable experience in mission work. At the Church Congress at Bath in 1873, he referred to a mission week as "the most sacred week he had ever known."

THE PRINCESS HOUSE (Y.W.C.A.), at 106, Brompton-road, has enlarged its premises. Not only have the back premises of 108 been taken, but the upper part of the house as well. It now contains a Christian workroom, in which family prayer is conducted every morning, and dress and mantle making carried on by one of the members. This completes the work of the branch, No. 106, being a restaurant for women, those who come for bodily food find spiritual food as well. The new mission-room (holding 330 people) was crowded on the opening night, Sept. 15. The dedication service was conducted by Rev. Ravenscroft Stewart, Rev. J. Goundry (Congregational), and Rev. B. Buxton. God's power was mightily felt then, and at subsequent meetings in the mission-room. H. N.

TIMES OF REFRESHING IN IRVINE.

For some time back our good old town, sacred to the memory of David Dickson, who did a remarkable work for God here in his day, has enjoyed much blessing. The work may be said to have begun nearly a year ago, when, on the occasion of my fourth anniversary, Rev. Mr. Henderson, of Busby, preached to the people, and at the evening service gave an account of the awakening in Busby. The story of grace as told by Mr. Henderson produced a deep impression that evening, and at an after-meeting not a few remained to be dealt with. Then my brother minister, Rev. R. S. Macaulay, and myself, had a series of united evangelistic meetings, which were attended with some blessing.

In the beginning of summer, however, we were favoured with a visit of some students from Edinburgh University. Several splendid meetings were held by them in the different churches in town, and the hearts of God's people were filled with gratitude for the remarkable blessing that followed their labours. All classes, rich and poor alike, came to the meetings, and large numbers—especially men—found peace in believing. Much to the disappointment of many of us the students' meetings were brought too soon to a close. Several of us then felt that some means must be employed to carry on the work which God, in answer to our prayers, had begun in our midst, but difficulty after difficulty cropped up, and every door seemed shut.

A young man, however, from Glasgow, named Mr. Govan, whose family are well known in the city, and carry on a great deal of Christian work, offered to hold a series of meetings, and several men engaged in God's work here formed themselves into a committee, and began the meetings. The first week they were poorly attended, but after that the meetings grew in numbers and deepened in interest, and were successful in every respect. Mr. Govan was greatly owned of God, and many, very many—especially young women—were brought savingly under the power of God's truth.

In September we were looking forward to another visit of Edinburgh students, but our hopes were dashed to the ground. We were led, in the providence of God, to invite Mr. J. M. Scroggie. Mr. Scroggie could only give us a week; but, short as the time was, we resolved to accept it. Under his auspices we had a series of excellent meetings. His addresses from first to last were most powerful. There were several interesting cases of conversion, and it was felt that if Mr. Scroggie could only have remained for a few weeks, a mighty work for God would have been effected. We trust, however, the work will soon be taken up again, and if God's people here only keep united in prayer, in faith and love, greater blessing will yet be in store for us. But praise the Lord for the blessing we have already enjoyed.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY.—A correspondent asks us to state that for the nominal sum of one shilling per annum any teacher or senior scholar in a school connected with the Union may obtain the use of the Sunday-school Union Library of 8000 vols., at 56, Old Bailey. There are also a Reference Library of 1500 vols., and a reading-room, supplied with the best religious literature, together with the monthly and quarterly reviews and literary magazines. The library is open from noon until 9.30 p.m.; Saturdays, 8.45 p.m.

THE MISSION OF LOVE.—Under this title, a Mission was started in Gay-street, Liverpool, in June, 1885. Its originator was Rev. H. Wood, M.A., who still carries on the work, being ably assisted by Mr. James Nunn. The mission-room will seat 250, and there is a small house adjoining where the two workers reside. In connection with the Mission, there is a Sunday-school, Gospel temperance meeting, mothers' meeting, besides the usual preaching services. Free breakfasts are given on Sunday mornings. Already much good has resulted from these ministrations; the attendance at the prayer-meeting has increased, and drunkards have been reclaimed.

MR. CHARRINGTON AND HIS WORK'

BY A CASUAL VISITOR.

It seems to me that Mr. Charrington, in his Mission at Mile-end, is solving a good many of the problems that are puzzling the Churches today. To begin with, he has adopted Mr. Moody's recipe for reaching the masses: he has gone to them. Moreover, he stays among them. Then he is doing his best to make them come to him; and he is succeeding.

A good deal is said in some of our religious Conferences about the crime of spending great sums on ornate ecclesiastical buildings, when the money conld be laid out to so much better advantage. Very true. And yet I think there is far-seeing wisdom in making the meeting-places for the common people in crowded centres as comfortable and attractive as possible. Too many of the poor have little of comfort, and less of beauty in their own homes; so they can appreciate them in the mission hall, which is to them, in a sense, a spiritual home. In some respects Mr. Charrington is a thorough-going Puritan, but he certainly does not believe that ugliness is an indispensable ally to unction, or that dinginess promotes devotion. His great Assembly-hall is by no means a gaudy affair; but, besides being spacious enough to seat over 4,000 persons, it is bright, handsomely appointed, and altogether such as may be restful and pleasant to the eye. A beautiful building is never so beautiful as when it presents an unbroken array of happy, eager faces. That is how I saw this great East-end hall the other Sunday evening; and that, I believe, is what may be seen in it any Snnday evening all the year round. A most inspiring, and hopeful, and gladsome sight it is. Four thousand East-enders every Sunday at a simple evangelistic service, with thousands more on week nights: who shall dare to assert that the Gospel has lost its hold of the masses of our population?

The preaching of the Gospel—the old-fashioned Gospel—is the backbone of Mr. Charrington's work. He is not very easy to satisfy in the matter of evangelists; and justly enough. But he generally succeeds in impressing into the service a man who can gain and keep the ear of the people, as well as talk straight to their consciences and hearts. Just now Mr. J. B. Wookey is conducting a month's mission; it was on his opening Sunday that I was privileged to be present. At the morning service the congregation probably numbered 2000, most of them Christians presumably. At any rate it was to believers that Mr. Wookey addressed himself, taking "Bloodguiltiness" for his theme. This evangelist is a kind of modern John the Baptist. His key-note is "Repent!" and the necessary but doleful symphony is sounded forth in all the variations of a copious and strong vocabulary. He paints the black evils of the day in their blackest hues, and one would hardly be surprised to hear the words that startled the congregation of the wilderness preacher: "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance." This Sunday morning Mr. Wookey drew aside a corner of the veil that partially hides the sins and sorrows of the city, and pressed home upon the professing Christians, with stern faithfulness, the exhortation to clear their skirts of the blood of their neighbours and fellow citizens. He invited the help of all during the special efforts of the month's mission, and hinted at some bold prospective attempt to reach the male sinners of the West End.

In the evening, as I have said, the hall was filled from top to bottom, from end to end. To stand in the splendid entrance-hall, and see the crowds flocking in, was worth a long journey; so it was to hear them sing from the familiar Songs and Solos— and other strains, that tell out "the music of the Gospel." Mr. Wookey's sermon was a skilful and intensely earnest exposition of the three parables of Luke xv. The net, of course, was drawn in the after-meeting, and it had evidently been let down on the right side of the ship. The Gospel meetings were continued for several evenings throughout the week, and every time, I am informed, some souls stepped "over the line" and entered into the Kingdom. This is what goes on from week to week and month to month. A goodly company of believers are in fellowship, and these "show forth the Lord's death" every Lord's day—morning, afternoon or evening, so as to meet the convenience of all.

> "Hark, hark, my soul, angelic songs are swelling,"

Yes, there is no doubt that the Gospel of God's grace, received in simple faith, without any priestly intermediary, is the Gospel for the people. And the people will have none other. I was intensely interested to hear that Romanism and its feeble imitation, Ritualism, have very little hold in the East-end. Religion has to be a real thing with the work-a-day crowds; only those who have fulness of bread, and time that hangs heavy on their hands, can play at it.

Another problem that Mr. Charrington is endeavouring successfully to solve is that of the amusement and entertainment of the people. Every Saturday evening he provides some first-class entertainment, musical or otherwise, at low prices, and his efforts are rewarded with crowded houses. If the Christian churches of this country are ever to cope with the deadly allurements of the gin-shop and the low music-hall, they will have to make far greater provision than has yet been attempted, for the rational, healthful, and truly recreative entertainment of the masses, especially on Saturday evenings, when the weary drudgery of the week is over, and some hours of leisure are at their disposal.

Mr. Charrington's past labours in the cause of sobriety and social purity would alone entitle him to a leading place among the benefactors of the East-end. His courageous exploits in this direction have been most remarkable, as some of your readers may know, who recollect the action for libel, in which he was defendant, brought against him by the proprietors of a notorious place of amusement near his hall. That case was substantially decided in his favour (though at a heavy monetary cost to him), and the result was an improved state of affairs in the locality. How soon he may be again impelled to lift his voice against the crying evil of the time, I know not. The price of public safety in this matter is eternal vigilance, and Mr. Charrington is not the man to go to sleep while the enemy is sowing tares broadcast. Meantime, he adds curative efforts to those of prevention. He has acquired a house of refuge for girls who are weary of their sinful life, and I was told that it is full of penitents.

Our brother is doing a work that God must smile upon; I trust your readers will help it in every way they can.

BOOKS FOR CROFTERS.—At Portnahaven, Islay, in the West Hebrides, Scotland, efforts are being made to form a small library for the benefit of the district. The people engage in agriculture and fishing; but, in common with the rest of the Highlands, work is scarce, and they are all very destitute. In the long dark nights there is plenty of leisure for reading. Gifts of books, magazines, &c., may be sent to Rev. A. MacDonald, of Portnahaven Free Church, per ss. Islay, to Portcharlotte Islay, N.B.; or to Mr. Columbine, 2, Carlisle-street, Soho-square, W.

HACKNEY Y.W.C.A. (Seymour House, Portland-place).—We are just beginning our second winter's work in this place, and are greatly cheered by the many indications which we have that God is blessing our efforts amongst the young women of Hackney. A very pleasant social evening was spent on Thursday, Sept. 30, when the winter's work was inaugurated. About ninety members and friends were present, and after tea an interesting address was delivered by the Rev. Wm. Baker, Homerton. In addition to various classes for secular instruction, Bible-classes are held on Sunday afternoons and Wednesday evenings, to which any young women in business in the neighbourhood are cordially invited. A well-stocked library has also been established. The second annual meeting will be held in the Town Hall, Hackney, on October 20, at 7.30. The Hon Arthur Kinnaird will preside.

THE CHURCHES AND MISSIONS.

By Dr. OSWALD DYKES.*

Of the modern movement for the extension of the Gospel, and especially of its prospects, I should like to say a few words; partly for encouragement, partly, too, for warning. This is the outstanding fact in the religious history of our country; and much of its interest centres in the question: Is this, which is the latest, likely to prove also the last of the Church's efforts to fulfil her mission? In other words, Is the present movement likely to retain its force until every portion of the human family has heard the tidings of salvation? . . .

How striking is it that the Christian nations which, amid the decay of faith, have retained the keenest evangelical sympathies, are precisely those at whose feet lie spread the widest and most promising portions of the non-Christian world: England, that is, and America, with their all-embracing commerce and their all-conquering language? Especially notable are those exigencies, whether of war or trade, which have providentally forced these two States into closer contact than any other with those ancient strong people in the further East that are to-day the homes and bulwarks of the Gospel's chief rivals among the faiths of the world—with India, with Burmah, with China, with Japan. Southern Asia is the stronghold of modern heathenism; and Southern Asia has at this moment become the scene of a death-grapple betwixt Christianity and the leading historical religions of mankind—a grapple into which the Christian Church has been flung in large measure through no choice of her own, but which, it is plain, can be closed only by the "survival of the fittest." Events are hurrying on a crash of creeds that may convulse Asia from the Persian Gulf to the Yellow Sea, and offer Christianity an opportunity the like of which she has not seen since Constantine the Great.

But while ancient civilisations are changing shape beneath the action of new solvents, ancient barbarisms, long hidden, are being sought out, and through the allied powers of commerce and the Gospel are yielding to civilisation: notably in Africa, that new-found sister among the continents.

Weighing all the facts, does not the impression force itself on the mind that now, at length, in the end of the ages, by a thousand converging lines of Providence, the Lord Jesus, who is Head over all things, is summoning his Church to her final and supreme effort, and that He intends her fervour in the cause of missions to increase "till each remotest nation has learned Messiah's name"? True, the Church's duty to preach to every creature has been the same from the beginning. But every duty does not press with equal urgency at every time. Our forefathers had their special work to do, and we have ours. Ours is to spread the message. To this the times are calling us. The globe grows manageably small. It grows one. A strange, unifying process is going on, binding long-sundered peoples. As space and time are practically lessened and intercourse gets closer, there comes a wiping out of alien usages, an assimilation of men everywhere to the same prevailing type. Must not all this hasten a time when one religion, too, shall everywhere prevail? Can any man doubt what religion that will be?

But if the work is to be done, and quickly done, one thing grows every day more clear; the present pace is far too slow. We need to be told that we are doing but a bagatelle of what ought to be done; and already there are voices that tell us so. With our present expenditure of men and money we are making no headway. A recent pamphleteer has even published the startling statement that, relatively to the heathen population of the globe, we are losing ground. Through mere increase by birth-rate, and the saving of life effected by Christian influence restraining wars, arresting pestilence, or relieving famine, the vast heathen populations, it is said, are growing far faster than we are converting them, so that the number of non-Christians now alive is alleged to be "vastly greater" than when your own Carey issued his famous "Inquiry" exactly one hundred years ago. All we have done, then, it seems, has failed to keep pace with the growth of the heathen world. At this rate we shall never convert the heathen. The moral is that we should do ten times more. Everything is ripe for a supreme sustained effort all along the line. It will cost much, but it has to be made.

All who study the subject come to but one conclusion—that if the enormous and multiplying swarms of human beings who know not Christ are ever to hear his name—indeed, if they are not, within a measurable time, to choke the earth with the spiritually dead—Christians at home must rise to the occasion and lavish means and men upon the work at this favourable juncture on a very different scale from anything we have seen. The dignity of the service to which our Lord invites us has yet to be appreciated. The urgency of the hour has to be understood. Our joint and several responsibility for the work has to be brought home to each of us. The money power of the Church needs to be used without stint. But far more the ardour of youthful spirits has to be called for. The well-born and leisurely will have to choose it for a life work and go where possible at their private charges. At home the coolest, wisest heads must make a deeper study of the problem. Ecclesiastical traditions and rivalries should be sacrificed to it. In short, the evangelical Churches have to get in dead earnest on the subject, to realise that it is their business, and to bend to it their supreme energies. Not otherwise that I can see is the vast work to be achieved. Not with the left hand, nor with half a heart. The salvation of the world! If it is not worth such devotion from a few generations of Christians, why did it call for the cross of the Son of God? If it cannot kindle our enthusiasm, how dwells in us the mind of Christ? In our hands is, by God's allotment, the deposit of eternal life for the world, and the world waits to see what use we make of it. With us are the messengers whose feet upon the mountains would be beautiful to eyes that have long been strained with longing for the light—but "how shall they preach except they be sent?"

Letters to the Editor.

IDOLATRY AT WESTMINSTER.

Dear Sir,—Does it not seem as if a public protest ought to be made against the Roman Catholics being allowed again this year to go in procession to worship at the tomb of Edward the Confessor in Westminster Abbey?

October 13 is, I believe, the day celebrated to his memory, and if this is permitted to continue, it will become a precedent opening the churches of England to the idolatrous worship of Rome. A worker from France said, the other day, "England little knows what she is doing in playing with Rome."

A Reader.

AN ANTIDOTE WANTED.

Dear Sir,—Will any of your readers kindly name a good book to place in the hands of a young man who has some doubts of the literal truth of many Bible narratives. He is not really infidel in tendency, therefore does not need a book solely for such, but one that would explain away the peculiarities which he finds it difficult to believe. This information would be a great help to me, for, while accepting the Scripture narratives myself, I do not feel competent to argue the matter. I am most anxious his mind should be rightly directed, as his circumstances in Germany expose him to many temptations and questionings.

Yours truly, An Anxious Mother.

HORSHAM, SUSSEX.—Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in the Albion Hall here. It has been a time of great blessing, many having professed conversion. Mr. Notman's addresses have been very powerful, and have made many consider their ways. The town has been truly stirred; the result of the mission is, that arrangements are being made to continue the work.

YOKED WITH JESUS.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me."
Matt. xi. 29.

Jesus, Saviour, by thy side
  Day by day would I abide;
Take my hand, be Thou my guide,
  Whatsoever may betide.

Shadows darken; day has fled;
  By Thee, Lord, would I be led;
Forward would I go with Thee,
  Though the path I may not see.

I would hearken, would obey,
  Follow Thee though dark the way;
Out of weakness make me strong,
  All my sighing turn to song.

For thy Name and thy dear sake,
  I the path of service take;
Help me glory in thy cross;
  Counting earthly things but dross.

Sweet the service, sweet the call,
  Gladly I surrender all—
All, Lord Jesus, give to Thee,
  Now and through eternity.

Onward to my home above,
  Guided by the hand I love;
Circled by thy arm of grace,
  Till I see Thee face to face.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

PARIS.

M. Vanderbecken, the agent of the Y.M.C.A. here, is going to the United States for six months to study the Associations of that country.

DOVER.

We hear that the work at this branch has languished, and there is a danger of its lapsing. The committee intend holding a short mission in the Union Hall, with a view to increase the spiritual life of the members and their friends.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The committee of the Cairns Memorial House have made arrangements for the reception of young men in delicate health during the winter months. With its mild climate and sheltered position, Bournemouth is a good sanitorium for those who seek to recruit their health by change of air and rest. Mr. Charles F. Haines is the secretary.

EXETER HALL.

Last Thursday the inaugural meeting of the winter session was held, a large number of members and associates being present, at the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. George Williams. After a social tea, the company adjourned to the lower hall. After opening prayer and reading of the Scripture, Mr. George Williams expressed his pleasure in welcoming so many young men in the name of the committee. Those who had passed through the dangers that beset young men wished to help them. Rev. Donald McClove then gave a powerful address on the parable of the barren figtree, urging his hearers to decision for Christ as the only means of fruitfulness, and warning them against being cumberers of the ground. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, the general secretary, then briefly recapitulated the advantages of the Institution. He said that they had sixty-one classes. A drawing-room was being fitted up, and they wanted to make the place a home. Then there were Gospel meetings every night, and they were commencing a fourteen-days' Mission on the 10th instant. There was also a training-class for young workers, that would commence on the 29th instant. Rev. J. Stephens also addressed the young men, and altogether a pleasant and a profitable evening was spent.

DR. BAEDEKER sails by the Parisian on Oct. 28 for evangelistic work in Canada. Letters for him should be addressed to the care of Mrs. Merry, Boys' Home, Stratford, Ontario.

MISS MACPHERSON'S RETURN.—Miss Macpherson, Miss Stock, and other fellow-workers have returned from Canada, and will address the workers' meeting at the Home of Industry on Wednesday next.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.—2.

"If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him. Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Matt. vii. 11, 12.

This great Christian law is, from the fact of its being so good in itself, very generally quoted and used without any thought of its connection with the privilege and advantages of prayer.

That the privilege and the law are connected by our Lord is never questioned, when readers of the New Testament are induced to look at the passage more carefully. But that the connection should ever be missed, not only deprives our study of the passage of more than half its instructive light; it also robs the law itself of its solemn force, as a law based upon one of the most alluring features of God's government of us. The "Golden Rule," as it is called, may be fitly used, even sometimes by men of the world, as a most advantageous maxim; but its great value is in its connection, as a great obligation, with the munificence of the heavenly Father.

This law is manifestly placed, as are most of the teachings in the Sermon on the Mount, in direct contrast to the ordinary maxims of worldly policy. The spirit and the pleadings of men of the world are pervaded by one thought: that it is indispensable to the life of a man that, on all points, in all relations and circumstances, he should simply aim at his own advantage. This is held as an axiom. Its self-evidence is regarded as beyond question. It follows very naturally from it that, excepting where the good of another secures a man's own advantage, it is no concern of his to endeavour to promote it. Indeed the exact application of the principle in action may fairly be formulated thus: "Secure all the advantage you can; and do not trouble yourself about anyone else being benefited, excepting where another's benefit may minister to your advantage."

That this is not an exaggerated description of the habit of mind, if not the overt policy, with which the business of the world is pursued, would be abundantly verified by those who are most familiar with human life, especially amid the pursuits and operations of commerce. But the law of the Saviour, by which in all their relations with other men the life of his disciples is to be regulated, stands in direct opposition to it, and aims at uprooting it, at least within the circle of his own followers.

The principle of the law is marvellously simple, and it only needs an adequate motive for its application in practice. This is supplied, not in self-interest, though that is abundantly secured, but in the treatment which the disciples receive at the hands of the heavenly Father. In the demand which life makes upon them, as upon all others, for a proper dwelling-place, for sustenance, for rest, health, and the peaceful enjoyment of all lawful advantages, they will be under no necessity to do as men outside the fellowship of Jesus are doing. The supply of their wants will require toil, and the expenditure of strength, both in mind and body. When, at any time after this expenditure, it is found that the supply is still inadequate, they must not exact the toil and strength of others to remedy their deficiency, unless it be that their doing so promotes the others' ample advantage. Should the opportunity for accumulation of this world's resources open to them, it must not be used in a way that will prevent others attaining a full sufficiency. When their desires and the desires of other men are fixed upon the same object, it will not be lawful for them to weaken or injure their competitors to facilitate their own attainment of it. And when an abundance of this world's resources is secured, it will be a violation of the Saviour's law to be regardless of the fact that large numbers of other human beings have not a sufficiency of them.

If the simple demand of righteousness had been propounded here by the Lord, and had been left to exert its influence upon the consciences of his disciples, it might have seemed enough.. But while He does, in this law, enforce righteousness in a manner divested of any suggestion of expediency, He strips unrighteousness of its strongest excuse, by showing that in human life there is no necessity for it. "The resources of my Father," He seems to say, "are always at your disposal. You may obtain them when you will, as your children obtain the supply of their wants from you, by asking for them. Go to the Father as your wants occur, and as He responds to your requests want will be extinguished. Therefore the obligation that rests upon you in your relation with other men is to recognise the equality of every one before God, and the right of each one to the treatment which you yourself wish to obtain. Kindness, sympathy, and fraternal love are, under God's government, the bond of intercourse. Here rapacity, exaction, and indifference to the needs of other lives than your own, can have no place."

What a revolution would the ethics of Jesus work in the world, were the lives of men so happy as to be regulated by them. The fortune-hunting of the commercial world, and the passion for dominion in the world of nations, are continually violating the great principle of equality before God.

The solicitude of all who read these pages, as of those who write in them, should be that no disciple of Jesus Christ may bear this guilt. Honesty, simplicity, righteousness, based upon the kindness of the heavenly Father, are the remedy for all the wrongs of human life. We lay no charge at the feet of any, but pray that, as "the day will declare it," so every conscience may be aware of every wrong while there is time and opportunity for setting it right.

Mission and other Appeals.

Christian Community.—An appeal is made for help to meet the expense of fitting up, altering, and seating the new Mission Hall at Poplar, in a most needy locality. The Secretary is Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road, South Kingsland, N.

Johnson's Court Ragged School (Leman-street, Whitechapel, E.).—This Mission, which has been established twenty-two years, is commencing its winter's work, and needs additional helpers and funds. It is open every evening except Wednesday, and there is a fair attendance of working lads. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. J. D. Teall, 6, Aldermanbury, E.C.

People's Hall, Latimer-road, Notting-hill, W.—This mission work, carried on for thirteen years, has through death and increased expense of enlarged premises, incurred a deficit of £80. To remove this, a sale of work will be held at the Hall from October 26 to October 28, and will be opened by Lady Hope. Any contributions may be sent to the Missionary, Mr. G. Goss, at the Hall.

SOUTHWARK.—Mr. William Benson, Evangelist in connection with the Southwark and Lambeth Mission, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, S.W., writes:—The open-air meetings of the past summer have been most cheering as to numbers and instances of good. To God be all the glory. I am arranging for winter's work, and am anxious to extend Factory and Infirmary visits.

MISSION WORK AT CHERBOURG—Sir,—I recently spent three months at Cherbourg, and was much interested in mission work I found going on there. In the Rue Val de Saire is a mission room, where Mr. T. P. Sinel preaches in French twice a week. Mrs. Sinel has a small mixed school twice a week. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sinel are untiring in distributing Gospels and tracts which often find their way in to the neighbouring villages. On the Quai de Paris, M. LeRendu has a mission room. Once a very rough grenier over a cider-store, it has been transformed, by his efforts and those of the very poor French Christians who cling round him, into a tidy room. M. LeRendu preaches there with zeal and energy in French. He is himself a convert from Romanism. He has also a small school twice a week, and he has just recommenced a meeting for sailors, on Sundays. This last is in English, which M. LeRendu speaks fluently and fairly well. The addresses of these two devoted labourers are Mr. T. P. Sinel, Rue de l'Ermitage, Cherbourg, and, M. LeRendu, 11, Rue Thomas Henri, Cherbourg. As they are labouring entirely without private means, some of your readers may be disposed to sustain them in the good work, by prayer and monetary aid.—Sincerely yours,

Mary Hosking.

A NATION IN PERIL.

The following appeal has been sent forth by several patriotic Christians of Lausanne to all those who are concerned for the future well-being of Switzerland. It appears in Le Journal Religieux de la Suisse Romande.

Two facts in our dear country strike the attentive observer. On one side a secret discontent is creeping through the populations of our towns, centres of industry, and even into the country districts. Under a superficial prosperity, which is envied by more than one nation, there is increasing, everywhere, irritation of the poor against the rich, of the employed against the employer, of the creature against the Creator. At no epoch of our national history has there been seen such a display of luxury and good living among us; at the same time, there has never been such a deep and general dissatisfaction.

On the other hand, we are struck by the fact that festivity succeeds festivity, banquet follows banquet, all Switzerland would seem to be rejoicing. There is not a week, not a Sunday, without its fête, often accompanied by excesses of more than one kind. Just in proportion to their discontent does it seem that our people are seized with a frenzy of amusement. Pleasure is the order of the day, as much pleasure as possible, with the least possible work. And as if one part of the population were envious of the power which enables the other to live in continual self-gratification, an increasing number of men make hotels and drinking-places their perpetual rendezvous. Many of our villages, where thrift and comfort reigned, are now reduced to bankruptcy and ruin through the public-house.

Dear fellow-countrymen, how can we be otherwise than concerned at this sad state of things? Has not the love of display and of pleasure always been the forerunner of a nation's decadence? Are not all these considerations, to which may be added the dark clouds charged with electricity that may be seen on the political and social horizon, sufficient to make us ask if there is indeed cause for such considerable and continual rejoicing?

Is it not legitimate that we should express our sorrow at seeing so many of our fellow-countrymen more inclined to banquets, noisy drinking-parties, dances, &c., than to manly, energetic and patriotic effort to arrest the progress of our country down the fatal decline to ruin?

The times in which we live are serious; permit us to invite you to consider seriously what can be done to lead to a reform in these matters. In the interest of your country, in the interest of your families, above all, in consideration of your own and your children's souls, stop and think, we beseech you. God is a holy and just God; He cannot hold the guilty innocent.

His judgments will inevitably fall on us if we do not listen to his voice, if we continue to trample his law under our feet, and profane his Sabbaths. To-day a God who loves you, says to you, what He formerly said to his people: "Why will ye die, O house of Israel? Turn and live."

MANCHESTER PRISON-GATE MISSION.—A record of this work for women, during the twelve months ending June, 1886, is published, entitled, "Hitherto." It adds another to many examples of the Lord's faithfulness. The extracts from the diary give many illustrations, such as:—"Feb. 19.—Our matron at the Mission House leaves to-day. We have only a few shillings left, and her salary must be paid. 2 p.m.—Mr. —— called, and gave £10." Besides the Mission House in Higher Cambridge-street, a new home has been opened at Sale, called Yew Tree Cottage, although at present only ten women can be received there, as it is only partially furnished. The homes are worked in accordance with the injunction: "Owe no man anything," and all needs have been supplied, but few luxuries, judging from the amount paid for food at the Mission for the year; £132 17s. or only about 3s. per week for each inmate. In the same period the women have earned, chiefly by laundry-work, £97 14s. This interesting report may be obtained of the superintendents, Miss Watson, at the Mission House, or Miss Macgregor, at Yew Tree Cottage.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

REV. T. WAUGH has been conducting a mission at Wednesbury. During the thirteen days of the mission over 770 people professed to find Christ.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Methodists of this town have organised a mission on a large scale, to commence on the 24th instant. Each of the seven circuits into which the district is divided will have a special mission preacher, and in the afternoons a united meeting will be held in the Town-hall for prayer, and for the edification of believers. The mission preachers are: Revs. Thomas Cook, F. C. Stuart, H. T. Smart, E. Davidson, H. P. Hughes, J. G. Stuart, and J. H. Hopkins. A great blessing is expected, and the prayers of God's people are desired for this effort.

AGRICULTURAL HALL.—On Sunday, Oct. 3, the eighteenth anniversary of the Sunday services in this place was celebrated. Commenced by Dr. Thain Davidson in 1868, when they were held in Berners' Hall, the afternoon services have been continued without a break. They were transferred to St. Mary's Hall directly after it was completed. In 1874 the evening services were started. Conducted on undenominational lines, many well-known clergymen and laymen of various denominations have assisted, among whom we may mention the late Lord Shaftesbury and Mr. S. Morley. Dr. Thain Davidson preached on Sunday afternoon.

CAPTAIN WARNER DENNIS has held a fifteen days' mission, from September 12 to 27, at Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road. From the first the services were much blessed, the members of the church co-operating heartily with the evangelist. All the services were preceded by open-air meetings, conducted by the members of Mr. Gast's church. The meeting for women only was remarkable. After the address, which was suitable to the audience, the subject being "The Bride of Christ," twenty-one of the listeners rose and went into the inquiry-room, seeking to know the way of God more perfectly. The pastor of the church desires prayer for the work in this needy corner of the metropolis.

JOY IN HARVEST.—Mr. W. J. H. Brealey writes: —We are in the midst of our annual harvest thanksgiving season. In each locality on the hills and adjoining districts special services, tea meetings, &c., are held as united praise and testimony meetings, and already we have had some precious times. The past year has been one of much seed sowing, and also of precious ingathering. The steady, patient work of faith, in months and years of plodding labour, has borne golden sheaves. The weeping has accompanied the sowing, but has been the precursor of the rejoicing in reaping. Pray for us. In my father's absence, holding meetings in Yorkshire and the North, we need physical as well as spiritual strength: ask for both, and remember him also in your intercessions.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

TOLLINGTON HALL was crowded on Sunday evening, October 3, on the occasion of the visit of a band of young men from the Finsbury-park Branch of the Y.M.C.A. The blessing of God has lately been given in a marked manner to this little work, which has been carried on for the past two and a half years, from very small beginnings, Much fruit is looked for during the coming winter. and Christian friends living in the neighbourhood are cordially invited to visit the mission. Meetings are held every Sunday at 11, 3.15, and 7 o'clock, and on Fridays at 8. Would those who know the work kindly recommend it to others, that the necessary support may be obtained. Any communication on the subject of the mission may be addressed to Mr. W. R. Dovey, 22, Langdon Park-road, Highgate, N. [We hope this good work will wax greater and greater.—Ed.]

BALLYMONEY.—Messrs. Davey, Irvine, and Ballantine have conducted evangelistic services here during the past four weeks, and God has given marvellous blessing. From the first night of the mission we have had anxious inquirers. At the close of the services we had a special meeting in the Second Presbyterian Church, for those who professed to have found Christ during the mission, and those who were really anxious about their souls. To this meeting we admitted by ticket no less than 450 persons—truly a bounteous harvest, and well calculated to call forth the heartfelt thanks of God's people. Mr. Ballantine has left us to work in Boardmills, Co. Down, and Messrs. Davey and Irvine are resting before resuming work in England, where they commence a mission at Birkenhead on the 17th instant. They will carry with them the sympathy and prayers of God's people here. J. M. E.

Ballymoney, Co. Antrim, October 4.

TENBY.—The visit of Mr. H. M. Barnett has been most richly blessed. During the fortnight's mission he spoke in the different places of worship in the town, also two of the neighbouring villages, Penalby and Saundersfoot. Much interest was shown at the prophetic lectures, given both at the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations. Drawing-room Bible readings were held daily in the afternoon, and open-air meetings at night when the weather permitted. On two occasions Mr. Barnett visited Caldy Island (about eighty inhabitants), preaching the Gospel both indoors and out, visiting the cottages, and distributing Gospel leaflets. M. E. P.

WOOLSTON, HANTS. — A most successful united Gospel mission has just been held here, conducted by Mr. Stephen T. Crocker, of Bristol. A large tent was lent for the occasion by Rev. Wesley A. Rodger (Presbyterian), into which hundreds were gathered every night. Each evening an after-meeting was held to deal with inquirers, numbers of whom on leaving professed to have found peace. Through the kindness of the firm of Messrs. Oswald, Mordaunt & Co., large local shipbuilders, hundreds of the workmen were addressed during the dinner hour in the yard, on four or five days, the impressions made being evidently very deep. Mr. Crocker has begun a similar mission at Netley, a neighbouring village.

MISSION TO THE JEWS IN JERUSALEM.—Mr. D. C. Joseph, who is at present labouring as an evangelist among the Jews in the East of London, lately delivered two lectures at Woking, on the subject of a visit paid by himself to the city of his fathers. The lectures were illustrated by the exhibition of Eastern costumes, and of a large panoramic view of Jerusalem, and appeared to call forth much interest. Mr. Joseph is collecting money with the view of going again to Jerusalem, and of founding a new Mission to the Jewish population of the city. He proposes to employ in that work Jewish converts of the working-classes, with salaries of not more than £50 a year, believing that they will have more ready access to the houses and hearts of the people than workers in a higher social position.

Requests for Prayer.

That God will mightily bless some special efforts to be made in connection with the Young People's Service Mission, Ipswich, from Oct. 17 to 20.——For the conversion of a mother, four sisters, and four brothers.——For special blessing on Friday next at a tea and Gospel meeting for the flower-sellers of Hastings. Also for the classes recommenced amongst the youths, boys, and girls, that numbers of precious souls may be won for Christ, and that each worker may be baptized with the Spirit.——That a system of secret, determined, and persistent working to quench evangelical truth in a large and important church in the West of England, may, through God's mercy, be brought to nought, and that the light of his glorious Gospel may again shine there in all its fulness.——On behalf of work amongst boys in the East-end of London.——For blessing on evangelistic services, to be conducted in Peterborough and Staithes, by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, during this month and November.——For a special house-to-house Gospel mission in certain villages in Hants.——For the Dover Y.M.C.A., that God would revive his work in this branch, and guide with respect to a projected mission for that purpose.

KIRTLEY RUNS is quite a new village, near Lowestoft. There is no place of worship, and the people are as sheep without a shepherd. A fisherman's wife, notwithstanding her large family, said to her husband, "We must do something for the children." So she opened her house to teach the lambs the Saviour's love. So many came that they had to adjourn to an old shed, where they are not allowed to hold services for the people. They have had some very interesting open-air meetings on the Green, but these have to be closed because of the cold nights. The Lord has given tokens of his approval. I spent two Sundays with them, and blessed times they were. They want to erect a wooden building, costing about £50, but are unable to bear the whole expense. I trust some of the Lord's stewards may help by prayer, tracts, books, and funds, so that these people can have a little place to worship in. Address, Mr. Goldsmith, Kirtley Runs, Lowestoft, Suffolk; or

H. Spall Smith.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The men on the Eddystone lighthouse never have intoxicants with them.

In Germany, no hotel can be situated within a specified distance of churches, parsonages, schools, and hospitals.

Rev. G. M. Murphy intends continuing the temperance meetings at Lambeth Bath. The late Mr. S. Morley for the last twenty-five years paid the rent.

The Daily Alta, California, San Francisco, says:—"No matter what anyone thinks of Prohibition, judgment-day for saloon politics is beginning to break in the East."

A correspondent complains that the decisions given at the late Brewster Sessions were often absurd and contradictory, and argues in favour of a radical change in the system.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man has sent to all his clergy a letter commending to their sympathy and help Rev. J. M. Spicer, the newly-appointed organising temperance secretary for the diocese.

Lady John Manners says:—"In Germany, it is thought extraordinary of English women to resort to brandy when not feeling well; German medical men never recommend spirits to women patients."

The Atlantic Monthly says:—"The 7000 saloons of New York have fastened upon her citizens the most shamefully corrupt government ever endured by a community indulging itself with the illusion it was free."

The Austrian Anti-Alcoholism Society, founded in 1884, is moving, though slowly. It is not a total abstinence organisation, for amongst its counteractives to the sale of ardent spirits, it includes that of beer and wine.

Mr. Durfee, of Wisconsin, one of the Commissioners of the Indian Department, reports that "the curse of the whole (Indian) race, and the great drawback to their advancement, is the facility with which they can procure whisky."

The Toronto Globe states that, owing to his insistence on having a brewer to preside at a missionary meeting, Dr. Sutherland, of the Methodist Church, London, Ontario, has excited much feeling amongst his temperance members.

Father Nugent, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, stated that during his twenty-two years' experience as a prison chaplain, 130,000 to 140,000 persons had passed under his care, and eight out of ten were brought to the gaol through drink.

The Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission successfully continues its work at the police court. During the summer, meetings were held nightly in two tents. In connection with a recent mission in Windsor-street, four hundred adults and one hundred children signed the pledge.

The Juvenile Union of the Church of England Temperance Society has issued its first report. There are now over one hundred branches affiliated, and the organising secretary, Miss S. U. Gardner, has attended one hundred and sixty-six meetings since her appointment in October, 1884.

An old tavern in Great Guildford-street, Southwark, has been opened as a club under the name of "The Shaftesbury Club and Institute." It is conducted strictly on temperance principles, the prime mover being Mr. J. W. Weston, of the Grove Mission. His address is 31, Park-street, Southwark.

Owing to the remonstrances of missionaries and prominent natives in Bengal, Lieut.-Governor Sir Rivers Thompson appointed a Commission to inquire into the operation of the outstill system. It is hoped the system will be amended, so that the sad increase of native drinking may be arrested.

BIBLE STUDY FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

A novel and interesting method of pen and ink Bible study was started, just two years ago, by the editor of Our Own Gazette. Large, beautifully got-up sheets, illustrated in colour, and ruled in squares, were issued in connection with a Scripture prize competition. These Bible charts were to be filled with verses on a given subject, selected, arranged, and written in by competitors.

"Tabernacle Teachings" is the subject of this third annual Scripture competition. Two sheets or charts have been issued, and the proposed study should prove as interesting and profitable as that induced in former years. Competitors are arranged in classes, and prizes, amounting to £30, have been offered, one of them being given by H.R.H. Princess Mary of Teck. The charts could be advantageously used as a basis for study in young women's Bible-classes, or would form a profitable and interesting study for winter evenings. The rules and other information are given in the October number of Our Own Gazette, to which we would refer our readers.

HELMSDALE, SUTHERLANDSHIRE. — Christian workers in this far northern village desire to render praise to God that He has brought some souls out of darkness into light; they ask prayer for meetings being held nightly this week.

The Book World.

Treasure Trove: Extracts from Unpublished Letters and Bible Notes. By the late Frances Ridley Havergal. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Another casket of jewels from the mine of Miss Havergal's writings. These morning and evening portions cannot fail to be a blessing to all who study them. Every page bears the impress of a spiritual mind. The little book is artistically got up.

How Readest Thou? By Edward Dingle. 1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. Mr. Dingle examines the first and second chapters of Genesis, and combats with considerable vigour the erroneous views about Creation put forward by some "scientific" writers. What he has to say about the interpretation of the word "day" is really valuable; but his language is neither so simple nor so clear as it might be. Readers should be charmed, not repelled, by the style of a book.

India Revisited: Its Social and Political Problems. By Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. 6d. Wm. Isbister, Limited. A reprint of an article from The Contemporary which has attracted much attention by the thoughtful and unbiassed manner in which it directs attention to the great problems that await solution in that land. The tribute paid to the beneficent results of missionary effort in the past, and the almost unconscious, and therefore more powerful allusions to the necessity of India's evangelisation in the immediate future, if it is to be saved from anarchy, deserve attention.

The Evangelical Revival in the Eighteenth Century. By J. H. Overton, Canon of Lincoln and Rector of Epworth. 2s. 6d. Longmans & Co. Not the least interesting point about this book is its authorship; and certainly the present Rector of Epworth appreciates the Wesleys better than did Southey. The chief evangelical clergy and laity of this period, the literature of the revival, its helpers and hinderers, its temporary and lasting effects, are described with great skill, and, for the most part, justly. It is a useful handbook of a most important epoch in the religious history of England.

Three beautifully illustrated books have reached us, published by S. W. Partridge & Co. Our Four Footed Friends, by Mary Hewitt (2s.), is a very pretty tale, full of interesting details, showing how truly the lower animals are the friends of man, and teaching, in a most attractive way, lessons of humanity towards our dumb companions. Our Picture Book, by D. J. H. (2s.), contains a variety of charming pictures, each illustrated by an interesting story or poem. It will delight the eyes and hearts of the little ones. Stories and Pictures of Birds, Beasts, and Fishes. By James Weston. 2s. The lovely engravings and the clear type of this fascinating book will attract many young readers, while the valuable information it contains will prove a store of useful knowledge. Either of these three works would make a capital prize or birthday gift.

The Wide World, and Our Work in it; or, The Story of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The authoress does not mince matters in her talk about the two thousand Christian applicants for a humble situation, the thousands of well-to-do, educated persons who have no object in life, and the thousand millions of heathen who have no missionary to tell them of Christ. Stranger than fiction, full of stirring episodes, giving a clear and unvarnished account of missions, this book, like all from the same source, is new, thorough, and revolutionary in the best sense of the word. The accounts of Tangier and Morocco are pitiable in the extreme. An excellent map of China, giving all the stations of the China Inland Mission, with the dates of their opening, prefaces this most interesting book.

Preludes to the Reformation. By Rev. Canon Pennington. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The purpose of this most valuable work is to sketch in outline the origin of the forces which produced the Reformation. It was needed, because we are apt to think of Luther and his colleagues in the sixteenth century to the exclusion of those who toiled in the preceding centuries, when the darkness was dense and only the first streaks of light had made their appearance. Canon Pennington does ample justice to the heroes who paved the way for their greater successors, and gives us a clearer idea of the causes which led to the establishment of Protestantism. We heartily commend his book, not only as a contribution to the history of a movement in which all of us ought to be interested, but also as an antidote to the poisonous apathy which favours the ecclesiastical supremacy of the Papacy.

Red Rooney; or, The Last of the Crew. By R. M. Ballantyne. 5s. J. Nisbet & Co. Mr. Ballantyne has given to us in this attractive volume a stirring tale of adventure and peril at the North Pole. It contains much valuable information about the life and habits of the Eskimos.

Mary's Meadow, and Letters from a Little Girl's Garden. By the late J. H. Ewing. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. 1s. S. P. C. K. These were the last stories Mrs. Ewing wrote. Through the medium of an interesting tale an endeavour is made to encourage among the young a taste for gardening.

Many of the friends and admirers of the late Mr. Samuel Morley will be glad to possess themselves of the neatly got up little book containing Rev. J. C. Harrison's touching Personal Reminiscences of the deceased, published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (9d.). The first-rate photograph given of Mr. Morley is worth more than the price of the whole.

Modern Discoveries of Science. By B. C. Young. 2s. 6d. Elliot Stock. Mr. Young's book on "The Remote Antiquity of Man not Proven," has often been consulted by us. It ought to receive a very wide attention from all persons—and they are happily a growing number—who hold to the Bible account of man's appearance. The present work is equally timely, but it passes over wider ground. It criticises with singular ability the theory of Darwinian Evolution, and its relation to the Design Argument, and to Man as an Independent Creation. Occasionally the author, as it seems to us, does not do full justice to the writers whom he opposes, and his condensation of their reasoning is a trifle too brief and severe. Nevertheless, he has obviously studied the literature of the subject on which he writes, and has conclusively shown that what has been boasted of as the fruit of Modern Science was anticipated by the Scriptures of God. He has written a book which ought to be widely circulated among sceptical young men, and which, in a fearless and definite manner, sets aside the false conclusions which have been bewildering many.

The Vocation of the Preacher. By E. Paxton Hood. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A double interest attaches to this volume. It is a sequel to Mr. Hood's "Throne of Eloquence," and, before it was completed, the gifted writer had joined the "glorious company" of apostles, prophets, and preachers around the throne of glory. Mr. Hood is peculiarly fitted for the task he set himself. Possessed himself of no mean pulpit gifts, he has a heart large enough to own and emphasise the gifts of others in all ages, and all branches of the catholic Church. He can appreciate the fire of Xavier, the sweetness of Faber, the skilfulness of Newman without conceding or condoning their errors of doctrine. His chapters on "the Paper in the Pulpit," and Billingsgate in the pulpit are thoroughly useful. His sympathies and antipathies are illustrated by "James Parsons" and "James Wells." For extracts alone the book is valuable, but far more for the exalted aim and spiritual methods it impresses on all who enter the high calling of the preacher. We trust these pages will be read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested by all who seek to win souls.

A Thought for a Day. Selected and arranged by Minna Crawley. 2s. Groombridge & Sons. In this birthday record we have a helpful passage, in prose or verse, illustrative of the daily text. The extracts are drawn from very varied sources. The souvenir is one of the best of its kind we have seen.

Light Through the Windows of the Word. By Mrs. Fielder. Nos. 1 and 2. 3d. each. Elliot Stock. Terse and often beautiful comments on the opening chapters of the Bible. The writer has read widely, thought deeply, and has the eye to see spiritual analogies in external facts, so she is admirably equipped for the task she has undertaken.

Some Thoughts on Moderation. By Axel Gustafson. 1s. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. We have nothing but warmest praise for the latest literary venture of the Hercules of temperance reform; moderate drinkers will have nothing but condemnation for it. It strikes hard at a fallacy which should have been buried long ago with other exploded fallacies.

The Truth About Alcohol. A Lecture by Dr. Norman Kerr. 3d. H. K. Lewis, 136, Gower-street, W.C. It is high time that we should have the truth about our national foe; we have heard falsehoods about it too long. Dr. Kerr tells what has been scientifically demonstrated as to the action of intoxicating drinks. That is knowledge worth learning, and we advise our readers to learn it.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

The Churchman. 6d. Elliot Stock. We welcome this new series of a well-known magazine, and note with satisfaction its reduced price. It will now find a larger constituency, and enlarge the area of its influence.

The Evangelical Repository (6d., Glasgow: Thos. D. Morison) has some interesting articles, especially the one on "God commending his love." We regret to see the strong bias against Calvinism which disfigures an otherwise creditable member.

The Homilist (6d., R. D. Dickinson) is too apt, we are afraid, to become the lazy preacher's vade-mecum. Its conductors do not mean that it should be so used, but their intentions will not carry weight with the man who would like to do his thinking by proxy.

The Monthly Interpreter (1s., T. & T. Clark) is up to its usually high standard. The study of "The Song of Solomon" promises to be of more than ordinary value. May we whisper in the clever editor's ear that long articles continued from month to month are rather tiresome; truth must be put into little compass in these busy days.

TRACTS FOR THE WEST INDIES.—Dear Sir,—May I appeal to your readers on behalf of Rev. David Wright, Wesleyan missionary, St. John's, Antigua, W.I., for supplies of tracts, illustrated periodicals, books, Bibles, and other suitable Gospel literature in the English language, carriage paid. They are required for distribution in connection with mission work. Mr. Wright has been in the West Indies twenty-two years.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 17.—I CHRON. XXIX.

1.—The work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for the Lord God.—Words as sublime as they are simple! The great thought that he was preparing a habitation for God had long ago possessed David fully, inspiring his declining years with such energy and strong purpose that he could say (2): "I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God." When he realised that "the palace was not for man, but for the Lord God," he could not but prepare "with all his might." Paul knew the irresistible power of this thought when, urging the Corinthians to purity and holiness, he said: "Ye are the temple of God: the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. Your bodies are the members of Christ" (1 Cor. iii. 16, v. 15). If only this becomes real to our hearts, we shall be filled with a noble and holy self-respect. We shall determine that soul and mind and body shall be made and kept in some sense worthy of Him who dwells within. The thought that this body, this mind, this heart is Christ's temple, will inspire us to care for all that pertains to the body, to strong efforts with a view to mental development, and to keep the heart with all diligence, seeing it is the innermost shrine of his temple. David's words become still more sublime and stimulating when we apply them to the Church of Christ—that Christ "in whom we are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. ii. 22). (5) Who then is willing, &c.—David's full consecration was the all-inspiring example. In this he was a type of Christ. His clear consciousness of sincerity gave him great power of appeal. A fully consecrated leader is necessary to a whole-hearted and enthusiastic people. (9) David the king also rejoiced with great joy.—In David's gladness we seem to hear a faint and far-off prophecy of that nobler joy with which our King regards the loving devotion of his people.

10—17.—Two qualities glorify this wonderful passage—its sublime conception of God, and its equally remarkable humility. The secret of both lay in David's full consecration, for only the pure in heart, the single-eyed, can see self or God aright.

18.—Keep this for ever in the imagination, &c.—God can both keep and stablish the surrendered heart.

Note the exuberant gladness that suffuses all this chapter. Joy follows consecration.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 18.—2 CHRON. I.

1.—His God was with him.—See also 1 Chron. xi. 9; Gen. xxxix. 2; Exod. iii. 12; Josh. i. 5; 2 Chron. xv. 9, &c. Here we have an explanation of all his subsequent success.

SOLOMON'S CHOICE.—"God giveth to him that hath. It was the previous possession of wisdom which qualified him for more. David distinctly recognises his son as 'a wise man;' and his wisdom is evinced by nothing more than his choice of wisdom beyond all other blessings. What he asked was 'a wise and understanding heart,'—'wisdom to govern this great people;' and his choice was so much approved, that benefits which he had refrained from asking — wealth, power, length of days—were thrown in without his seeking. The terms of his request indicate the nature of the 'wisdom' he required. That Divine wisdom in spiritual things, that heart religion, which the Jews sometimes denoted by this name, is not intended. With that he was not pre-eminently gifted. The wisdom which he craved was that of which he had already enough to be able to appreciate the value of its increase—practical wisdom, sagacity, clearness of judgment and intellect in the administration of justice, and the conduct of public affairs, with an aptitude for the higher branches of philosophical knowledge, both natural and moral."—Kitto. This should encourage us to be very definite and practical in our prayers for God's help in common things. The same Spirit that helped Solomon in the details of his judicial and kingly work, can make us wise and able for any work to which we are called, whether it be the learning (or teaching) of a lesson, the management of a business, the cooking of a dinner, or the government of a church. "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God . . . and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19.—2 CHRON. II.

1.—Determined to build.—"Rather, 'commanded that they should build.'" For the name of the Lord.—"The 'name of God' in Scripture is nearly equivalent to the presence of God. God is in his name."—Sp. Com.

4.—New moons.—"The law commanded that the first day of each month should be kept holy. Special sacrifices were prescribed (Num. xxviii. 11—15); and the blowing of the silver trumpets was ordered (Num. x. 10). It appears from passages in the Prophets that the 'new moons' were kept with much the same observances as the Sabbaths; business was suspended (Amos viii. 5), and the people assembled in the Temple for public worship (Isa. lxvi. 23; Ezek. xlvi. 3). Solemn feasts.—These are the three great annual festivals, the Passover, the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost), and the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. xxiii. 4-44; Deut. xvi. 1-17)."

5.—The house which I build is great.—The house itself was small—smaller than an ordinary parish church. The greatness, from an architectural point of view, consisted in the surroundings of the shrine. We moderns gather within our houses of worship; whereas the ancients met in the courts of the sacred house. Hence the grandeur of the various approaches to the Temple, and the comparative smallness of the Temple itself.

6.—But who is able to build Him an house, &c.—Solomon is nobly concerned for God's honour. He will have Hiram know that it is man, not God, who needs his house, seeing that no house, no, nor heaven itself, can contain Him. The house is to be built to satisfy man's need of an appropriate and appointed place in which to offer sacrifice. He regards it as a glorious privilege and an overwhelming honour to be allowed to build such an house for God and his people. Should we not often be wiser, humbler, and happier than we are, if we, as Solomon did here, looked upon all Christian service from the side of privilege and honour?

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20.—2 CHRON. III.

4.—The height was 120 cubits.—The "Speaker's Commentary" thinks we have excellent reason for supposing that the original text has been corrupted from 20 to 120.

7.—Cherubim.—"The explanation of the mystery of the Cherubim appears to be furnished in their new song (Rev. v. 9, 10). This can only be the language of human beings—of the multitude of the redeemed from among men, out of every nation,—of the great body of the believers in the Atonement, throughout all ages, countries, and nations. . . . The presence of the cherubim is always more or less connected with the idea, or practice, of sacrifice and atonement. We see this constantly in the Tabernacle and Temple; we see it in the live coal (the efficient atoning power of sacrifice) wherewith one of the seraphim (the same as cherubim) purified Isaiah's unclean lips (Isa. vi.); and we see it still more plainly in the Apocalypse."—Kitto.

15—17.—Jachin and Boaz.—"The pillars speak. (1) Jachin ("establishment"), the faithful purpose of God. He is faithful who promised. This includes his purpose; his purpose of love, his promise, his unchangeable faithfulness in all. (2) Boaz ("in whom is strength"), the power of Christ, his almighty power. Depend, rest, and stay thyself upon this almighty power, which is able to do above what we can ask or think. Love and power put together is a support firm and safe enough for faith to rest upon. Lean and rest upon both these pillars. If thou art not assured of his purpose, yet rest and stay thyself upon his power."—Henry and Scott. It is most probable that these pillars were isolated columns, not actual supports.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21.—2 CHRON. IV.

1.—An altar of brass.—"This altar was four times as long and broad as that which Moses made in the Tabernacle. God had greatly enlarged the borders of Israel; it was therefore fit that they should enlarge his altars. Our returns should bear some proportion to our receivings."—Henry and Scott.

2.—A molten sea.—"To us there is a fountain opened for all believers; nay, for all the inhabitants of Jerusalem to wash in, from sin which is uncleanness. There is a fulness of merit for all who believe in Jesus Christ. Also, our great Gospel duty, to cleanse ourselves by true repentance from all pollution, is signified. The laver was never covered up, but always open. The fountain is set open (Zech. xiii. 1)—set open in regard of the general offer of the Gospel unto all."

5.—Flowers of lilies.—Lilies seem to have been used as types of the Church of Christ. As the cherubim set forth that Church in reference to the Atonement, so the lily set forth her purity and beauty. "As the lily among the thorns, so is my beloved among the daughters."

6.—Ten lavers.—"The laver of the Tabernacle had probably been destroyed. The ten new ones were placed between the porch and the altar, and while the molten sea was for the priests to cleanse their hands and feet, these were intended for washing the sacrifices."—Jamieson.

7.—Ten candlesticks.—Lightfoot thinks that the increase of number from seven to ten was not only in conformity with the characteristic splendour of the edifice, but was a suggestion to the Hebrews that the growing light of the Word was necessary to counteract the growing darkness in the world.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 22.—2 CHRON. V.

9.—And they drew out the staves of the ark, &c.—"It was forbidden to draw these wholly from the rings (Exod. xxv. 15); but they appear to have been now drawn forward in such a way that their ends could be seen from the holy place though they were not visible from the porch or vestibule."—Sp. Com. Stanley suggests that this withdrawal of the staves signified that the ark had reached "the place of its rest." If so, it reminds us of Him (the ark's Antitype) who, when He had purged our sins, "sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." There they are unto this day.—"This day" cannot mean the time when Ezra wrote this book, seeing that the Temple had been destroyed so many years before. The phrase is doubtless a quotation from one of his original authorities, who, of course, wrote before the destruction of the Temple.

13, 14. — GOD TAKES POSSESSION OF HIS TEMPLE.—When? Just as soon as the Temple is ready for Him. So He filled the Tabernacle with his presence, as soon as it was built and dedicated (Exod. xl. 34). So, too, only ten days after our Lord's ascension, at Pentecost, He filled his new-born Church with glory, as soon as that Church was ready for his coming. Surely the lesson is obvious. He would come in power to all; but, alas! we are not ready. Again, the glory descended after that the priests had come out of the holy place. "All must come out that He may enter." Further, the glory of the Lord came when they were "as one to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord" (13). So, when they were "all with one accord in one place" (Acts ii. 1), and when they were united in "praising and blessing God" (Luke xxiv. 53), "suddenly there came a sound from heaven, and it filled all the house."

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23.—2 CHRON. VI.

An house of habitation for Thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.—"This was the special idea under which the Temple was designed and built—to give the Ark of God, and so the Divine presence, a fixed and permanent abode in the land."—Sp. Com.

Observe how the idea of the Temple as the appointed means of intercourse between God and man—as the place of mediation—recurs repeatedly throughout Solomon's prayers. The accepted worshipper is spoken of always as praying in, or towards, this house. How significant this of Christ, the one Mediator between God and men! His mediatorship is doubly typified here, as Henry and Scott remark—in the Temple itself, and in the ark of the covenant. The Temple tells of his human body, in which dwells the fulness of the Godhead, in which God, as man, dwelt with men; while in the ark we have a type of Christ in relation to holy law, obeying it perfectly, and also offering a perfect sacrifice for the sins of the world imputed to Him, so that sinners who repent and believe in Him may through Him draw near to God in peace. Thus the Temple tells of God's dwelling with men, and drawing men to Himself in the lowly humanity of Christ: the ark, of that glorious reconciliation between God and man which was accomplished by his perfect obedience and suffering death. Our readers, then, will see Christ in every reference to the Temple as the place appointed for worship. Observe the fulness of the provision made in this prayer for men who have sinned, and suffered through sin. Forgive . . . that they may fear thee (30, 31).—Observe the connection between forgiveness and godly fear, and compare Ps. cxxx. 4. "Then farewell hope; and with hope, farewell fear."—Milton. Concerning the stranger, &c.—The liberality of the Mosaic law to strangers was most remarkable. They were not to be vexed or oppressed (Exod. xxii. 21); were to be relieved when poor (Lev. xxv. 35); to be loved (Deut. x. 9); were allowed to make offerings under same conditions as the Israelites made theirs (Num. xv. 14—16); and might attend with the nation at the solemn reading of the law every seven years. Here, too, they have a prominent place in Solomon's prayer. These are sweet foreshadowings of the grace that bringeth salvation to all men.

THE INSPIRATION

OF THE BIBLE. A LECTURE BY H. L. HASTINGS, Editor of THE ANTI-INFIDEL LIBRARY.

"The heavenly citizen will do well to counteract infidel propaganda through the printing press. It would be expedient for all who are interested in Working Men's Clubs and Mechanics' Institutes to supply them freely with the admirable and instructive pamphlets written by Mr. Hastings, of Boston, and sold by Messrs. Bagster under the title of 'Anti-Infidel Library.' One of these tracts, upon 'The Inspiration of the Bible,' is one of the most pungent and useful ever published."—CANON WILBERFORCE, M.A. (The Trinity of Evil, p. 22).

In neat pamphlet form, fine tinted paper. For gifts and enclosure in letters. One Penny; post free, 3½d.

MORLEY HOME

FOR

Aged Governesses, Needlewomen, and Servants,

25, CHATHAM PLACE, HACKNEY, E.

THIS Home, recently established through the kindness of the late SAMUEL MORLEY, Esq., M.P., has been planned to meet the necessity of aged Governesses, Needlewomen, and Servants who may happen to be possessed of some small savings, to which friends might be willing to make up the small weekly payment necessary; or for others without means for whom families, either separately or unitedly, would pay, in recognition of valued services in the past.

The terms are 5s. for Board, 3s. for Lodging, Coals, and Gas, and 6d. Laundress. Total, 8s. 6d. per week.

In addition to these (and with a view to extended usefulness), there are other aged persons who have not filled either of the positions named, but who have passed through much sorrow and whose friends cannot receive them into their own homes, but would be willing to pay for their support elsewhere. The charge to such would be 10s. per week, and as their numbers increase a separate house would be taken, so as not to encroach upon the prior claim of the others.

The chief object of this work is to benefit those who have been true women, and who are now in life's last years unable to care for themselves, to whom the reading of God's Word free from toil and anxiety would be valued; and to the faithful child of God who has reached seventy, and even eighty years, there may always be found something to do for the Master in the little vineyard around her.

In accordance with the wishes of Mr. Samuel Morley, no intoxicants will be introduced—to use his own words, "Such things were not required." It is scarcely necessary to add that his reques will be faithfully carried out.

There has been considerable expense incurred in fitting up the House, and arranging it so as to avoid as much paid labour as possible. £100 is greatly needed at the present time to cover the claims due. Subscriptions and donations will be thankfully received, and, through the kindness of Messrs. Morgan & Scott, may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Applications for admission (in the first instance by letter) should be addressed to the Hon. Superintendent, Miss E. COALES, Morley Home, 25, Chatham-place, Hackney, E.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth boards, bevelled, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word 'seven' in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is 'to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry,' and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."

Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen.

Six Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS,

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England, and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

"The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is worthy the most liberal support of the public. It has done, is doing, and is likely to do, we believe, a grand work among our fishermen at sea."—The Yarmouth Independent.

"I look upon the Mission Vessel as a blessing to the trade of the Port."—The Mayor of Great Grimsby.

"It is indeed an advantage for our fishermen at sea by means of these vessels to enjoy the same privileges as we ourselves do on shore.—The Mayor of Great Yarmouth.

FUNDS are URGENTLY NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with EVERY FLEET.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET (Next door to Blackfriars Bridge).

N.B.—The Offices were removed to this address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

No extra payment required under the Institution's Policies after this date (May, 1886), on account of Occupation or Foreign Travel or Residence in any part of the World (always excepting risks in time of war).

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mr. JAMES SPOONER, of WINSLOW.

This patient is a lay preacher, and came to Coombe Lodge in the Spring of last year. His father and a brother had died of Consumption, and he was apparently destined to fade off in the same way. On examination, there was much congestion; action of the lungs very weak, and general debilitated condition of the whole frame.

The Cough was very bad, the expectoration offensive; there was loss of flesh and strength, very bad night sweats, very imperfect digestion, &c. Letters soon testified to improvement. The correspondence went on during the rest of the year (for nearly eight months), after which recovery was complete.

In a recent letter he says:—"Your treatment, under God's blessing, restored me to wonted health. I thank you very much for past favours. I always feel it incumbent to speak well of your treatment wherever I go. Make any use you please of my testimony.—Yours truly, J. Spooner, High-street, Winslow, Bucks.

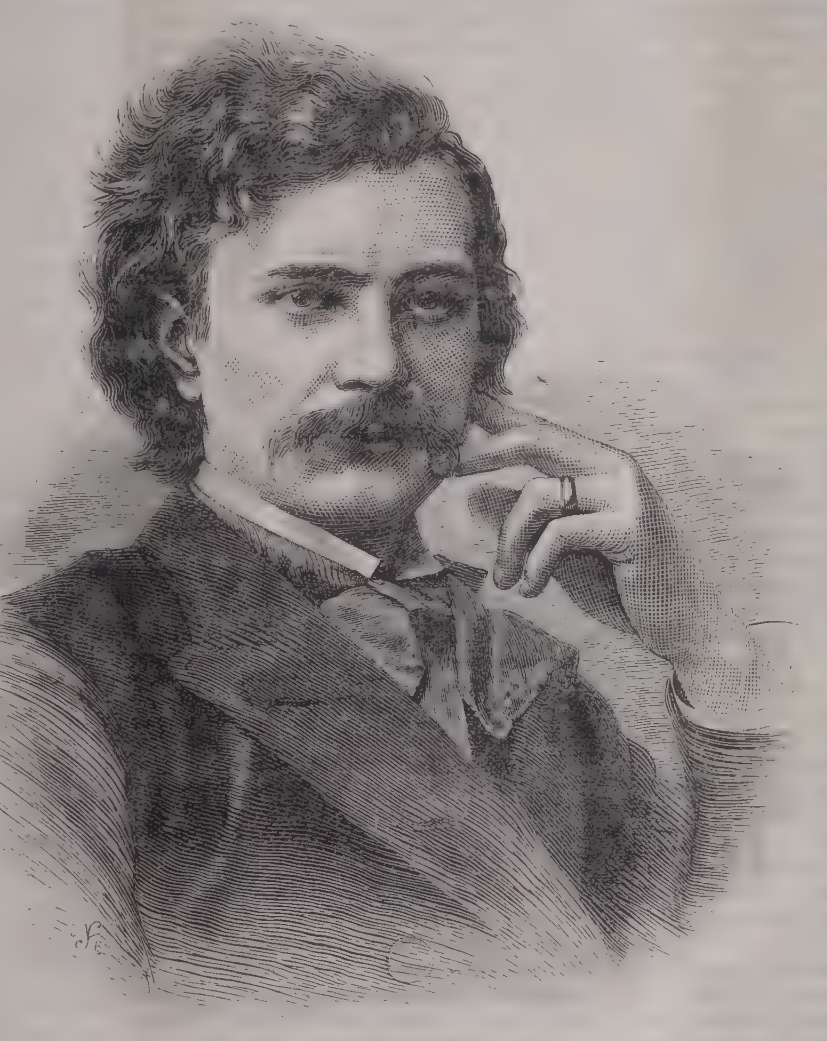
MR. AND MRS. AXEL GUSTAFSON.

NOT long since, in one of its attacks on the total abstinence reform, The Times had the temerity to assert that abstainers, as a rule, might be distinguished by their physical feebleness and their intellectual incapacity. The statement was so manifestly absurd, and so much at variance with the evidence, that it probably did little more than excite pity for a writer who could view a great subject through such a prejudiced medium, and for the conductor of a journal who could sully its columns by propagating such a gross calumny. If, however, the statement were to be taken seriously, it would surely be sufficient to introduce the writer of it to the subjects of our present portraits and sketch. Though Mr. AXEL GUSTAFSON is a scion of a stalwart race, he must, we should think, be like Saul among the Benjamites—"from his shoulders and upwards higher than any of the people." And yet there is not to be found in all this great city a more staunch member of the Times-despised sect of the Nazarites. As to the intellectual gifts and graces, both of himself and his wife, we shall have somewhat to say anon.

Mr. Gustafson is of Swedish birth, and is not yet forty years of age. His father is a prominent clergyman now residing in the University town of Lund, Sweden. When at school Mr. Gustafson took special interest in history, geography, and natural history. Being smitten with the emigration fever, he relinquished all home prospects and went to the United States. He was then about twenty-one years old, but even so early was an earnest student of men and things, and already an excellent linguist. The first few years of his life in the States were years of investigation, during which he became a naturalised American citizen.

It had been his ambition, from his first start out in life, to be a good man, and to wield a power for good in politics, in the study of which, almost from childhood, he had been profoundly interested, but he naïvely admits that it was not till he married the accomplished lady whose portrait graces our fourth page that he really "settled down."



MR. AXEL GUSTAFSON.

Choosing at first the journalistic field, he became a writer for several Boston papers of standing, devoting himself specially to résumés of European affairs. His articles secured for him flattering recognition from some whose names were then widely and honourably known in the political world. Experience, however, taught him that politics were too much of a game on both sides to permit of their doing much by themselves for the best interests of the nation. So he gradually became more interested in moral questions and issues than in those merely political.

It was thus that Mr. Gustafson was drawn into the close consideration of the temperance reform, though at the outset his views on the alcoholic habit were by no means so pronounced as they afterwards became. His first essay in this department of literature was an article on the Gothenburg system of licensing, which appeared in The Boston Herald. This led him to enter on an investigation of the different licensing systems of the world. Somewhere about this stage of his literary career the poet Longfellow, who had been for many years Mrs. Gustafson's friend, and had expressed admiration of her husband's political papers, induced him to contribute to the magazines and reviews.

By and by Mr. Gustafson, with his wife, came to Europe. He had not been long on this side of the Atlantic before he was brought into contact with the late and deeply-lamented Mr. Samuel Morley. Having forsworn the habit of smoking (so common among the devotees of the pen), and finding that he was greatly benefited by the relinquishment, Mr. Gustafson purposed writing a work on the baneful effects of indulgence in the weed. He mentioned the project to Mr. Morley, who, while admitting that smoking was a source of much evil, impressed on him the fact that the drink evil was infinitely greater, and at any rate more immediately pressing. Mr. Gustafson, however, with the ardour of a new convert, still pursued his anti-smoking quest. He examined some 500 or 600 works on the subject, in different languages in the British Museum, and in these researches was constantly confronted with the fact of the intimate connection between smoking and drinking habits.

At a subsequent interview, Mr. Morley returned to the question of the drink, and expressed the hope that his Swedish friend would write a book upon it; because, as he urged, a body of authentic evidence within practical compass had never yet been given to the world. In deference to this repeated wish, Mr. Gustafson set to himself the task which happily resulted in the preparation and publication of the now world-known work, "The Foundation of Death," which has justly established his fame both as writer and reformer.

When he began his mission, he was of opinion that the legal prohibition of the liquor traffic was neither possible nor just. He has seen cause since then to entertain a radical change of view. He had not been engaged in his researches for more than about a month, when he was convinced of the need of a book such as that suggested by Mr. Morley; he resolved to cut loose from all other literary engagements, and devote himself for a time entirely to the preparation of such a work. With the cordial co-operation of the authorities at the British Museum, and with the invaluable assistance of his wife, he was, within a comparatively short space of time, able to examine some five thousand volumes, and to arrange this vast mass of material for use in the actual preparation of the book, which also received the most careful revision while passing through the press; in this revision the author had the benefit of the opinion and advice of eminent living authorities, both here and abroad, among others Dr. James Edmunds and Dr. Norman Kerr, of London.

The striking title of the book came by a sort of "happy accident," and the verdict of contemporary criticism has confirmed its suitability and truthfulness. The book, which has already gone through several editions, has been and will be a great educative power in this vital struggle for many a day. It is, even so soon, being translated into seven languages—the author's native Swedish, German, French, Spanish, Malagasy, Burmese, and Mahratta.

Last week the Council of the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety gave a public reception to Mr. and Mrs. Gustafson, on their return from the United States. Dr. Norman Kerr and Canon Barker strongly expressed the indebtedness they felt, in common with others, to their guests for their valued services in the cause of sobriety. Dr. Kerr characterised "The Foundation of Death" as a most remarkable and instructive book; he particularly emphasised the scientific soundness and thoroughness of its chemical, physiological, and pathological departments; while the Canon said he was in a position to know that it had done a great deal among the upper classes in this country in directing their attention to the subject. In his brief but feeling reply, Mr. Gustafson referred to the wonderful advance in public opinion in the United States on the subject of the drink traffic; his views on this topic we were enabled to give at some length in a recent issue. Referring to his book, he earnestly affirmed that it would never have been written but for the genius and faithful assistance of his wife.

Mrs. Gustafson has herself been a voluminous writer. Many articles, sketches, and poems from her pen have appeared in the serials that go out from the well-known publishing house of Messrs. Harper Brothers, New York. Her contributions to Harper's Monthly and other papers, indeed, would constitute a bulky volume. One of her poems, "Little Martin Craghan," commemorating the heroism of a child who deliberately gave up his last chance of escape in order to save a number of men employed in the Pittston mines, was widely copied at the time of its appearance, and has since been enshrined in the pages of literary encyclopædias, and in rich volumes of selected verse. Her father is a retired trader in books, resident at Middletown, Connecticut. He has been in his day no mean benefactor to his town. He would never on any consideration knowingly admit a book of doubtful character into his store; if, perchance, such a work had found its way there, the whole edition was doomed to destruction rather than that one copy should be sold. He had collected, during his business career, many of the rarest works in the English language. Reared in this atmosphere, and having the opportunity of acquainting herself with some of the great writers of the past, it is not to be wondered that her natural gifts began to manifest themselves at a very early age. Family circumstances threw her into the society of such men as Wendell Phillips, Longfellow, Lloyd Garrison, and others, who were labouring both by voice and pen for the social regeneration and elevation of the people. Catching their spirit, she used her talent for the same end, her productions receiving the warmest recognition from the literary savants of New England. She wrote also for the daily press, and, being for a time resident in Washington, she was in touch with all the great public movements of the day.

Those personally acquainted with Mrs. Gustafson know how earnestly she sympathises with and co-operates in any work for the betterment of individual or social conditions, and would know that her womanly heart would be greatly touched by what she and her husband saw of the horrors and the ravages of the drink in this great city. The acquaintance formed with Mr. Morley, and other English philanthropists deeply concerned on this question, tended to strengthen their impression that this was the most imminent moral necessity of the day. Mrs. Gustafson very gladly and willingly set aside, to a large extent, the other literary work to which she had been accustomed, and threw her energies into her husband's project with respect to his new work; with what success we have already stated. In methods of temperance reform America is far ahead of the old country; in no department more than in the school. Many of the States have, by express legislation, directed that the rising generation should be adequately initiated into the truth about alcohol, from the standpoints of physiology and hygiene. There is, therefore, a demand for good school books on these topics. With the view of helping to supply this need, Mr. and Mrs. Gustafson are now engaged in preparing a series of instruction books, which, it may be anticipated, will do yeoman service in creating and fostering sound views in the minds of the young on subjects that must assuredly engage their attention in riper years. Inspired by mutual affection and esteem in a singular degree, and filled with a common philanthropic purpose, this gifted and well-favoured couple are devoting their best powers to the good of their generation; for which honourable task may God long spare and qualify them.

STUDY AND CURE OF INEBRIETY.

The last quarterly meeting of the Society which has taken on itself the herculean task of studying and curing inebriety, held at their rooms in Chandos-street, on Tuesday week, was one of much interest. The principal business was that of tendering a welcome to Mr. and Mrs. Gustafson, the authors of "The Foundation of Death," on their recent return from the United States. A goodly and most representative company assembled—one gentleman had come all the way from Bath, and another from Leicester—showing the high and general esteem in which the guests of the evening are held.

In assuming the chair, after tea, Dr. Norman Kerr said they also were happy in having with them Dr. Simon Fitch, one of the most distinguished members of the medical profession in Canada, and a staunch friend of the temperance cause. A formal resolution of welcome was cordially passed by the meeting; and, in reply Dr. Fitch said some excellent things about the treatment of those who have given way to the alcoholic habit. He was especially happy in his plea for thoughtful consideration in dealing with those whose will-power has become weakened. Often when such persons shrink back from a life-long pledge, which they fear they may break under the stress of temptation, they can be encouraged to a gentler or less formidable exercise of self-restraint. Dr. Fitch told of one case, in his own experience, where an inebriate willingly promised that whenever tempted to drink intoxicants, he would not yield without first consulting him. The result was that, when the temptation came to him, his promise, even without fulfilling its terms, strengthened him to resistance for the time, and he was able to fight his way back to sobriety. It would appear from the statements of Dr. Norman Kerr and Dr. Fitch, that in the due treatment of inebriates, Nova Scotia (where the latter now resides) is far ahead of Great Britain. Those who are the victims of the alcoholic craving are placed under restraint and care by legislative enactment, and thus prevented from bringing misery on themselves and those related to them. It is not a little humiliating for Englishmen to be told ever and anon that with all the accumulated wisdom of our past and venerable history, we are so far in the rear of younger nationalities, that ought to look to us for guidance instead of showing us a bright example.

We have elsewhere referred to the heartiness of the welcome accorded to Mr. and Mrs. Gustafson. It is not needful, therefore, to make any lengthened note here of that part of the interesting proceedings. We hope one suggestion made by Canon Barker will be carried out before long—that a popular and cheap edition of "The Foundation of Death" will be published. We agree with the Canon in thinking that the public opinion of this country is far from being sound on the question of alcohol; if this book (though it is a cheap one in its present form) were brought within the compass of the most slender purse, this educational process would be greatly helped.

We think it might have been agreeable to the audience to have heard something more of the thorough-going and systematic way in which our American cousins are grappling with the drink demon, and waging the good fight for the purity of their homes. But coming last on the programme, Mr. Gustafson considerately curtailed his remarks. If the meeting had taken place in America, probably Mrs. Gustafson would have been invited to speak. By and by we too will remove this badge of inferiority that too often attaches to the gentler sex among us; and, when a woman comes into any of our assemblies who has anything to say to edification, we will give ourselves the opportunity of profiting by it.

Among the letters of regret at absence from the meeting, read by the Secretary, there was a very cordial one from Sir Andrew Clarke, M.D., Bart., who wrote that Mr. Gustafson "well deserved the honour accorded to him, and more."

ILLUSTRATIVE ANECDOTES.*

A SOLDIER OF JESUS CHRIST.

"The Lord our God will we serve, and his voice will we obey."—Joshua xxiv. 24.

The following anecdotes are told of David Sandeman, the devoted missionary :—

Delighting as he did in vigorous exercise and gymnastic feats, he one day, in a walk with two companions, joined for a few minutes in the amusement of leaping over the stile at one corner of the old Queen's Park, Edinburgh. While his companions failed, he cleared the stile so easily and gracefully as to draw forth the admiration of a dragoon who stood by. When about to walk on, Mr. Sandeman turned to the soldier, got him into conversation, and spoke of the perils and honours of a life like his. Then, suddenly drawing himself up to his full height, he exclaimed with deep feeling; "There is something far better yet! It is to be a soldier of Jesus Christ. Are you that?" The dragoon looked with wonder on the man of muscle and sinew who could thus speak to his soul, and shook hands at parting, evidently deeply interested. Scenes like these were continually recurring; but this power of gracefully turning every little event into a means of usefulness could exist only in one whose natural atmosphere was the love of God, and in whose soul there was an uninterrupted gravitation towards his Divine Saviour.

One day in harvest, finding by the roadside a woman cutting grass, he plucked a head of wheat, and told her how a corn of wheat must die before that beautiful head could spring up, and that so Christ must needs die ere we could be saved. The woman was astonished, and the young missionary went on his way, praying that the Lord might send his word to her heart. So continually did he act upon his favourite text, "Whose I am, and whom I serve," that in a brief summer excursion in the west of Scotland, a companion of his journey informs us, that he believes he must have spoken to not less than five hundred persons in the course of their pedestrian excursion; and that when opportunity occurred he was as direct and ready in addressing the rich as the poor.

CALLED OF GOD.

"The Lord called Samuel; and he answered, Here am I."—1 Sam. iii. 4.

David Zeisberger was a most devoted worker amongst the Red Indians of America, and did a noble work in Christianising and civilising these wild tribes. His early history is interesting. David Zeisberger's forefathers were peasants, the followers of John Huss. When he was five years old his family fled, to escape persecution, to Herrnhut, where Count Zinzendorf then had gathered the remaining Hussites. David's father and mother were among the Herrnhutters sent by Zinzendorf to Georgia, but the boy was left in Moravia, to be educated by the Church of the Unitas Fratrum.

He was a small, delicate lad, with something in his face which attracted the notice of Zinzendorf. He sent the boy to a prosperous community of the Church near Utrecht, where education, as in godly private families of the time, was given through the lash. David went through a steady discipline of work, beatings, and fastings. One day a stranger whom he helped, when he was lost in the morasses near the town, gave him two pieces of gold, bidding him keep them and not give them to the community. David's conscience, however, forced him to give one piece to the brethren, who immediately charged him with having stolen it, and publicly punished him as a liar and a thief.

This was the stroke too much. That night David, with another boy named Shober, escaped from the community and set off to America, with no means but the solitary piece of gold which he had kept. It paid their way to London. There General Oglethorpe met the lads, and, struck by David's sensitive face and singular gravity, procured them a free passage to Savannah.

In the backwoods of Georgia Zeisberger at last found his father and mother. He was much impressed by the sight of the poor savages around him, and often pondered the question whether or not he should devote his life to the work of bringing those lost heathen to God.

Just at this juncture arrived Count Zinzendorf. He saw the lad, and detected again the same singular hint of promise on his face—a prophecy which he could not interpret. He told the brethren that the boy must have a chance, and appointed him one of his staff to return with him to Moravia. David came with him to Philadelphia, and embarked with the understanding that a clear road to fortune lay before him in Europe, and that he never was to return to America. The ship weighed anchor. Bishop Nitschmann, passing down the deck, saw the lad, pale and haggard, gazing at the receding shore.

"Zeisberger," he said, "is it possible that you wish to return?" "Yes."

"But for what reason?" "That I may learn to know Christ, and teach Him to the Indians," said David, finding speech at last in his extremity.

"Then if that be your mind, in God's name even now go back."

The ship was brought to, and the boy sent back. After this the Moravians regarded him as Eli did Samual : he was called of God. His name was entered on the list of the brethren and their trades, as David Zeisberger, destinirter Heidenbote. The lad at once left the community and went to the lodge of the great sachem of the Mohawks, and there lived and worked to learn thoroughly the habits and language of the Indians. He was adopted into the tribe of the Onondagas.

Thus began the remarkable history of a work which extended over sixty-two years.

DUBLIN PROTESTANT DEAF AND DUMB ASSOCIATION.—This Society, established to promote the spiritual and temporal welfare of the deaf mutes of the Irish Metropolis, has issued its report for the year ending March 31. It holds Gospel services in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, on Sundays, and has instituted a series of lectures on Wednesday evening, all these gatherings being conducted in the "Finger and Sign" language. The efforts for the temporal benefit of these afflicted people are mainly directed to obtaining employment for them, which is often very difficult for them to obtain on account of their infirmity. In sickness or distress they are relieved pecuniarily, but the better assistance is that which helps them to help themselves. During last winter there was much distress, through want of employment, but no Protestant deaf mute became chargeable to the Dublin poor rates. A reading-room is also provided for them at the Christian Union Buildings. Mr. Maurice F. G. Hewson is the secretary and missionary of the Association. He can be addressed at the rooms, as above.

A PRAYER.

Oh, mighty King of Glory!
  Thy chosen heralds send
To tell the old, old story,
  To earth's remotest end.
Give hearts of love and pity,
  And willing, zealous feet,
Through forest, plain, and city,
  Thy mercy to repeat.

Oh, Saviour, bleeding, dying,
  Thy deathless love reveal,
Until ourselves denying,
  We burn with holy zeal:
Till we our cross upbearing,
  Shall bleed and die for Thee;
Thy holy service sharing,
  From sin and self set free.

Oh, Saviour, coming, reigning,
  Returning to thy throne;
Thy blood thy banner staining,
  Awake, awake thine own!
Thy victory foreseeing,
  May we go forth and fight;
Nor dream of ever fleeing,
  Till Thou hast won thy right.

THE WORLD FOR JESUS.

Go ye into all the world
With the flag of love unfurl'd,
Speed the news o'er land and sea,
Publish pardon full and free.

Tell God's love to sinful men,
Tell it o'er and o'er again,
Till each creature under heaven
Knows the gift that He has given.

Forward, children of the light,
Pierce the gloom of heathen night;
Point to Him, the Morning Star,
Who can chase the darkness far.

Tell of Jesus, who can free
From the chains of slavery—
Who can give the weary rest,
And relieve the heart opprest.

Far across the distant wave
Tell men of his power to save,
Till all join the sweet refrain,
"Worthy is the Lamb once slain."

Yours is blessed work indeed,
Though with tears ye sow the seed,
Harvest joy will come at last,
Weeping be for ever past.

JAPAN.—Christian services have been held in a Buddhist temple near Osaka, by permission of the priest, who gathered the congregation.

PRESTON Y.W.C.A.—On Thursday week the new rooms of this Association were opened. They are centrally situate in Cannon-street, and include reading-room, cloak, and waiting-rooms. The branch, which was started in January, 1881, has now 300 members. The opening ceremony was performed by Mrs. Darwin Fox, of London, who spoke of the origin of these societies, and the duty of the members. Rev. W. F. Newton, the President of the branch, also spoke, and referred to the Secretary, Miss White, who was unable to be present through illness. Several of the local clergy were present, and the room, which holds about 300, was filled.

THE AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY has now 1139 pensioners living in various parts of the country, of whom 121 receive pensions of £10 10s., 388 of £7 7s., and 630 of £5 5s. In the four homes situate at Camberwell, Hornsey-rise, Brighton, and Stamford-hill, 180 of the aged pilgrims reside. What comfort and peace these facts mean to these old people we cannot know; but we do know that this institution must be a channel of much blessing to the aged Christians, none of whom are under sixty years of age. Collections for the society have been made in various places of worship, and by this means the operations of the society have been, and we hope will be, still further extended. Mr. J. E. Hazelton is the secretary, and the offices are at 83, Finsbury-pavement, London, E.C.

GRACE that BRINGETH SALVATION:

ITS SEVENFOLD ELEMENTARY LESSONS.

Titus ii. 11—14.

By Mr. J. VAN SOMMER.

PART III.

We have considered how the grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men teaches what we should deny, how we should live, and what we should hope for. This may be designated as the human side; that is, we are the doers. Now we have to consider the Divine side. God in Christ is the doer, who gave Himself that He might redeem and purify. Who gave Himself for us. First, let us feed on the truth in its simplicity (deep, also, indeed), and in its preciousness; ever as little children in this respect, desiring the first messages of the love of God that we may grow thereby. Who gave Himself. Who—the brightness of God's glory and the express image of his person. The Word who was in the beginning, who was with God, and was God. Though He was the Sent One in the Divine counsels, yet He gave Himself. He willingly came, and toiled, and suffered, and died. Himself: how personal! Though He was rich in glory, yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich. He, how rich; how poor! We, how needy; how enriched! He who was in the form of God surrendered that condition, and He is now in our form, though glorified. He gave his life a ransom for many. Greater love hath no man than this.

For us: on our behalf, for our benefit, to purchase us. Us, who were far off, under bondage, who had all sinned and come short of the glory of God. He died the just for the unjust. He loved me and gave Himself for me.

Christ's work on earth for us is finished. Hereby is the justifying righteousness provided for us as defective; hereby is the justifying expiation provided for us as transgressors. This work on earth for us was preparatory to his work in us, which is continuing—namely, That He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify us to Himself. Redeem—set free—free us from all iniquity—all lawlessness. The Lord Jesus, by virtue of the ransom of Himself, sets us free from lawlessness, self-will, independence of God, the essential principle of sin; which, when yielded to, leads to actual transgressions in manifold forms. For any created being to act as if he had no Supreme Ruler to whom he is accountable is lawlessness. The redemptive miracles of the Lord Jesus as regards the body encourage us in this matter to seek spiritual healing and life, both for ourselves and for others. The diseased came, and their friends came; and the cry for each one's particular malady was attended to. Some had to wait a little, and some were dealt with differently to others; one needed to be touched twice. But all who touched, or were touched, were healed; all who sought, found; no one who knocked at the door of Christ's heart was unattended to, either as regards himself or those for whom he applied. As in body then, so now in spiritual maladies, and in bad habits, even those which through long repetition have created impelling laws almost, deliverance is provided with healing and soundness through the exercise of the redeeming power of the risen Saviour. Here is the sure deliverance from bad tempers, hard thoughts, sharp words; from intemperance, impurity, sensuality; from dulness, or deadness, or lame walking, or deafness to the voice of God, or defective sight, or feverish excitable dispositions, or hardness of heart with much uncharitableness. Whatever the tendency, the fever of soul, the temptation, when the crucified Saviour, now risen, is appealed to, life-giving, delivering virtue flashes with lightning speed to the suppliant's rescue; and Christ risen is felt to be the living power of God for our salvation. Also Christ is not only known experimentally as the power of God, but He becomes more and more known as the wisdom of God, seeing that in these things through his redeeming and purifying power the loving desires of God for our sanctification are effected.

MRS. ZADEL BARNES GUSTAFSON. [See pages 1 and 2.]

Purify unto Himself. Through the Lord Jesus there is provided not only redemption from that which defiles, but a new creation of that which is redeemed. Herein is the true inward cleansing for our sin-stricken nature. This should be carefully distinguished from the freeing us from our sins through Christ's justifying blood. In the next chapter we read of the washing of regeneration, the cleansing through a fresh life, which life is that of the second man, the Lord from heaven communicated in the Holy Ghost. The Spirit of life in Christ Jesus delivers us, sets us free from the law of sin and death. The Lord Jesus purifies, and purifies to Himself. Instrumentally, this is effected through the Word of truth, as we read in Ephesians v.—"That He might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the laver of water in the word." And He will finally present the Church to Himself glorious; and there will be no wrinkle telling of the old condition with its decay and weariness and cares; and no spot telling of the old leprosy, or any kindred thing; but we shall be holy and without blemish.

Peculiar.—This word only occurs here in the New Testament. A peculiar people—peculiar in this respect, that while through natural birth we are necessarily influenced, and properly so in measure, by the natural and the visible, the present, yet the children of God are also through their spiritual birth to be influenced, and influenced supremely, by the unseen, the future, the eternal, by things "beyond this present existence." They are fitting for future ages, and this already affects their present course.

Zealous of good works.—The lessons of grace return in conclusion to the human side, to the fruit of noble works. These should be mainly performed by each one himself and herself, and not delegated; sympathy being shown in the works of others as an addition, not as a substitute.

Zealous—earnest, warm-hearted, with deepening sympathy and personal activity. How we all long for holier desires, to follow more closely in the pattern of Him who "went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with Him." Herein consists the worship of the life. For when we present the character of the Lord Jesus, when we reflect his excellencies, 1 Pet. ii., we show forth his praises by showing forth Himself.

Disciple is an old word and it may sound pedantic to use it; yet may the substantial meaning ever describe ourselves. Learning these sevenfold lessons of the grace of God that bringeth salvation, so learning that we are doers of the Word and not hearers only, we are working out our salvation. If carried on in a spirit of loving, holy, reverential fellowship with the Lord of Glory, we shall more and more prove that God is working in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. We shall be making our calling and election firm; and there will finally be richly supplied unto us the entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Birmingham.—Rev. P. E. Wilson, All Saints Rectory, Birmingham, appeals for £400 to complete the purchase of a mission hall in the parish. The hall lies in the midst of a large population.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

One of the most specious forms of evil is brought before us, not indeed for the first time, in the pages of the report for 1885 of the Homes for Working Girls in London. It is that of the deliberate attempt, on the part of vicious men, in some cases directing employment agencies, to entrap young girls to their destruction. And not less important is the danger to which homeless girls are always exposed in such a city as London, and which is much intensified by the thoughtlessness or wilfulness of mistresses and other employers. For instance, one case is given of a girl who had come a long distance from the country being discharged at the end of a month with 2s. 6d. in her pocket. But that she was received into one of these Homes, she would have been adrift upon the world, without the possibility of returning to her own home. But it is for the protection of young girls that these Homes have been established, and herein we see one of the counteracting forms which good assumes.

The report (quite a volume, consisting of nearly two hundred pages) is in itself a study, and there is in the opening pages an amount of suggestion and food for reflection which it would be well for all to ponder and seek to digest. Immediately under the head, "The Work of the Year 1885," we have, as a side-head to following paragraphs, "Himself hath done it;" and anyone perusing the report will see that the spirit of these words underlies the whole work. Our lament is, says the Director, that we can so far accommodate only 345 working girls. To philanthropists, and especially to those who are not philanthropists, but should be, these pages may well be commended.

The Homes are now eight in number. The first was opened in July, 1878, since which date no fewer than 5825 girls have found a home in the different establishments. From a perusal of the reports concerning each Home this is the primary view we get—that it is a home in the true sense of the word, a bright and cheerful place, to which the girls delight to return when their work is done, and where they are sure to find, not only means for healthful recreation, but sympathy and kindness from those in their own sphere, and good advice and spiritual counsel from the Matron; above all, where they are so surrounded with an atmosphere of prayer, so gently led to look to Jesus, that many have been led to yield their lives to Him, to realise that in his love alone there is fulness of joy. The ordinary life of these Homes is diversified and brightened in many ways—by pleasant musical evenings, by tea-parties once a month amongst themselves, to which the Matron is invited as well as some of their own personal friends; by drawing-room gatherings, got up by wealthy friends, and by the annual excursions. And prominent among those who thus contribute to their enjoyment, as well as of the supporters of these beneficent institutions, are the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen.

Of the various Homes, one (Norfolk House) is situated at the East-end of London: here bedroom accommodation is to be had for two shillings per week; another is situated at Duncan-terrace, Islington; a third and fourth in N.W. and S.W. districts, and the four others at the West-end. Full board (i.e., breakfast, dinner and tea) is provided at all the Homes for 4s. 6d. per week; but although the girls work from early morn till late at night very few can manage to provide for themselves more than two meals a day.

As a sharp illustration of the struggle in which these girls are almost always engaged, it is stated that last year as much as £78 9s. 9d. was expended in assisting needy young workwomen out of work and homeless; and this besides many donations sent for the special object of helping those who are unable to help themselves, through bad trade and sudden loss of employment. And concerning this it is added "We feel assured that no expenditure during the year has been more satisfactorily made than that to help the inmates who have been unable to pay." Besides these several Homes there is an English and Foreign Women-Servants' Institute, through which 396 situations have been secured, with a very few exceptions, by foreigners. Of the appreciation and gratitude of the girls, many of whom learn for the first time in their lives the joy and comfort of a home, there is abundance of evidence.

There is one other fact to which the Honorary Director (Mr. John Shrimpton, 38, Lincoln's Inn-fields, W.C.) directs special attention—that no less a sum than £1050 is owing to the bankers; this appeal will surely have a hearty response from our many readers who know well how truly valuable is the work.

"TAKE ME AS I AM."

The following incident appears in a recent issue of The Y.M.C.A. Record, Montreal:—

A young Scotchman, aged 24, was admitted to the General Hospital suffering from an affection of his foot, which turned into erysipelas, ending in blood-poisoning, entailing his isolation in the infectious ward, and shutting him off from all intercourse, save with the nurse and one visitor. David was a singularly pleasant-faced and sweet-spoken lad; you could not but love him, and yet his life had been a failure as far as worldly success is concerned. The visitor found he was the son of godly parents in a village near Edinburgh, that his brothers and sisters loved him tenderly and well, and yet all were ignorant of the sore straits he had passed through, still less that his life was fast ebbing away, so they were written to, to prepare them for what was fast drawing on.

Early in the intercourse of patient and visitor, the question was asked, "Are you saved, David; do you know Jesus?" "No, no," he said, "it's all a puzzle to me, I don't understand it. Last January I attended Mr. Moody's meetings, and here was a hymn they sang I could not get away from, and yet it seemed so queer; the refrain was, 'Take me as I am, Oh! take me as I am;' now, if I'm taken as I am, there's no much hope for me." "Ay, but, my lad," the visitor made answer, "you forget the previous line, 'My only plea, Christ died for me, Oh! take me as I am?'" So the blessed truth of atonement dawned upon his mind, and was accepted by his heart, and, before his most kind and sympathetic nurse closed his eyes in death, the first verse of the hymn expressed his feelings—

Jesus, my Lord, to Thee I cry—
Unless Thou help me I must die,
Oh! bring thy free salvation nigh
And take me as I am.

He was buried in the lot of the Y.M.C.A. in Mount Royal Cemetery, and his people written to that his last sleep was entered on. But, oh! the letters that came back, the bitter cry of sorrowing affection from father (an aged man) and sister, as well as a touching tribute from his former minister. If they had only known his circumstances, how gladly they would have ministered to his wants; now, alas! all they can do is to send a lovely wreath of immortelles to lay on the grave, and money from brothers and sister to erect a marble tablet to his memory, with the verse engraved on it on which his dying faith rested.

HOME FOR INVALID LADIES AT MENTONE.—Last season, thirteen English and two Swiss ladies wintered at Villa Helvetia. The home is established for the benefit of young gentlewomen of limited means, who are in delicate health, and to whom a winter spent in the Riviera would probably be the means of renewing their failing strength. It is open for six months, from November to May, and during this period a service is held at the home every week, but visitors are free to attend whatever church they prefer. Two more bedrooms are about to be added, so that the Villa will accommodate two more ladies. The property has recently been vested in seven trustees. Information respecting it may be obtained from Mrs. Dudgeon, Les Grottes, Mentone, Alpes Maritimes, France.

NOTES FROM BULGARIA.

Being at Constantinople on a visit to my daughter, I took a two days' journey to Philippopolis, to see a little of the Christian work carried on there, and was kindly entertained by my friends A. J. and Elizabeth Tonjoroff. The interest which has been felt in Bulgaria, and the uncertainty which seems to hang over the future of this country, will, I feel sure, call forth the sympathy of Christian friends, as it is so important, while the door is open, to use every effort for the spread of Gospel truth.

A number of the Bulgarians are receiving a good education at the American colleges at Constantinople, so that with the local and missionary schools, and a free library with 60,000 volumes, their condition in this respect is improving. Of the 40,000 population of Philippopolis about 25,000 belong to the Orthodox Greek Church; there are several thousand Jews, Armenians, and Mohammedans, only about 400 Roman Catholics, and less than 300 Protestants. With the increase of education many see the empty forms of some of the religious, and infidelity is on the increase, especially among those who study at the Gymnasium.

Mr. Tonjoroff has done useful work as a former representative of the Bulgarian Senate in obtaining several improvements in the prisons, such as finding the prisoners manual employment and libraries; besides preaching the Gospel and carrying on day-schools, he has translated and printed several books in the Bulgarian language, such as "Christy's Old Organ," "Saved at Sea," "Religion in Daily Life," &c.

Philippopolis is rendered picturesque by several rocky hills, such as those at Edinburgh and Athens, and at the foot of one of these, called Gendempt Tépi, or Hell Hill, is situate the hospital built some years ago by the Bulgarian Government, but left, a good building, without any resources for efficient management. Mrs. Tonjoroff has here laboured unremittingly, her strength and monetary resources having been heavily taxed during the last winter at the time of the war with Servia. Being without funds to pay the servants, or to provide food or clothing, except what is given mostly from foreign parts, the difficulty of caring for 130 to 140 patients is great. In many cases which are incurable or troublesome the treatment is dropped, and they are left to take their chance.

Mrs. Tonjoroff is very anxious to provide a small cottage hospital near her own home, where she could take some of those who have been brought to the love of Christ, and nurse them as best she could. She has a suitable building now offered, which, with repairs, fittings, and furniture, would cost £300. Although her husband is a Bulgarian she is an English lady, and I feel confident that Christian friends in England will not fail to give her encouragement and assist her in this laudable effort for the needy. A portion of the building would also be adapted for a Bible-class, and in the winter for a soup kitchen, or to distribute other gifts to the poor.

Bank, Banbury, Oxon. Charles Gillett.

THE CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY, after working quietly for eleven years, has been affiliated as an auxiliary of the Medical Missionary Association. It strives to interest children practically in medical mission work, and although the results may appear small from a monetary point of view, yet the importance of training children in sympathy with missions is so great that we shall rejoice if the alteration be the means of its extension. During the year ending June 30 it sent £95 to various medical missions, and in addition, parcels of clothing, made by the children of various branches at their working meetings, have been given. Those interested in extending this work among the young should write to the secretary, Miss Annie R. Butler, Medical Mission House, 104, Petherton-road, Highbury, N., for a copy of the report.

OUR CHILDREN IN CANADA.

BY ONE OF MISS MACPHERSON'S HELPERS.

It was a fine breezy autumn morning when we started out to visit some of the children who had come from the old country to find happy homes in Canada. Our first visit was to a house where a wee child had been adopted just a year ago. We found the pleasant-faced young mother in her garden, and the pretty blue-eyed little one playing about, wonderfully improved and grown. What joy it was to see her nestle in the kind arms as we sat together in the little parlour. Little Annie had been very delicate, and was still far from strong; but the kind mother was doing her utmost to strengthen the weakly body, and we trust in another year or two she may become quite strong. How wonderfully had this good home opened up for a deserted waif, where she was having the individual love and care which a child so much needs for its happiness and development.

A walk of half a mile brought us to the house of a good old German couple, who had some months ago taken an orphan boy. They received us in a most friendly way. Johnnie was at school, so Mr. Q—— volunteered to go with us to the schoolhouse to see the child. It was the first time we had entered a Canadian school, and we were glad of this opportunity. The building was of brick, of a good size, and thoroughly substantial. We were ushered into a commodious room, well fitted with convenient desks, and at one end an enormous slate, fitted into the wall, on which the teacher wrote her exercises and sums for the children. Although early in September, the morning had been chilly, and a fire had been kindled in the huge stove, diffusing pleasant warmth and comfort through the building. About fifty boys and girls, from the ages of six to fourteen, were assembled, busily engaged with their books and slates. Johnnie was called up from his place to speak to us, and we soon recognised our bright little man of last year's party. He had such a smiling face and happy look, and was well and comfortably clothed; how thankful we were that he was here, in free, happy Canada, instead of in a lonely workhouse.

Another little fellow, with fair hair and merry roguish face, whom we had intended to visit during the day, came forward. In answer to our inquiries, he said his "Pa" lived a mile away; he came to school all the time, and helped with the "chores" morning and evening. We had a chat about the old Home at Hackney, and the good and steady sister who had come out three months previously, and was now the much loved, trusty daughter in a Canadian family. M—— asked for her address; we wrote it down, and then asked him if he could read it. "Not very well, but that won't matter; dad will be able to read it." On asking him how many children were in his home, he answered promptly, "Oh, only two, one girl and a boy, that's me!" We left, praising God in our hearts for these two boys, rescued from much sorrow and want on the other side.

We called at another school-house, a very fine building, with two large rooms side by side, one filled with the elder scholars, and the other with the younger. Both were presided over by well-educated and highly-intelligent young women, who seemed to have the training of their little pupils very much at heart. In answer to our inquiries, a lovely little girl stepped forward, with shining, wavy hair, and dressed with extreme neatness and care, so entirely changed and improved that we should not have known her to be the same as the tiny pale creature who had left for Canada about three years before. It was well worth a long journey by sea and land, if only to see this one again, saved from consignment to the workhouse, after the death, one after the other, of father, mother, and aunt, and now cared for by such tender hands.

We would fain have lingered by this dear child's side, and have noticed more particularly the working out of the Canadian school system, but time was passing on, so we returned to the hotel, where Mr. L—— and his eldest daughter were waiting to convey us in their comfortable "democrat" to their house. Mr. L—— is a fine, stalwart Cornishman, about fifty years of age. Thirty years ago he emigrated to this country, and took up land in this neighbourhood, at a time when very little land was cleared, and the work was much more difficult than it is now. But Cornishmen are not wont to be overcome by difficulties, and he steadily worked on, until he had a comfortable homestead about him.

Our way led along one of Canada's concession roads, straight as an arrow, which terminates on the north at Owen Sound, on the Georgian Bay, and on the south at the beautiful Lake Erie. We passed over a branch of the River Thames on our way, which Mr. L—— said ought surely to remind us of the old land. The harvest had all been gathered in two or three weeks previously, and now on either side of the road the fields were ploughed up ready for the seed to be put in for the fall wheat. Some of the fields had already been sown, and tiny blades of green were springing up, soon to be covered with a rich warm mantle of snow, keeping them safe and warm till the ensuing spring. Substantial farmhouses, with their adjacent commodious barns, were all around, and before long we pulled up at a handsome brick house, now the home of Sam S——. We did not alight, but waited for the mistress and boy to come out to us. As we looked at the house, with its garden, orchard, and rich fields surrounding, it seemed like a strange dream, to realise that this was really the home of the miserable little urchin who less than a year ago had stood outside the building where Mr. Payson Hammond was holding children's meetings, entreating to be allowed in, and was refused entrance on account of his ragged clothes. What a transformation scene, from the cold, heartless streets of our great city, where Sam and his little sister had tramped many weary days, begging coppers for their drunken father, to this peaceful home, where comfort and plenty reigned! "Ah!" said the good woman, as she stood by the side of our carriage, Sam beside her, with rosy cheeks, strong and sturdy, "if he is a good boy he will be just like our own; we have but one daughter, and she will take him everywhere with her."

Half-a-mile further brought us to Mr. L——'s house, when a little fellow came bounding towards us, lifting his straw hat high in the air, and warmly expressing his joy at seeing us again. This was Ernest B——, a bright boy of eleven years, who had come out to Canada the previous April. And where had Ernest come from? During the month of March, a young lady, who had charge of one of the Y.W.C.A.'s in London, went one morning to a railway station to watch for poor unprotected girls coming up to the great city. She met there a person who seemed to be in deep trouble, and a few words of sympathy brought out the story of her sorrow. She had had a good home and a kind husband, but in an evil hour he was tempted away from her, and the old story of utter desertion followed. Left without means of support, every piece of furniture was gradually sold to get bread, the home was broken up, and Mrs. —— failing to find work, starvation was staring them in the face. The young lady instantly set to work; she procured situations for the mother and eldest daughter, while little Ernest was brought to Miss Macpherson, who received him at once. He was found to be a good, obedient boy; was quickly placed on the list for emigration by the first party sailing, and at the farewell tea on the last Monday before starting the grateful mother, with tears in her eyes, expressed her thankfulness to God for the deliverance she had experienced when in sore trial and darkness.

We received a truly hospitable Canadian welcome from Mrs. L—— and her youngest daughter, a tall, handsome girl. After the mid-day repast, the "democrat" was again brought to the door, and we started to see some of the boys living in the neighbourhood. At a short distance from the farm we came across Charles H—— and his "boss," busy ploughing and putting in the seed. Charles came up to the fence to greet us, looking sun-burnt and strong, saying he liked the work and was well satisfied with Canada. About a couple of miles further on, we came to a corner where two roads met, three farm-houses being situated within a few hundred yards of each other, and at each house we were to find one of our children. Alighting at the first, we were shown into the kitchen, where the good wife was busy baking; several apple pies, in process of making, were on the table, and our little girl, Lizzie H——, was helping, looking stout and well. Lizzie is rather tender-hearted, and the tears started to her eyes as she came forward to bid us welcome. But we need not feel anxious about the tears; she quickly told us that she had a happy home, and would not like to leave it on any account. This dear girl reads her Bible every day, and does not forget to pray for her sick father and toiling mother in the old country. She tries to learn everything, and make herself as useful as she can, nursing the baby, of whom she is very fond, saying it is like mother's baby at home.

At the next farm we missed seeing the boy, a big lad who could not get work in England, and who had gladly taken the opportunity afforded him by Miss Macpherson of emigration. But the good-natured housewife could not speak highly enough of George. At the third farm we found a little fellow who had been out from England and in this home for eighteen months. He had not grown much, but looked the picture of happy contentment, while he seemed to be the much-loved eldest child of the kind-hearted, gentle mother, who was a German. She had much to tell of his handy ways of helping her in the house and doing the general "chores." He could milk the cows, too, very well, but she would not let him do this often, as she considered his arms were not quite strong enough yet for that work. "He's awful good to the little ones," said she. "One day, when he was at my mother's and stayed all night, the baby cried in his absence and would not be pacified." Tommy went to the cellar and brought us some very fine juicy apples, with which we were regaled, for we could not respond to the kind invitation and stay to tea, having promised to return to Mrs. L——.

During the evening we walked half a mile to a comfortable farm, where lived a boy and girl from the Stratford Home. Both looked as happy and contented as possible, and spoke highly of the kindness they received from all around. Polly inquired about her two little sisters, who are both adopted in happy homes, and told us how her second brother, living three miles away, had been to see her. She told us how many old friends from the dear Hackney Home met at church and Sunday-school; and Frances L——, who was with us, added that often it was amusing after church to see the boys get together for a little chat about their present and past circumstances, comparing notes as to their respective homes, and their ability to do the required work. They are very fond of rehearsing their exploits to each other, and Frances told us how Ernest one day was so anxious to churn the butter all by himself, as one of his old companions had "brought it" in seven minutes, and he wanted to try and do the same.

Next morning we started again in the "democrat," with the youngest daughter as our driver, to visit another little boy, Charlie M——, the brother of Polly, whom we had seen the previous evening. It was a balmy morning, with a lovely fresh breeze, after a night of rain. The sky was of the deepest blue, and the patches of bush and swamp were most beautiful—the tall, graceful elms looking as if they would reach the sky, the maples just beginning to change colour and put on their gorgeous autumn dress. It was a "mud road" on which we had to travel, and this being decidedly muddy after a good deal of rain, we made rather slow progress. At length we arrived at Charlie's home, an old-fashioned but roomy building, with a fine orchard filled with apple-trees laden with rich fruit. Charlie was seated in the rocking-chair, nursing the three-months'-old baby, while the young mother was ironing the whitest of snowy-white linen. Mrs. H—— has as sweet a face and as bright a smile as you could find in all Canada. She received us most cordially, begged us to "lay off" and stop for dinner. Our time, however, was limited, so we accepted instead a slice of home-made cake, while we chatted with the boy about his home, his sister Polly, and the many delights of his adopted country. Charlie had had a letter from his elder brother a few days before, and he fetched it for us to read. It was such a nice letter that I cannot do better than give a part of it here.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—I have a good home myself, and I hope you have the same. I have heard from aunt, and I am sorry to say that father drinks just as bad as when we left the Home. I miss the friends in England, but if the Lord spares us, we can go over and see them in five or six years time. I keep up my Scripture portion every day, and I hope you do the same. I always find something out of my Bible to help me through the day. I remember what Miss Macpherson told us—I hope you do too—that is, have secret prayer every day; and the Lord answers my prayers.

We have a piano here, and my mistress is going to learn me to play on it. I go to Sunday-school and church every Sunday, and hear about the Lord. After I get used to the country, and know my way about, I will come and see you.

"Create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me." Ask the Lord to give you a clean heart. Keep trusting in the Lord and He will carry you through. Please write soon.

Your affectionate brother, JOHN M——.

What a contrast the lives of these boys present to a couple of years ago, when, their mother dying in —— Hospital, they had run the streets with no one to care for them, while their father was drinking in the public-house. C. R. S.

DR. SOMERVILLE'S TOUR.

IN a recent issue of The North British Daily Mail there is a detailed and deeply interesting sketch of Dr. Somerville's evangelistic tour in the Western Islands of Scotland, as far as completed. We give the following extracts:—

The Moderator began early in July in Campbeltown, and after proceeding through the parishes of Kintyre crossed over to the island of Islay. The many distilleries in that island have an influence on the village population the reverse of salutary. Meetings were held in six districts of the large and fertile island. Lonely Jura, with its three conspicuous bare heights and wild moors, was also visited, and a meeting held in the village of Small Isles, the parish minister kindly offering his church, and himself personally attending. The district of the Mull Presbytery was thereafter entered, and ground broken in the historic Iona. After the torrent of tourists had gone, who daily tear through the island and gaze on its Cathedral's ruins with more or less ignorance of what "Iona" means, the people of the island gathered in the little church by the sea, and listened to the Gospel which Columba taught to the islanders thirteen centuries ago. The congregations of Tobermory, Dervaig, and Salen in Mull were visited, as well as that at Lochaline in Morven, and along the shores of the beautiful Loch Sunart, those of Strontian, Archaracle, and Ardnamurchan. Strontian is notable as being the place where a site was refused to the large body of people who adhered to the Free Church in 1843, and who in consequence had to worship in a floating church moored to the beach, and in which, after it had been stranded by a gale, they continued to worship for thirteen years. A more enlightened proprietor granted the site now occupied by the commodious church.

Dr. Somerville then made his way to Skye. The impoverished crofters of Skye have made their island famous in the annals of the Empire. But neither the burning land question nor the still more potent soaking rain prevented large audiences from assembling to listen to the Moderator. Owing to the imperfect knowledge of English in several of these places, Dr. Somerville found himself under the necessity of employing the method of sentence-by-sentence interpretation, which he has found successful in many lands. In the skilful hands of Mr. Lamont, of Snizort, the Gaelic, even with its peculiarities of idiom and construction, was found quite as tractable as Greek, Turkish, or Kafir! A day was given to the pretty Isle of Ramsay, which lies off the east coast of Skye. The people were glad that the day was wet, as they were thus able to get to church, whereas had it been fair they must have been haymaking.

From Skye, Dr. Somerville crossed the Minch to the outer Hebrides, commonly known as the Long Island. The fishing people had not yet returned from the East Coast fishing, so that Stornoway Castle, from among its woods, looked down on an empty harbour. But as it was the communion season in Stornoway the town was very full, for on such occasions people come from every part of Lewis and even from the mainland. As soon as the steamers had been sighted intimation was given that the Moderator would preach, and he had, somewhat reluctantly, from the discomforts of the sea, to step from the steamer almost at once into the pulpit, and to preach to a large congregation in the Gaelic Church. At the seven services held in the two churches in Stornoway the audience numbered from 800 to 1609. So many people from the other congregations of the island were present in Stornoway that it was deemed unnecessary to visit each one separately. In Lewis and throughout the Long Island interpretation into Gaelic was necessary, as large numbers, especially of the older people, do not understand English. It is astonishing how such goodly, well-dressed, and intelligent-looking audiences can come out of the miserable huts in which the people live. The dwellings of Lewis, in some of which men and beasts live under the same roof, enter by one door, and from which the smoke finds egress any way except by a chimney are a reproach to the civilisation of our century and to the Christianity of our country.

A long drive through the flat island with its innumerable lochs and deep overlying layer of peat, brought Dr. Somerville to Harris, which though in reality only the southern end of Lewis, differs in so many respects from the rest that it is reckoned as a different island. The mountains of Harris are lofty and wild, and are mostly givenover to deer. The population, which is scanty and excessively poor, is gathered around the sea margin, where the conditions of life are hard. Harris has been during the last year or more the scene of an interesting religious movement, and the large attentive congregations which assembled in the island of Scalpay and at Tarbert gave indication of the people's interest in divine things. At the latter place it was a beautiful sight on Sunday morning to witness the numerous large fishing boats coming into the bay from the islands and adjoining coasts, each with its load of forty persons or thereabouts, who, as they came and went, had singing and prayer together. A service was held in South Harris at a strange place named Uamhiosol. The meeting-house, one of the most primitive, stood at the foot of a high rock on the slope of a hill, with bogs all about, far removed from any dwelling, and more than a mile distant from any road. It is said, however, to be central for a large district, and to it a most respectable audience gathered, spite of rain and tempest, coming singly or in little groups like deer or foxes over the rocks and across the bogs. The difficulties of travel among these islands are considerable, and the stormy weather increased them not a little.

North Uist was the island next entered, but the weather was such that only the congregations of Carinish and Paible could be visited. At the last-named place a wonderful congregation assembled, though they had little more than three hours' notice. From North Uist the passage to Benbecula is made at low tide accross the sea bottom. In Benbecula Dr. Somerville held the first Sunday services in the handsome new church which has just been completed. Not only did the people of the island come out in force, but many crossed both from North and South Uist for the occasion. Benbecula is separated from South Uist by a Strait similar to that which parts it from North Uist, but not so wide. This being forded, way was made to Lochboisdale. Meetings were held there and at Daliburgh, which were considerable, seeing that the majority of the population is Roman Catholic. In Benbecula the population is about equally divided, in Eriskay they are wholly Catholic, and in Barra about two-thirds so. With the exception of a few islets, Barra is the most southerly of the islands which compose the chain of the Outer Hebrides. It is a pretty island, mountainous, but fertile. The population is poor and not numerous; but during two months in early summer the beautiful harbour of Castlebay is thronged, and the shores are a scene of extraordinary activity and commotion. Thousands of fishermen and fish-curers, from all parts, congregate here. A Norwegian Company is about to build a factory on an island in the bay, for preserving fish. and for the manufacture of oil and manure from the fish offal. Barra promises to become a place of much importance. The Free Church has recently erected a large wooden church for the use of these summer visitants, and during two months of the season it is filled five times each Sunday with audiences of 800 and upwards. Dr. Somerville held services at Castlebay, at North Bay, and Craigston, thus making the circuit of the island.

On leaving the Outer Hebrides, a short stay was made at Tiree, where the unwonted spectacle presented itself of the tents of a camp, and the red coats of the marines. Congregations were addressed at Kirkapol and Balemartin, at different ends of the large and fertile island. Crossing the narrow strait, the island of Coll was reached, where a large congregation was addressed in the handsome church at Arinagower. This completed the island section of Dr. Somerville's work. The area to be traversed was large, and the points to be visited numerous, which prevented a lengthened stay in any one place. Yet, apart from spiritual results of such a mission, the presence of the Moderator of the General Assembly in these remote parts has an important influence, all the more that Dr. Somerville made it a practice to shake hands with the congregation on retiring at the church door, thus conveying to all the Highland congregations an expression of interest and goodwill on the part of the Assembly through its Moderator.

Dr. Somerville is now in another division of the wide region set before him. This time the district to be visited is Sutherland and Wester Ross, which will occupy him till the middle of November.

A RUSSIAN PASTOR'S WORK.

PASTOR A. R. SCHIEWE, of St. Petersburg, who is now in England endeavouring to raise money to erect a chapel there, has had some extraordinary difficulties to meet; but, in spite of these, he has established a church. For six years the people met for worship in his house. The air in the rooms would become impure, yet the cold would not allow them to open the windows. Last year the pastor's family suffered from epidemics, which were prevalent; the Government consequently forbad the meetings. Eight meetings used to be held weekly, in three languages—German, Swedish, and Esthonian. A suitable place of worship could not be found, rent being high, and the people very poor; and now only family worship is permitted, at which not more than twenty persons may be present.

Personally, the pastor has suffered much; seven times imprisoned, and once banished for a year for the Gospel's sake, he is now allowed to return to Russia, and preach in the capital itself. Many have been converted, and Pastor Schiewe believes that much greater good will result on the erection of the new building. Letters may be addressed to him at the Baptist Mission House, Furnival-street, London, W.C.

EAST LONDON DISTRESS.—DEAR SIR,—In November we purpose having a sale of work to aid in the relief of distress in East London, and in preparation for the winter. Relief will be given only to cases strictly investigated, in forms to avoid pauperising. If some of your readers will send me saleable articles of any sort, or, in lieu of this, money contributions, I shall be extremely thankful. I shall be glad to receive such, not later than November 7, addressed 16, Cottage-grove, Bow-road, London.—Yours faithfully, CONFERENCE AT LIVERPOOL.

The ninth annual Christian Convention was held in Hope Hall, Liverpool, on Thursday and Friday, October 7 and 8. There were three meetings each day, and all were well attended. "The Evangelisation of the World" was the subject under consideration. This formed a most important theme, and suitably followed the subjects discussed at previous Conferences.

Thursday, October 7.

The Convention was opened this forenoon. Canon Taylor, D.D., offered prayer, beseeching the Holy Ghost to guide all the proceedings of the Conference. After the reading of the Word by the Chairman, Mr. T. Matheson, the first address was delivered by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness. His treatment of the theme was largely similar to that of his stirring address at Mildmay, which we reported fully last week.

Rev. Theo. J. Meyer, missionary to Jews in London, spoke on "The Ingathering of Israel." The Jewish Mission, he said, although to a certain extent spreading, is still very much like Lazarus at the gates of Dives, desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. There was comparatively little interest taken in the conversion of the Jews. There were great difficulties in converting the Children of Israel. People got depressed by the insignificant results of the Jewish missions; but they ought not to judge of work in this way. Was it true that Jewish missions had been so barren? From the year 1817 to 1882 there have been 50,000 Jews brought into the Church of Christ. The London Society for the Propagation of the Gospel to the Jews, with which he was connected, was established in 1809. That Society is still flourishing. He asked his hearers to help forward every missionary effort on behalf of the Children of Israel.

Rev. Edward Hassan presided at the afternoon meeting. An address on Fiji was delivered by Rev. W. Wilson, lately a Wesleyan missionary. It was fifty-one years since the first missionary went to Fiji. During the eighteen years previous to his arrival there the missionaries had just enough success to keep them from fainting. There were about a hundred converts. Speaking of the progress made, he said that in 1853 there were 57 chapels; these had increased to 172 in 1860. In 1853 there were only 60 catechists, or lay preachers; in 1860 there were 218. There were 256 accredited members of the Society in 1853, as against 55,481 in 1860. There had, indeed, been a glorious work done in that quarter of the globe.

Rev. Dr. Turner, of the London Missionary Society, delivered an address on mission work in Samoa. In 1859 he was sent to the island, together with Dr. Nisbet, by the directors of the London Missionary Society. There are now at work there 14 missionaries—sent out by the Presbyterian Church of Nova Scotia and the Presbyterian Churches of Australia—besides 150 native agents. Eighty thousand converts are reported, and a thousand natives are in full communion with the Church. The cost of four translations of the Scriptures has been borne by the natives themselves, and it would be almost impossible to find a house in the island without a Bible. They pay their native pastors; and have for the last twenty years sent a voluntary annual subscription of £1200 to the London Missionary Society. Eight thousand children are being taught in the day and Sunday schools. One hundred students for missionary work are under instruction, and twenty of these young men are sent out every year. Owing to the improved morals of the people, and the powerful influence for good exerted on their brethren by these young men, the Society has been able to reduce the foreign missionary staff from fourteen to seven. In New Guinea there are 50,000 natives in full communion with the Church at the present day. Dr. Turner exhorted the young men present to devote themselves to missionary work.

Mr. E. H. Glenny, honorary secretary of the Kabyle Mission, gave an address on "North Africa," similar to that given by him at Mildmay. There are wonderful open doors, he said, for any who will go to Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, and Morocco. There are opportunities for ladies to go and enter on this work. The first French Wesleyan missionary is going out this month to Algiers. Mr. Glenny pointed out the scarcity of missionaries in North Africa, and hoped some of his hearers would be led to carry the Gospel to that land.

Rev. Dr. Lansing, who had arrived in England a few days previously for a short respite from his labours in Egypt, gave some gratifying statistics showing the progress of Christian work in that country.

The meeting on Thursday evening was well attended. Rev. Canon Taylor (chairman) briefly spoke on the need of Christian unity among the brethren engaged in God's work.

An address followed by Rev. A. R. Cavalier, late of the Church Missionary Society, who spoke of progress made and open doors in India and Ceylon.

Rev. James Smith, of the Baptist Missionary Society, described his work in India, where for eleven years he laboured as a missionary. It is almost impossible, he said, for the Gospel to spread more rapidly than it is spreading, unless they have more workers. The country is rich in agricultural resources, rich in men and women, and everything to encourage the missionary in his Christianising efforts. There must be a great missionary revival. Dr. J. L. Maxwell, lately of the Presbyterian Mission in China, gave an address on Medical Missions in China. Last week we reported his remarks on this subject at Mildmay.

Friday, October 8.

On Friday morning, Canon Taylor was chairman, and Rev. Sylvester Whitehead, Wesleyan missionary, gave an address on China, dwelling successively on the history of its people, their habits, superstitions and beliefs, and the progress that Christianity was making. Prayer was subsequently offered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, who asked God's blessing on the efforts of Stanley Smith, C. T. Studd, Griffith John, and many others in that part of the field.

Rev. C. G. Moore, of the China Inland Mission, spoke of his special work among the Chinese. The gross darkness that had covered China was now passing away. Some of their earliest difficulties had been caused through the too ready use of native agencies. They had now got on the right lines, and used the native agents in a different manner. He could point to many true converts amongst the Chinese, and their numbers were daily increasing.

Rev. C. F. Warren, of the Church Missionary Society, spoke on Japan. The pioneers of the work were our American brethren. Sixteen years passed away, after the ports were opened to foreign trade in 1859, before the Church Missionary Society sent their workers to Japan. The work was progressing. Many of the native converts had become itinerary preachers, and visit the villages. In one of the villages where the missionaries had spent night after night at different times without scarcely obtaining a hearing for the Gospel, an invitation comes asking one of our missionary ladies to go and instruct the children. In another village, where they had been equally unsuccessful at first, and which they visited lately, all the inhabitants come out to meet them, and gladly hear the preaching of the Gospel. This kind of thing is going on all over the country. In 1857, there were only ten converts in Central Japan, and this number in 1863 had been augmented to 7000, and now there are at least more than 10,000 natives who belong to the missions. A little Y.M.C.A. had been started in one of the inland towns, and was at present in a very flourishing condition.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Thomas Matheson read a telegram from the friends at the Mildmay Conference, who sent their greeting and best wishes for the success of the Liverpool Convention. He also said that he had received a note that morning from a lady who had been present at the meetings the day before, and who did not wish her name to be known; expressing her warm interest in all she had heard of the work, and enclosing a cheque for £400 to be devoted to the missionary cause.

The afternoon proceedings were devoted to the ladies' work in the mission field, and the hall was crowded with the gentler sex. Rev. Charles Garrett presided. Miss Ricketts, of the Presbyterian Mission, spoke of work among women in China. She described the difficulty experienced in learning the Chinese language, owing to its consisting of 42,000 letters; but a person who knew 10,000 letters could read the Bible in Chinese. Native women were trained for Bible-women, and sent out as missionaries. They visited quite recently 120 families, and preached the Gospel in 69 villages. Oh, that the women of England who have nothing to do would rise up to the thought that there is work for them in the world; there is a deep need of them in heathen countries where they could be a blessing to those who are now living in darkness.

Mrs. Sorabji, of the Indian Female Normal School, Poonah, made an earnest appeal on behalf of her countrywomen. Miss Broadbent, of the Church Zenana Society, said their Society had trained fourteen native women in India for the work among their own sex. The latest advices state that there are over seventy candidates for baptism. The mission work in India was everywhere in a healthy condition. Twelve new lady missionaries are going out this month in connection with the Zenana Society. She earnestly exhorted her English sisters to give themselves to the work of the Gospel in India.

Mrs. Osborn, of Cape Town, addressed the meeting on Mission Work in "South Africa." She said that Mr. Henry Varley had held his first meeting in the Dutch Reformed Church at Cape Town, when over 3000 people were present. She pleaded earnestly with Christian ladies to go out and engage in the work in South Africa.

At the final meeting in the evening there was a very large attendance. The chair was taken by Mr. Thomas Matheson. Two stirring addresses on the responsibilities of Christians were delivered by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Rev. Dr. A. M. Symington said the Church had made great advances in the acquisition of languages, and in acquaintance with the social habits of many heathen peoples. The Word of God has been translated into 267 different languages and dialects. At the close of the Conference about 600 persons joined in the observance of the Lord's Supper. The Convention has deeply impressed many with the necessity for renewed efforts in the mission field.

SOCIAL PURITY IN INDIA.

The agitation on the purity question is being actively pushed in India. Mr. W. J. Gladwin, of Bombay, has addressed many meetings during the past four months. At Bangalore he addressed about 150 educated natives, and he has also spoken to Tamil Christians by an interpreter. A Gospel Purity Association has been started, and rescue and preventive work commenced. Several ministers and others at Bangalore heartily co-operated with Mr. Gladwin.

In the September number of Mr. Gladwin's paper, The Indian Purity Trumpet, an indignant protest is made against the Government action in Madras. The Lock Hospital is situate in Popham's Broadway, Blacktown, one of the leading thoroughfares of Madras. It occupies a building, formerly a Church mission-house. In the same street are several large schools and church, while adjoining the hospital is the Church Missionary Society's church. To bring the situation more vividly before the public, a plan of the district was published; it has been reproduced in the October Sentinel.

To this hospital all the "ticket women" resort every week, in accordance with the regulations of the Contagious Diseases Acts. The scenes in the neighbourhood are often very sad, and the language must inevitably have a demoralising tendency on the young people who are compelled to hear it. We hope that the work will be carried on vigorously, and that success will speedily crown the efforts to abolish legalised vice in India.

THE CHILDREN OF CHINA.

Rev. E. P. Hammond sent copies of his "Conversion of Children" to several hundred foreign missionaries, and has received many interesting replies. The following letter from Rev. J. E. Walker, of Foochow, will interest our readers:—

Dear Brother,—Nearly a year ago I received a copy of your book on the "Conversion of Children," in which I was much interested.

It has been my pleasure to receive several comparatively young persons into the Church here in China. The natural capacity of the Chinese for spiritual religion seems less than that of persons who have been favoured with a godly ancestry. I have sometimes thought that perhaps a Chinese child ten years of age is like an American child five years of age. Last year I received into the church a boy about fourteen years old. His father and other church members did not think him ready to enter the church. Mr. Woodin and I proceeded to examine him, and were so well satisfied that we felt no hesitation in receiving him. Some of the most satisfactory examinations of candidates for baptism I have held have been those of boys in their teens. Last winter I examined two candidates for baptism, one of whom was a Chinese literary man; the other was an ignorant farm hand, seemingly of less than average intelligence, yet he passed much the better examination of the two.

The boy, of whom I spoke above, died after a short illness last February. He had been seemingly unconscious for over a day, when at the sound of prayer he roused up and prayed for the forgiveness of his sins. Then he again remained speechless for a long time, but at last roused up and said to his father, "Don't grieve, I feel much more peaceful now Jesus has forgiven my sins;" and so he passed away.

I appreciate now, better than I once did, that the truths of the Gospel are within the reach of the feeblest intellect, if only there be the heart of "a little child" to receive them, and those who deceive themselves with a false hope, do so, not through lack of natural intelligence, but through lack of a good and honest heart, a childlike and teachable spirit.

Here in China work with the children is the more hopeful because they have so much less to unlearn of superstitious and perverted views of life and duty. It seems harder to make adult converts unlearn old errors than to teach them the new truths of the Gospel.

We need your prayers; we trust many Christians taught of the Spirit to pray may intercede unceasingly for this mighty nation of China.

THE SOUTHERN MISSION FIELD.

The Mississippi bottoms and regions bordering thereon, between Memphis and New Orleans, are morally the most destitute part of the South. There are but few white churches; in some entire counties none; and, while there are coloured churches on almost all of the large plantations many of them scarcely exert any influence upon the morals of the people. Whisky is sold on almost every plantation, and men and women, and even many of the coloured pastors, drink at these plantation saloons. At the beginning of the cotton-picking season, I have seen boats coming up from New Orleans put off whisky at almost every landing for hundreds of miles. The same is true of boats going down from Memphis. There seems to be no temperance sentiment at all in some sections.

The Sabbath in many places is a day for gambling and whisky drinking. The situation is truly appalling. There is no hope for the people unless these saloons can be closed, and there is no hope of that until a temperance sentiment is developed. Our hope of reaching the coloured people is in their churches and schools, preachers and teachers. Some of their leaders are earnest temperance men, and, with a little encouragement and help, would soon do much to awaken a temperance sentiment.—National Temperance Advocate.

WORK IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

Mrs. Thomas, the wife of a missionary in Sardinia, writing from the Island of Maddalena, Sept. 16, to a friend in England, says:—

We came here nearly three weeks ago, to prosecute, as far as the heat will allow, our work amongst the people. This is a small island, north of Sardinia. The town (it boasts but one) has 2000 inhabitants. Steamers call here to and from the Continent. There are three or four Protestants in Maddalena, and many others who sympathise with their views, but secretly. One of the Protestants, who lately lost his wife, had the courage to refuse the attendance of the priest at the funeral, and so, lacking any evangelical minister or religious ceremony, buried her, as we were told, "like a dog."

We have had a nice little service in our sitting-room each Sunday evening. Last Sunday we were about twenty. Several young men came. They joined as well as they could in the singing, and listened attentively to the exposition of Scripture and prayer. An English steamer (Etna) called here last week. The captain, Mr. Haydon, gave us several copies of The Christian, which we have sent to our English-speaking Sardinian friends.

Our landlady tells us that she once had a Bible and was very fond of reading it; but, the priest finding it out, she had no rest till she gave it up to him. I have given her a nice large print Testament, and she is reading it continually. One day I found a neighbour with this Testament in her hands. Seeing me, she exclaimed how much she would like to have one, but had no money. I gave her one, and also a Bible for her husband, who, she said, "believed our law." She was so grateful, the husband had been long ill. In this way, by means of my library funds, I am able sometimes to circulate amongst the needy the best of books. I have read several tracts to our hostess, and given many away. The women are delighted with them. We had an interesting talk one evening with two young women who came in on purpose to get more information regarding "our law." There is one English lady here for a time, an invalid. Her husband, a colonel in the Italian navy, has gladly accepted a Bible.

I feel sure you will rejoice with us at these openings for the truth. If not "ripe unto the harvest," they show that the fields are prepared for the seed.

OPEN DOORS IN EAST PRUSSIA.

The writer and his wife, a converted Jewess, spent the month of August—their holiday time—near the frontier of Russia and Poland, holding Gospel meetings. The people have a real longing for the Word of God, and each evening after their hard work, used to come to the meetings. The large rooms where the services were held were always filled to overflowing, and we were obliged to keep the doors open wherever a meeting was held. On four Sunday afternoons we held meetings in the churchyard from three to five, to which many came from great distances to hear the word, which was greatly blessed, as was the case on Sunday evenings.

These meetings were held mostly in the Stallupoenen district, in the whole circuit of which there are but seven churches, from seven to eight miles apart, and the spiritual needs of the place are very great. "A great door and effectual" seems open both to Jews and Poles as well as to Germans, and it is to be hoped that others will continue the work.

A HOME FOR BABES.—The Crèche, at 21, Lower William-street, St. John's-wood, N.W., has now been open nearly five years. The children are received under five years of age, and the elder of them are taken to an adjacent school, returning to the Crèche for meals and remaining until it closes in the evening. The total expenses are about £250 a year, and of this the mothers contributed last year over £80. The charge for each child is 4d. per day. The Home may be inspected between eleven and six, except on Mondays and Saturdays, and further information may be obtained from Mrs. Crossley.

TENTS IN NORFOLK.

Dear Sir,—Your readers may be glad to hear that I had a very liberal response to the letter I wrote some time ago in The Christian, appealing for funds to carry on Miss Hamond's tent-warfare in the many neglected parishes of Norfolk and other counties. The donations, as is often the case, came almost entirely from God's poor believers, who are not God's stewards, as far as temporal wealth is concerned, and in many cases they might have spoken of their gift as the "widow's mite." But the one that touched me most was from two English private soldiers in a distant English colony, who, as you will see by the following letters, have twice given us their month's good conduct money, which they intend to make a regular subscription. Here are their letters, verbatim, with only the names and addresses omitted, for obvious reasons:—

> Dear Christian Friends,—Please accept enclosed remittance in aid of your work among the villages. We were grieved to read in The Christian, a little while ago, of the opposition you had to contend against. We heartily sympathise with you in your efforts to spread the good old Gospel of Jesus Christ, and pray that you may be richly blessed. Let us always bear in mind that, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. viii. 31). The money we send you is our good conduct pay, and, therefore, it is the Lord's. We propose reserving it monthly, to be used in the Master's service. Please drop us a line to let us know that you have received it safely, and believe us to remain,
> Your sincere friends, in Christ Jesus, ———.

> Dear Christian Friend,—Herewith, monthly donation for self and friend for the month of August. Trusting that you received the previous one safely,
> Yours in the Master's service, ———.
> September 6, 1836.

We had acknowledged the first donation, sending them a hearty letter of thanks and a receipt in due form, and we have also now repeated our expressions of gratitude, and we trust that ere now both letters have been received, as the delay has probably been owing to the distance. I trust that this sympathy from unknown Christian brothers will be as encouraging and refreshing to other tired workers as it has been to us.

Your obedient servant,

Bath. (Lady) Olive Sebright.

THE POWER OF A GOOD BOOK.

The value of a good book cannot be over-estimated, and its mission is accomplished in a quiet and unostentatious manner, while the permanence of its influence is of long duration. A striking illustration of this is given by Rev. W. Corden Jones, Secretary of the Metropolitan Colportage Association, of which Rev. C. H. Spurgeon is President:—

About five years ago, one of the colporteurs sold to a lady a copy of a book entitled, "Three People." For some time he heard nothing further about the book, which, however, was like "bread cast upon the waters, to be found after many days." The lady lent the volume to a young man who worked on one of the farms in the neighbourhood. He read it, and was strongly impressed, and finally converted to God through its instrumentality. He soon began to tell others about the "great salvation," and became an accepted preacher in the surrounding village chapels. Feeling that he was called to devote himself to the ministry, he sought and obtained admission to one of the colleges for preparation for the work.

After three years' study, the claims of the heathen were strongly laid upon his heart, and he is now preparing for mission work on the Congo, whither he hopes in due course to go forth to preach among the Africans "the unsearchable riches of Christ."

There are now eighty-two colporteurs at work in connection with the above Association. Last year the sales amounted to £9525 16s. 2d., representing over 878,000 publications, and the reports of usefulness are very numerous, both in creating taste for better literature, and in the conversion of souls. Money is needed to carry on this large and growing work. The depôt is at Temple-street, Southwark, S.E.

COREA.—Reports from the Corean Mission of the Scottish United Presbyterian Church state that a hundred men and boys have been baptized, and the work is rapidly spreading.

A CONFERENCE OF POLICE.

A Conference, in connection with the Christian Policemen's Association, was held recently at Manchester. Delegates assembled from many places, including London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Sheffield, Leeds, Liverpool, Leicester, Bolton, Blackburn, &c. The proceedings opened with an evening meeting for prayer, praise, and reports of work. The following morning was devoted to the discussion of practical subjects—police libraries, Bible and singing-classes, and the temperance movement. Able papers were contributed by members of different police forces on these subjects, the first-named being introduced by some remarks from the Mayor (who kindly presided) and Alderman Hopkinson. The tone of the discussion was thoroughly spiritual throughout. In the evening a well-attended evangelistic meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Wood, Chief Constable of Manchester, who addressed some earnest, practical words to the men. Rev. Prebendary Macdonald, Mr. Reader Harris, of London, and Mr. Charles Inglis, also spoke, and several hymns and anthems were sung by a well-trained police choir. Consecration and Holiness was the subject for the last morning meeting. A truly blessed season was spent, and many went back refreshed and strengthened, and fully determined to serve the Lord in their various stations.

Considering the novelty of its work, and the difficulties in the way, the rapid growth of this Association has been wonderful. Will Christian friends, who constantly enjoy the protection of the guardians of the peace, show their gratitude by helping forward this work for their spiritual welfare? The hon. secretary is Miss C. Gurney, 11, Ladbroke-terrace, W.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.

The usual weekly meetings, having been suspended during the summer months, were resumed on Friday, October 8, with a fully attended all-day meeting. The morning hours were chiefly devoted to prayer; every mission that had a living representative present had its various needs laid before the Lord, with thanksgiving. Miss Reade, from India, who has frequently been remembered in these gatherings, gave interesting details of her work. She bore testimony to the fact that many a time, when prayer was being made for her in these meetings, the answer was being received in India. The Jews were represented by a converted Israelite, who was seeking guidance of the Lord concerning future service.

Some very striking answers to prayer that had been offered at previous meetings were related. Funds for clothing the orphans had been asked for by the representative of an orphanage at the last meeting. A few days after a note was left at the door without any name, or indication as to the donor, containing a bank-note for £100. Other instances were related during the day which were most encouraging to all present, as proving that a day spent in waiting upon God is the most effectual way of promoting activity in his service.

Space will not admit of more than the bare mention of the interesting and helpful addresses by Dr. McKilliam, on "The Tabernacle as Illustrative of Progressive Christian Life;" and by Rev. J. D. Dinnick, on "The Work of the Holy Spirit Producing Practical Holiness."

Many Christian workers who have partaken of the privileges of the House of Rest at Eastbourne during the summer were present, and bore testimony to the ever-increasing benefits and blessing received during their sojourn. They are proving their appreciation and gratitude by banding themselves together to endeavour to raise the last instalment of £500 due on the Eastbourne house. They have asked for collecting-cards, which are now ready; one will be sent to responsible friends sending name and address to Miss Mason, 7, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

JEWS IN ROME.—At Perth Conference in September last a request for prayer was offered on behalf of Miss Smith, of the Medical Mission to Jews in the Ghetto. She was then lying in a most precarious state in the Edinburgh Infirmary. The prayers for her recovery have been answered in a very remarkable way. The medical men are confident that she will soon be able to resume her work in Rome. Special thanksgiving is asked for this, and prayer for the work and the workers in the Ghetto. Miss Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh, will gladly give information and receive any donations for the work.

YOUNG WOMEN IN LIVERPOOL.

The third anniversary of the Young Women's Christian Institute, Gordon Hall, was recently held in Hengler's Circus. There was a large gathering, nearly all young women. Mr. W. Crosfield, J.P., who presided, commended the work of the Institute. He spoke of the special value of Young Women's Christian Associations in the colonies. He suggested that a kind of free registry office should be started in connection with the various churches, somewhat similar to those existing in Wales in connection with the Sunday-schools, where the influence on the senior scholars was continued after they reached adult life. When the young women go out to service, or change their situations, there is this free registry office, conducted by their Christian friends, and thus they are not lost sight of.

Rev. Canon Burridge addressed the gathering, and was followed by Mrs. Sorabji, who made an appeal on behalf of India, both helpers and funds being needed. Mr. James Guthrie and Rev. J. Watson also spoke, the latter dwelling on the great influence that young women possess.

Mrs. Menzies, who was enthusiastically received by the young women for whom she has done so much, took up the same subject, and impressed the fact upon her hearers that we can only influence others for God as we are going Godward ourselves. She exhorted them to renewed consecration to Christ.

WORKING LADS IN WHITECHAPEL.

We are about to commence our winter work amongst the lads in East London, and sadly need a few more helpers. Last winter we carried on weekly sixteen evening classes, besides lectures, entertainments, concerts, temperance meetings, savings bank, friendly society, Bible-classes, evangelistic services, and a Christian Association.

This is a large field of labour, occupied by friends who kindly give their services, and in many instances subscribe as well. During the year over twelve hundred lads attended. The work falls very heavy on a few, but I am persuaded there must be many Christian men and ladies who, if they knew of the precious opportunities afforded of speaking for Jesus, would devote one hour weekly in this service.

On a previous occasion, as the result of a similar appeal in The Christian, a young man applied, who has been with us ever since, and who at the present time, with his friends, conducts classes for wood-carving, drawing, Bible, and singing. A teacher of singing would be a valuable aid, and also an instructor for the gymnasium. On October 30 we shall hold the anniversary of the opening of the Institute, and have the tenth annual meeting. Perhaps some country friends would kindly send some evergreens or flowers for decorating the place. They would give great pleasure to the large number of lads who will be present at the meeting.

Henry Hill, Hon. Secretary.

CENTRAL VIGILANCE SOCIETY.—An important Conference on "The Work and Needs of this Society" will be held, by invitation of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, in the Church-room of St. Paul's, Euston-square, at 4.30 p.m., on Friday, October 22. The meeting will be open to all, whether ladies or gentlemen, who are interested in the promotion of social and personal purity. Eminent speakers will be prepared to open the discussion.

THE COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The members of this Association held a Conference at the Memorial Hall on Saturday week, Mr. George Williams presiding. Mr. Henry Holme, hon. sec., read a paper on "How best to Promote Individual and Collective Christian Effort on the Road." There were few occupations, he said, that were so likely to try the character of a man as that of a commercial traveller. He must be very real, very true to himself and to his God. Referring to the impressions as to the reckless character of commercial travellers, he showed how largely individuals may create impressions for good or evil. Mr. Holme admitted the difficulties in the way of collective effort, but, now that a badge had been adopted, the members of the Association would readily recognise each other in the commercial rooms, and be able to arrange impromptu devotional meetings. In closing, the speaker said he hoped arrangements would be made for such occasional meetings for conference in provincial towns. An interesting discussion followed.

BIBLES FOR NORMANDY.—Dear Sir,—May I draw the attention of your readers to the utter dearth of Bibles here, and to the manner in which Testaments and Gospels are eagerly welcomed? The children are never taught to read the Bible, and the old people cannot read at all (education was not free in their day). But when the children receive copies of the Gospels they take them home and read them aloud in the evenings. The illustrated leaflets of the Special Service Mission have been highly prized. Mrs. Grimké's, and other text-cards, are gratefully received by all classes.

THE NEW ZEALAND EARTHQUAKE.

In the current issue of The Leisure Hour there is a lengthy and graphic narrative, by Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming, of the terrible upheaval of Mount Tarawera, in New Zealand, last June. We referred to it in our issue of August 5; but the following extracts from this account will be read with interest by our young friends:—

Happily, on this night of terror there were in that village many who were ready to welcome the summons of their Lord in whatever manner He might see fit to send it. Amongst these was the excellent schoolmaster, Mr. Hazard, who, with his wife and grown-up daughters, took the keenest interest in the welfare of the people, tending them in sickness, and endeavouring to influence them for good. By their exertions sixty children were induced to attend the school, where every effort was used so to train the rising generation as to arm them against the flood of evil which it seemed altogether hopeless to stem in the case of their seniors, continually encouraged in hard drinking and vice as these have been by the stream of foreigners, for whose gold they so greedily craved. Mr. Hazard was a staunch "Blue Ribbon" man, and did his utmost to awaken the Maoris to a sense of shame at their ever-increasing habits of drunkenness.

For eight years the Hazards had lived at Wairoa, and touchingly pathetic is the story of their last evening—that still, starlit evening—in their peaceful little home, with its pretty garden, with the waving white plumes of Pampas grass and tall New Zealand flax. It was the mother's birthday, and the family, consisting of about eight persons, including the children, and also one or two friends, had spent a cheerful evening together, and had but recently retired to rest, when the terrible earthquake shocks commenced.

The elder daughters hurried to their parents' room, where their father soothed and tried to reassure them. The whole household being soon astir, all met in the family sitting-room, where they relighted the fire, the night being intensely cold, and then watched the awful light from Tarawera and the rapidly ensuing darkness. Then, amid the raging tumult of crashing thunder, subterranean rumblings, and the terrible hailstorm of fiery cinders, Miss Hazard opened the harmonium and played familiar hymn-tunes, and for the last time the united family sang Luther's well-known words of faith and trust.

Soon the violence of the hurricane made it necessary to extinguish the fire. Then, as the noise became more deafening, and the earthquake shocks and the incessant thud of falling mud more and more alarming, they crowded together in the centre of the room, thinking the ridge of the roof would longest resist the crushing weight; but after a while, with a frightful crash, the ceiling fell in, and they were all separated. The two elders sisters, Clara and Ina, escaped separately, one with the old Maori woman, and the other with two gentlemen. The former was kept alive by the devotion with which the woman knelt by her, scooping up the falling ashes and mud which would have suffocated her, as she lay helpless. The latter took shelter beneath a doorway until a shower of red-hot cinders, falling on their ruined home, set fire to one end of it. Apparently, however, the wet mud, which lay to a depth of eight feet on the roof, prevented the fire from spreading.

Beneath that roof their parents were separately imprisoned in horrible darkness. The father seems to have been killed instantaneously, and so, probably, was a little five-year-old nephew. But the mother, with her three youngest children, was held captive by a falling beam, just as they had been sitting: little Mona in her mother's arms crying bitterly because of the beam which was crushing her, and which prevented their moving; Adolphus, aged ten, on her right hand, and Winifrid, aged six, on the left, while the scalding mud dripped down through the rafters. The brave boy tried to comfort his mother in that black night. "I will die with you," he said. But for her was reserved the sore trial of life, after hearing all those loved voices silenced, one by one; and still for long hours the mother sat clasping the dead body of her youngest darling, conscious that the other two had also been taken from her, and wholly ignorant of the fate of her husband and elder daughter. It was almost noon ere a rescue party succeeded in excavating her from her mud tomb, alive, but terribly injured, when she was carried to Ohinematu, where her daughter and all the other fugitives were being cared for.

There were deeply pathetic scenes on that awful night in many a Maori home—none more touching than the death of Mary, the young wife of Mohi. At the time of the eruption they, with their two little sons, were in the chief's large weather-board house, but when it began to fall they sought safety by flight to their own thatched cottage, such being found far more secure in case of earthquakes. Each carried one child. There they knelt together, committing themselves and their little ones to the care of the Christian God. Then, wrapping a shawl round the elder boy and laying him on the floor, Mohi knelt over him, himself resting on his hands and knees, so that his body might protect the child from the mud which was now falling in masses through the broken roof. Close by his side, but invisible in the dense darkness, his wife likewise strove to protect the younger boy. After a while the weight of mud and pebbles became too great for the endurance of even the strong man, so, making a desperate effort, he rose, calling to his wife to do likewise, that they might seek safety elsewhere. But no voice answered him, for the mother and her child were both dead. Afterwards their bodies were recovered, Mary sitting with her arms extended in the vain effort to shield her little one.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

(Translated from the German by the late Dr. Fleming Stevenson.)

I am Jesu's little lamb,
Ever glad at heart I am;
Jesus loves me, Jesus knows me,
All things fair and good He shows me,
Even calls me by my name;
Every day He is the same.

Safely in and out I go,
Jesus loves and keeps me so;
When I hunger, Jesus feeds me,
When I thirst, my Shepherd leads me
Where the waters softly flow,
Where the sweetest pastures grow.

Should I not be always glad?
None whom Jesus loves are sad;
And when this short life is ended,
Those whom the Good Shepherd tended
Will be taken to the skies,
There to dwell in paradise.

THE WESTBOURNE HOME for Women Servants, 17, Westbourne-villas, Harrow-road, W. (under a committee of ladies, and in connection with Y.W.C.A.), has now been doing good and useful work for eight months. It has been the means of saving many inexperienced young women from drifting away. It is intended for servants seeking situations, and is under the management of a judicious motherly matron. The charge made for board and lodging does not nearly cover expenses, and help would be thankfully received. The president of the ladies' committee is Mrs. Macfarlane, 17, Westbourne-park, Bayswater, W.

SAILORS IN LOWESTOFT.—The Mission to Sailors and Fishermen in this port celebrated its thirty-sixth anniversary on Sunday, October 10. The following evening a public meeting was held at the Bethel. The summary of work for the year ending August shows that much bread has been cast on the waters. The congregations consist mainly of sailors and fishermen and their families. Much spiritual blessing has been received. The services in the public hall were discontinued in March, as the expense was more than the people could sustain. Large meetings have been held on the beach; and the results must be truly encouraging to the workers. A Sailors' Home and other agencies are also in operation. The missionary is Mr. W. Johnson, Bethel, Lowestoft.

EVANGELISATION IN BRUSSELS.

Having returned from a brief visit to Brussels, I thought it might interest your readers to hear something of what I was personally able to learn of the work of the Lord, as carried on there by Pastor R. Meyhoffer, of the Belgian Evangelical Society, and by his staff of workers, amongst whom must, at present, be reckoned a son and daughter of the celebrated Merle D'Aubigné.

A powerful work of grace is proceeding, unostentatiously, in Brussels, and many are being won from the ranks of Romanism to the true faith of the Gospel. I can speak thus, as I saw both the children in the Sunday-school and the adults in the mission-room. I could scarcely believe, when told, that the eighty bright, intelligent boys and girls who had gathered, voluntarily, into that Sunday-school, and who, when I entered, were singing in French one of Mr. Sankey's hymns, to the tune we all so well know—"I do believe, I will believe, that Jesus died for me"—were all Roman Catholic children, or the children of parents who had been Roman Catholics. When assured that this was so, I could not help wondering at these things; first, that the children were willing, of themselves, to come to school on a day, and in a place where pleasure is universally sought after; second, that the parents were willing to send them; and third, that the priests allowed them. The sight of those bright, intelligent children, listening eagerly to a simple Gospel address, was most encouraging, suggesting that here may be the key to open, or re-open, this dark continent to the Gospel.

But perhaps the mission service on Wednesday evening, in the same place, was still fuller of interest and of promise. Two successive weeks I attended this service and found from eighty to one hundred men and women of the working class gathered to hear the simple preaching of the Gospel.

There is always something to strike a stranger in the outward appearance of such an audience, the men with their loose blouses, and the women with their bare heads; the expression of surprise, however, that was visible on the faces of the people as they listened to the simple Gospel address was what struck me most. It told of the freshness of the truths that were then brought to their hearing, for to be told that they were sinners, and that, as sinners, they could at once obtain pardon and eternal life through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, was indeed, something new and startling. Again, I was amazed. Here were Roman Catholics, in a city wholly given up to that superstition, gathering to hear the Word of God; nothing to attract them but the truth; nothing to affright them, not even the fear of their priests.

It may be asked, Are converts made? Yes, the man who so earnestly addressed his fellows that night was himself once a bigoted Romanist, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school is another example of the power of the Gospel to break the bonds of superstition.

This mission hall I visited is only one of five, scattered throughout the city, all under the superintendence of Mr. Meyhoffer. I would warmly commend the work of the Evangelical Society of Belgium as thus carried on in Brussels to the prayers and the practical sympathy of the Lord's people in this country.

FLOWERS FOR THE SICK.—Pastor O. Tidman writes from Blaenavon, near Pontypool:—Permit me to sincerely thank the many friends who responded to my appeal, and sent flowers and Gospel texts. The hearts of many sick ones have been greatly cheered, and many of the Gospel texts have been instrumental in comforting some of the Lord's dear ones, and awakening others to a concern of soul. Some of these portions still hang on the bedsteads of the injured ones in our hospital. Labouring in this somewhat isolated district, surrounded with mountains, I shall always be glad to receive Gospel tracts, books, texts, &c., or flowers.

MISSIONS IN MADAGASCAR.

The following extracts are from an interesting letter we have received from Rev. J. Peill, of the London Missionary Society, written from Ambohimanga, Madagascar, giving an account of a four days' journey from Ambohimanga to Antsìrabè some time ago. Mr. Peill says :—

Leaving here on Wednesday morning, March 31, we dined in Antananarivo, and slept at the Mission House at Tsiafahy with our good friends Rev. J. and Mrs. Taylor, of the London Missionary Society Mission. After this we spent two more nights on the road, sleeping in native houses, and arrived at Antsìrabè in the evening of the fourth day, when we met with a very hearty reception from Pastor Vig of the Norwegian Mission. Two rooms of the Norwegian Sanatorium here were at once most kindly placed at our disposal, and free use of the baths permitted for as long a period as might be necessary.

Antsìrabè is a centre of the Norske Mission in Madagascar, and this Mission has recently built a beautiful, commodious bath-house over the principal hot spring at that place. This spring was formerly kept exclusively for the Queen's use; but when the new bath-house was completed, the Norwegian friends begged that the use of two of the rooms might be given to the missionaries of Protestant missions in Madagascar, and the request was at once granted by the Queen, and the keys of all, including the Royal bath-room, left in charge of the Norwegian missionary stationed at Antsirabe.

While at Antsìrabè I gathered some information about the Norwegian Mission in Madagascar—that is, in the Imerina and Betsileo Provinces, which I thought might be of interest to you. The Norske Mission is a thoroughly Protestant evangelical one, though of course Lutheran. I attended their service in the church at Antsìrabè on the Sunday of my visit. The service was very simple, the sermon being the chief item. The altar with a great cross over it, the priestly vestments worn by the officiating priest and the intoning of the simple service, of course, struck an ultra-Protestant like myself as remnants of Romanism that might well be dispensed with, as it is a pity thus to teach the Malagasy, but the service contained nothing objectionable to me, the prayers were brief and simple, the singing purely congregational and hearty, and the sermon, preached by a young Malagasy, trained in the Norwegian College in Antananarivo, a very earnest one, delivered extempore, and thoroughly evangelical throughout. I could but say "Godspeed" to such teaching, and heartily wish success to the Mission. In the afternoon, Pastor Vig asked me if I would preach. Of course, I at once consented, and that afternoon had a most attentive audience, both Mr. Vig and Pastor Minsaas warmly thanking me, and heartily shaking hands with me at the close.

On inquiry, I gathered the following particulars with regard to the Norske Mission in Central Madagascar. It appears that, including Antananarivo, where they have one church, and Fianarantsoa, the capital of the Betsileo Province, which counts as the centre of two districts, they have fifteen stations. In Antananarivo there are in connection with this Mission a hospital, and two Norwegian doctors, the principal of their Mission, Pastor Dahle, and a missionary in charge of the college for training of evangelists and pastors. There is also a school for the children of Norwegian missionaries in Madagascar in the charge of a Norwegian lady, and two boarding-schools for native children, one for boys and the other for girls. The other fourteen stations have each a missionary in charge, or temporarily absent on furlough, the various stations being within easy reach of each other, and all in the Betsileo country. There are two schools for training of native school-masters under the charge of missionaries, and one for the higher education of native girls and young women. The total number of churches in connection with the Mission is 219. The number of church members is about 7000, of Christians in connection with the Mission, by which I understand is meant children of Christian families as well as parents, 8800. The number baptized during the past year was 2567.

The educational work of this Mission is on an extensive scale. The number of scholars on the books is 38,831; the number actually attending their schools more or less regularly 30,947.

At Antsìrabè in addition to the large brick church with tower and tiled roof, there is a large schoolroom, also of brick, with tiled roof. Many of the scholars here are young men and women. There is a good staff of teachers; the schoolroom is furnished with desks, blackboards, maps, and other necessaries of teaching. The mission premises include a two-storied Mission House, and a sanatorium of four rooms, a one-storied building.

The Norwegian missionaries do not, apparently, expect the natives to contribute much towards current expenses, or to help in the building of churches, or payment of evangelists or teachers. In this their system is radically different from ours, which is throughout based on the cardinal principle that as far as possible the Mission shall be self-supporting, only grants in aid being made from the Society's funds to supplement the native contributions in payment of teachers, building of churches, &c. There is much to be said for both systems. Each has its advantages, but the London Missionary Society system has at least this advantage—that it makes the Church a Malagasy Church, and gives the natives more influence in it—a result which we regard as an advantage, but others, probably, as a great disadvantage.

A VISIT TO BRITTANY.

Last June and July we had a visit from Pastor Le Côat, of Trémel, Côtes du Nord, France. He is a converted Catholic. He was holding meetings in London and elsewhere, endeavouring to enlist sympathy for the great work he has undertaken, of preaching Christ to Bretons not speaking French. The New Testament, translated into Breton, is being now widely circulated by colporteurs and a new Bible-carriage. He has completed the translation of the Old Testament into Breton, which the Trinitarian Bible Society have put in the printer's hands.

In order to see the work for myself, I took steamer to St. Malo, and proceeded by train to Plounerin, the station nearest his work. Mr. Le Côat's heart is in his work. He goes out in all directions and immense distances to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. I accompanied him on almost every expedition he undertook during my visit. One of the most interesting was seventeen miles there and seventeen miles back, in a torrent of rain, in an open dog cart, and a hilly country. But we were amply repaid by finding in a kitchen some sixty to seventy people standing, and with deep attention listening to the story of redeeming love.

I could fill pages with interesting matter about this blessed work. There are large day and Sunday-schools. All the people are Catholics, but Mr. Le Côat has the hearts of high and low, except the priests, who are extremely opposed to his preaching and his books. But the work goes on, and the people come to the light. Our friend journeys regularly to Brest to preach. He is admirably helped by his wife, whose heart is in the work.

Drs. Underhill and Bullinger are the principal directors of the London Committee.

W. Greene, C.E.

HYDE PARK SERVICES.

We have closed these meetings for the season, having completed our fourteenth year. During the time we have held Gospel services four nights in the week. Many and various are the errors and heresies now openly taught in Hyde Park, yet we rejoice to know that the grand old Gospel still attracts and holds the people. We know of many this year who, by the singing of the choir and the preaching of the Word, have been converted to God. A very distinct case is that of Chas. Minor, a comedian, who has left his professional life, and is now engaged in evangelistic work at Manchester.

We have again opened the Metropolitan Music Hall for the winter. It has been enlarged and reseated, and will now hold between 2000 and 3000. On the opening night we were full before the advertised time. Open-air work in our neighbourhood is in some danger by reason of the trouble caused to the authorities in connection with the Socialists. I shall be thankful for the prayers of your readers that guidance and much blessing may be still given to our work.

Hyde Park Hall. Chas. Cook.

AMERICAN EVANGELISTS.

Messrs. Whitttle and McGranahan have planned to work in Pennsylvania and New York this fall and winter. Mr. Moody will continue to hold Christian conventions, as he did last year, in the larger towns of these two states, and the evangelists will follow in the wake of the conventions with evangelistic meetings. Rev. Alex. Patterson will work with them in the same field. Mr. and Mrs. Towner are with Mr. Moody at Northfield.

Mr. L. W. Munhall has settled his family in Philadelphia, and will probably work in Eastern cities this winter.

Mr. Geo. C. Needham is at present devoting his time to the Prophetic Conference, to be held in Chicago November 16 and onward. After that he, too, is expected to be in Eastern towns.

Evangelist Bliss has been holding revival services in a tent in Boston during the past summer, which have been attended with most gracious results in the conversion of men.

Messrs. Jones and Small began a series of meetings in Toronto October 3. Messrs. Jones and Excel held meetings at Cartersville, Ga., in August, and thousands came to hear the evangelist. Mr. Small spent a week during September at Plattenburg, Mo., conducting meetings.

Messrs. Brown and Avis have been holding special services in London, Ontario, in which great interest was awakened among the unconverted.

The Gospel Waggon, which made a six weeks' tour from Boston into New Hampshire last year, under Rev. H. J. Pierson, has returned from a similar ten days' trip to Old Orchard, returning by way of Rochester, N.H. The carriage carried four or five persons and a small organ, and many meetings were held by the way, securing the attendance of many who are not church-going people.

Mr. Sayford spent a Sabbath recently at the State Prison in Corcord, N.H., visiting the different societies organised among the prisoners. Much interest was manifested in the latter meeting, several prisoners expressing a desire to begin the Christian life.

Mr. Moody spent a recent Sabbath in Keene, N.H., where five special services were held. The largest church edifice being inadequate to accommodate the crowd, City Hall was opened, and was filled to overflowing. Prof. and Mrs. Towner conducted the singing. At the close of the afternoon service, thirty-three persons expressed a desire to become Christians, and nearly half of that number gave a similar expression in the evening. Mr. Revell, of Chicago, conducted a special service for children.—Chicago Record.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. THOMAS CROSKERY.

On Sunday, October 3, at the age of fifty-six, this well-known Irish preacher and writer passed away. In his early days he belonged to the Unitarian body; but, perceiving their error, he left them and joined the Presbyterians. In 1875 he was appointed Professor of Logic in Magee College, and subsequently of Systematic Theology, in the same College. His writings were voluminous, embracing many articles in the leading reviews both of England and the United States. He was buried in the City Cemetery, Londonderry, and large numbers of the members of his College and Church followed his remains to their last resting-place.

CHINESE WOMEN.—A correspondent earnestly desires the co-operation of our lady readers in furthering the interests of the Gospel in China, by uniting with the Women's Prayer Union referred to by Mr. McCarthy in a recent letter in our columns. Information can be obtained from Miss Elizabeth Boyd. hon. sec., Dean House, Willesden-green, N.W., who will gladly send circulars and cards to any desiring to join the Union.

THE ALEXANDRA HOME for friendless and homeless girls, at 29, Coborn-street, Bow-road, E., was started by Miss J. Cranstoun, about a year ago. She saw the need of such a Home in the neighbourhood, and opened her own house to receive the unfortunate waifs. Thirty-five girls had been received up to the end of July. Some passed to various Homes, and others were provided with situations. The little record of the work contains pathetic particulars respecting some of the girls received. Copies may be obtained from the Home as above.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

(Culled from the Monthly Magazines.)

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

As the result of special inquiry, the Church Missionary Society's finance office has ascertained that, apart from the ordinarily reported income of last year, a sum of £44,155 was contributed locally in the support of missions; of this amount it is estimated that over £10,000 was given by native Christians.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Writing of finance, we are glad to learn that the news of the Congo fire was received with most kindly sympathy. The sum (between £4000 and £5000) estimated as representing the loss of the society is being rapidly raised, and it is hoped such generosity will enable the missionaries to carry out their plans for establishing new up-river stations as freely as if the disaster had not occurred.

ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN MISSION.

Mr. Campbell, of this Mission, has settled a native preacher at work in the Pescadore group of islands, south-west of Formosa. This has long been a desired object of the Formosa missionaries, and when Mr. Campbell visited the northern islands he was cheered with the hearty reception the people accorded him, the eagerness with which they listened to his message, and bought his books and tracts.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

An interesting meeting was held on July 23, in the Free Reading Room at Trevandrum, when the Rev. S. Mateer distributed to 150 graduates and students of the Madras University the Bibles and other volumes presented by the Bible and Tract Societies. "The books were received with much pleasure, and it is certain that an increased interest will be excited by these valuable gifts going into the best native houses throughout the country."

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND MISSION.

The African Lakes Company have just had another mission steamer (the James Stevenson) constructed, which is now on its way out to the Zambesi, the scene of its future voyages; and they look forward to placing a new steamer on Lake Nyasa. Through the united efforts of Dr. and Mrs. Laws, another Central African language has been reduced to writing, and the Word of God opened up to one more Nyasa tribe. At the present time the Bible is said to be available in 268 languages, whereas at the beginning of this century the number was only thirty.

WESLEYAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

In a paper describing a recent evangelistic tour in the Waterburg district (Transvaal), Rev. Isaac Shimman says:—"One morning a young man came to the waggon and said to the interpreter, 'Why do you ask if we will have religion? You only mock us, for you come for a few days and then go away again. We tell you as plainly as we can that we want a teacher to instruct us in the Bible; many of us are trying to learn, but,' he added, with tears in his eyes, 'you do not want us; you are going away again, and will leave us in the dark.' That appeal was more than I could stand, and I hope to be able soon to have native teachers in full work at all such places."

MORAVIAN MISSION.

Missionary work is still in its infancy in Alaska, whither the Moravians sent five of their agents last year to labour amongst the Eskimos. Before 1867, when the territory of Alaska was purchased from Russia by the United States Government, the only Christian instruction the people had received was what a small Mission conducted by the Greek Church could give. After its acquisition the American Presbyterians commenced work in the South-east, but as the population was very mixed (Eskimos, Alents, Creoles, Tinneh, Ihlingets, Hydah, and whites), and the Society's resources were already fully taxed, Dr. Sheldon Jackson made several appeals to other boards, but without effect, until he turned to the Moravians with the plea, "If you refuse, these heathen must go down in the dark." Such an appeal could not be resisted, and a number volunteered to engage in this unknown service. In the spring of 1885 the first five missionaries went to establish a station, and they now report progress with the language, gaining confidence of the people, and being enabled to render medical assistance. Three other volunteers have been sent this year to commence a school at Nushagak. Sad to relate, one of the pioneers was accidentally drowned on August 10, and the infant mission is thus deprived of one who, with his practical talents, promised to be of much service in founding the station.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

LIVERPOOL.

The President of this Association, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., gave a reception to the members on Saturday week, to inaugurate the session. There was a large attendance of members. At the public meeting held in the Association Hall afterwards, Mr. Smith gave an address on "Truth-seeking." Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson also addressed the meeting.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

The half-yearly Conference of delegates from Y.M.C.A.'s in this district was held at the rooms of the Burnley Association last Thursday evening. Mr. James Wood, C.E., President of Burnley Y.M.C.A., occupied the chair. Reports from the various Associations were given. Arrangements were made for the monthly inter-visitation of the Associations during the winter. Various questions were discussed relating to the welfare of the Associations.

AMPTHILL.

Successful services have been held by Hatterchele Macher Kistheshe, better known as Mr. Salim C. Wilson, a native of the Soudan, rescued by General Gordon in 1875. On Sunday, Oct. 3, the largest hall in the town was crowded with eager listeners. One evening he lectured on "Africa," attired in his native costume, when hundreds could not gain admission. On Wednesday week the winter session was opened with a tea and social meeting of the members and associates. Mr. Wilson spoke, and the gathering was in every respect successful.

KINGSTOWN, CO. DUBLIN.

The quarterly social meeting was held on Monday, the 4th inst., in the Association Rooms, Upper George's-street. The Right Hon. the Recorder of Dublin took the chair. Mr. S. A. Martin (hon. sec.) read a paper describing his visit to the British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s at Bristol. Short addresses were given by General Rice, Rev. J. Ervine, Rev. Mr. Moran, Messrs. W. J. Lloyd, W. S. Goodwin, and W. E. Russell. The Recorder, at the close of the meeting, responding to a vote of thanks, urged the young men to spread the Gospel in Kingstown. The rooms were tastefully decorated with flowers, and the efforts of the social committee were quite successful in providing a pleasant and profitable evening for the guests.

HAMPSTEAD.

The new rooms of this Association, situated in the Willoughby-road, High-street, were opened on Tuesday, October 12, when Mr. Hugh M. Matheson occupied the chair, and a large company of ladies and gentlemen were present. The building, which is a comfortable and substantial-looking red brick structure, contains suitable accommodation, such as reading-room, lecture-hall, gymnasium, &c. The meeting was addressed by Mr. H. M. Matheson, Rev. Gilbert S. Karney, Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. W. Brock. Mr. Duncan, one of the treasurers, gave a statement, showing the necessity for the new building, and, as to the financial position, said the cost of the land was £500. and of the building and fixtures about £1380; they had received about £1400, so that they opened the building with practically the land alone unpaid for.

SOUTHWARK.

This Association has recently been transferred from Trinity-street to new and commodious premises in Newington-causeway, which have hitherto been known as "Dunn's Institute." The opening meeting was held on the 12th instant in the Hall of the Institute, Mr. J. Herbert Tritton being in the chair. The hall was filled with a most enthusiastic audience of young men, to whom many wise and weighty words were spoken. The principal speaker was Mr. Charles Spurgeon, Jun., whose address was much relished. This branch of the Y.M.C.A. will combine the advantages of "Home," with board and lodging, to a limited number of young men. This will be good news to many a young man who finds it hard to obtain homely lodgings, and it is hoped that such will make use of the privilege offered. The secretary is Mr. George F. Assiter, who for several years was on the staff of the Aldersgate-street Mission.

KING'S CROSS.

This Association, whose rooms are at 91, Euston-road, has issued its list of engagements. Besides the Bible-class, reading-room, and library, there is a monthly social gathering for the members. A Band of Hope and Adult Temperance Society are also carried on in connection with the Association. Help is greatly needed for the work.

PECKHAM.

A Young Men's Institute has recently been opened at 33, Rye-lane, Peckham, in connection with the Rye-lane Baptist Chapel. Already some seventy members have joined. The rooms are open every evening, and are supplied with daily and weekly papers, periodicals, and magazines, writing materials, &c. There are Sunday morning and afternoon Bible-classes, and the Friday evening association for mutual improvement. Educational classes are also provided, and lectures and entertainments are arranged for the winter season. As the neighbourhood is by no means a wealthy one, books suitable for the library will be very gratefully received by the General Secretary, Mr. F. F. Robinson, 50, Shenley-road, Camberwell.

DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

Sir,—Not more than five years have elapsed since a visit paid to the North Sea Trawling Fleets proved, by God's providence, the commencement of a new and happier epoch for the deep-sea fishermen. To-day seven mission smacks cruise in these waters, serving as church, dispensary, temperance hall, and club. Testimony to the beneficial results achieved is hearty and universal. Two of these vessels were equipped at a cost of £4550, and presented to the Institution by generous donors. The remaining five were originally private property, and merely lent for missionary purposes; and although a considerable portion of their purchase-money has been defrayed during the current year, a sum of £6000 still remains to be cleared off before they are free from mortgage, and registered in the names of trustees as the unencumbered property of the Mission.

Moreover, seven vessels cannot meet the requirements of twelve fleets. A special fund is proposed, to be styled the "Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund," in order that these Mission smacks may be sent forth as at once a memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee and as heralds of mercy from the King of kings, ministering healing and comfort to the bodies, and peace and gladness to the hearts of the fishermen.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of Miss Sarah Robinson, of Portsmouth.

☞ With next week's issue will be given THE CHRISTIAN ALMANACK for 1887; price of the number, with Almanack, 2d.

Rev. Dr. Saphir, of the Belgrave Presbyterian Church, West Halkin-street, W., resumes his Sunday morning services there next Lord's Day.

The latest intelligence from the interior of Africa states that all the missionaries have left Uganda, with the exception of Mr. Mackay, the English missionary who has been committed to prison by the King. Mr. Mackay has appealed to the British Government.

Dr. Wylie's important paper on "The Papacy," read at the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Ryde, is now in the press. It has been revised by the author, and will be published, with additional matter, at this office during next week, price 2d. Quantities for gratuitous circulation may be obtained direct from the office at a considerable reduction.

We have received several letters with reference to Mr. Radcliffe's address at Mildmay Conference, and also one from himself. We think, as we said in our note, that the statement referred to was too sweeping; but it is evident from Mr. Radcliffe's letter that he had in his mind matter which would have occupied thirty minutes, while he was limited to twelve. There were qualifications and modifications which doubtless he had made before, and which he intended on this occasion, but omitted. These would have conveyed a different impression to that created. We do not think it is worth while to magnify a lapsus linguæ into a newspaper correspondence.

Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, editor of The Sentinel, has accepted the post of honorary secretary to the young, but energetic, Gospel Purity Association, the story of whose first year's work is so interestingly told in "The Purity Crusade." It is hoped that Mr. Dyer's past experience will still further increase the usefulness of the Association, and will secure for it the confidence and sympathy of that large body of the Christian public who are acquainted with his long years of labour for the promotion of social purity, the suppression of the foreign slave trade in English girls, and for their further legal protection in this country. We commend the Association to the best sympathy of our readers. Mr. Dyer's address is 31, Paternoster-square, E.C.

The recent gales, with their sad tale of shipwreck and the loss of life, have given us a painful reminder of the hazards encountered by the brave toilers of the deep. None of these are exposed to more frequent or more terrible perils than the fishermen who search for spoil in the Northern Sea. How vastly important to carry to these hardy fellows, who live continually on the verge of the eternal world, the consolations of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This is what is being done in a measure by the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, with respect to which a brief letter appears on a preceding page. We would emphatically second its appeal for generous support.

The report of the Howard Association, lately issued, deals with subjects relating to the discipline of British prisons. The Society demands freer opportunities for observation, and offers very painful evidence of cruelly conducted executions, and of unnecessary prison harshness for offences on matters of conscience, which officials sought to conceal. It urges greater separation in jails from evil companionship, and more effectual remedies to prevent endless re-commitments for drunkenness and minor offences. The work of the Association is valuable, and very necessary.

The Dutch Government has of late years expended large sums of money in the erection of elaborate prisons and upon experiments in the treatment of criminals; but, inasmuch as the authorities admit that in Holland, as elsewhere, drunkenness is the chief agent in the production of crime, it would seem that the author of an interesting paper on the subject in a recent issue of The Times is not far wrong in suggesting that an effectual means of preventing intemperance would be "an incomparably more radical mode of checking crime" than the erection of any number of costly jails. Our own Government, however, is equally at sea upon this matter, and it is perhaps too much to expect that Holland will begin at the roots, whilst England sets the example of dealing only with the evil fruits of the drink traffic.

A little while ago a number of Bibles were sent by post to residents in two Irish villages. An Irish provincial newspaper, the editor of which, evidently, is either ignorant of the opinion expressed by Cardinal Manning as to the desirability of increased knowledge of the Scriptures, or if he kas met with the Cardinal's utterance, disapproves of it, comments upon the British and Foreign Bible Society as one upon which "canting hypocrites batten," and refers to the Bibles as "obnoxious." What a light such an occurrence throws upon the spiritual condition of the Romanist population of the sister island.

In these days when Romanism is becoming so aggressive in Great Britain, it may not be uninteresting to glance at the instructions given by the Pope in an encyclical letter of 1885:—

> All Catholics must make themselves felt as active elements in daily political life in the countries where they live. They must penetrate wherever possible in the administration of civil affairs; must constantly exert the utmost vigilance and energy to prevent the usages of liberty from going beyond the limits fixed by God's law. All Catholics should do all in their power to cause the constitutions of states and legislation to be modeled on the principles of the true Church. All Catholic writers and journalists should never lose for an instant from view the above prescriptions. All Catholics should redouble their submission to authority and unite their whole heart, soul, body and mind, in the defence of the Church and Christian wisdom.

A correspondent writes:—"I am thankful your paper exposes the evils and errors of Popery.. It is surely needed in these days. There is also the disregard of the Sabbath. Only a few miles distant, at the very place where Whitefield once laboured, the clergyman encourages cricket-playing in the front of his house on Sundays. On inquiring why the Bishop was not informed of it, I was told he had been, and the only thing I could hear he said was, that 'it was only a trifling thing.'"

The Pall Mall Gazette recently called attention to a statement in The New York Journal with regard to what it terms, "a new American slave trade," a trade, in plain language, in English, Irish, and Continental young women, for the most infamous purposes. The emissaries are regularly making trips to Europe in search of victims, who are generally engaged as ladies' maids; it is asserted that sometimes one agent brings over five or six girls. The American paper tells a sadly pathetic story of a girl lured away from Ireland by one of these vile procuresses, but who was saved from a fate worse than death by the thoughtfulness and cleverness of a policeman in New York. The plans laid by the depraved and cunning agents are so elaborate in many instances, that it is difficult to detect their vileness in advance. Many of our readers, however, may do something to prevent them from being successful, if they will take the trouble to warn girls who are being induced to emigrate, as to this shameful trade, and by assisting them in making all necessary inquiries before accepting tempting offers of employment.

Professor Delitzsch, of Leipsig, is leading a movement in nine German Universities, having for its object, mission work among the Jews. Those who are engaged in the work intend to establish a school in Leipsig, in which the missionaries are to be educated, the Professor himself to teach them Hebrew. Already over three hundred students at the Universities have joined the movement. It is stated in a German newspaper, that in Vienna alone, during 1885, two hundred and sixty Jews became Christians, and that never in the history of Germany were conversions from Judaism so numerous as now.

A few weeks ago we commented upon the hardships inflicted upon the already overworked tramcar drivers and conductors in Dublin, through the institution of Sunday bands, and it was with pleasure we observed that petitions against the innovation were being signed by Christian people of all denominations. What will the unfortunate tramcar man think of the following pendant to an announcement of Sunday sermons in the Molyneux Church, Dublin, on "God's legacy to the poor"?

> By the courtesy of the Tramways Company, special cars will run from Palmerston Park terminus every seven minutes after 10.15 a.m. and 6.15 p.m.

Have the Christians who are interested in the church in question forgotten that they are cities set on a hill, and that it will not be unnatural if the tramcar men, whose rare day of rest is taken from them, ask with some bitterness how it can be consistent for people, who object to cars being run for the convenience of those who wish to hear a band, to arrange for their running "every seven minutes" when a popular preacher is concerned.

M. asks us to reconcile Acts xiii. 48 with John iii. 16. The note of the "Speaker's Contemporary" on the passage in Acts is as follows:—

> Rather translate thus—"Were set in order for, i.e., disposed for, eternal life—as many as had marshalled themselves in the ranks of those who welcomed the offer of eternal life." Compare 1 Cor. xvi. 15. The reference is to the efficacy of God's grace, not to his eternal purpose.

Our correspondent may be assured that neither this nor any other passage of Holy Scripture contradicts or modifies John iii. 16. On the contrary, every inspired word gives it increasing emphasis.

ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Eighteenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
DISEASE of RIGHT LUNG.
CASE of MISS LONG, of HEREFORD.

A little more than a year and a half from the time I write, I was visited by this patient, then living in St. George's-road, London. Her brother and mother had died of Consumption. She herself had been ailing for years, with what appeared a rheumatic affection, and which, finally, settled in the chest. The Cough and spitting, in their character, were indicative of Phthisis; while pain, diarrhœa, wasting, and weakness were very critical signs. I fully advised her, and she recovered.

Writing me from Litley Court, Hereford, July 27, she says:—"I am thankful to testify to the benefits I have received through your means. I began to improve after the first three doses of your Medicine. The Cough soon disappeared, and other symptoms gradually improved. I have recommended your treatment to people far and near, and have often heard of good done to those who have been given up as incurable. A gentleman, well known to me—a great sufferer; given up by two physicians—has been restored, simply from taking the Medicines, and can now attend to his business, and again testify openly for the Lord. I return you many thanks," &c., &c.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Rev. J. M. Wilson, the Head Master of Clifton College, recently lectured at a Congregational Church on "Progress of Christian Church Life." It is a somewhat unusual circumstance for a minister of the Church of England to give an address in a Congregational chapel, and Mr. Wilson explained his position thus:—

> It is possible to combine a wide divergence of opinion on secondary matters with an earnest unanimity in primary matters. I cannot but believe that if Christ could stand among us He would say that nothing should separate us from one another which does not separate us from Him.

We commend these thoughtful words to the attention of those who put sect in front of Christ, and who cannot agree to differ on minor points with others whose views as to essentials are admittedly Scriptural.

Notwithstanding the progress of modern thought and new theology, there seems no delusion too foolish to attract and entrap unstable souls, no wind of doctrine by which they cannot be blown about, no sleight of men or cunning craftiness by which they cannot be deceived. Poor old Mrs. Girling, the female principle of the Deity, who had her immortal body, and was never going to die, is dead and buried, and her followers dispersed. But we have Mormonites, and Flying Roll-ers, and the "Special Messenger," and followers of Mr. Barnes and Mr. Carty; and now these last, together with the extreme wing of the faith-healers, are going over to Mr. Prince and the Agapemone.

But the men (and women) who arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after themselves are mutually antagonistic. Thus we have the "Special Messenger" of the "special message" regretfully noticing that The Christian has been silent regarding himself, but applauding us for having—> rendered good service in exposing the erroneous doctrines of a Mr. Prince who made a great stir about forty years ago, and . . . built an abode in the south-west of England called the Agapemone, where many joined him at that time who were influenced by the spirit which had taken possession of him.

It seems not to have occurred to the "Special Messenger" that a false spirit may have taken possession of him also.

The "Special Messenger" has been made painfully aware that—

> A revival of this man's teaching and influence has recently taken place, in which it was Satan's main purpose to overthrow the "special message and messenger;" for several of those who were foremost in assisting him in his work three years ago have now fallen into the snare.

And, as if this were not a sufficiently audacious manifestation of Satanic malice—

> A desperate attempt has been made to get him also. A printed letter referred to in The Christian was written specially to him.

Is it not time for Christians to withdraw from barren speculations and unanswerable questions, and preach and teach Jesus Christ, and hold fast the form of sound words? Five minutes on the other side the veil will assure us whether the English are the ten lost tribes; whether the Church is or is not to go through the great tribulation; whether the New Testament saints are or are not to be eternally in a more privileged and exalted position than the elders of previous dispensations; whether conditional immortality, or universal restoration, or immediate or prospective annihilation, or punishment continuing everlastingly, is or is not the truth of God. Has not the query of Isaiah, rolling down the ages, a significance as to spiritual no less than carnal things; a voice to them that are within no less than to them that are without?—

> Wherefore do ye spend your money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto ME and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear and come unto ME; hear and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting covenant with you even the sure mercies of David.

Why should we spend our money and our labour on the dry bones of speculative theories, and fill ourselves with the east wind, while God, the Lord of hosts, has made unto all peoples a feast of fat things full of marrow, a feast of wines on the lees well refined; and Jesus is saying, "I am the true Bread from heaven. If any man thirst let him come unto ME and drink?" There are matters concerning which very little is revealed. Is it not enough to use the words of Scripture, and leave the Holy Spirit to interpret them? If He says "everlasting punishment," why should we assume to explain it on the one hand, or to explain it away on the other?

We have the addresses of missionaries abroad and pastors and evangelists at home who would be thankful to receive The Christian, if any friends would send them their copies when read, or subscribe for a copy to be sent to them.

The Rock, in its review of Chiniquy's Fifty Years in Rome, calls attention to "the grim irony of Pharisaic demureness" under which Ritualistic Confessors enrol themselves as supporters of social purity.

The famous Ritualistic Bishop of Colombo is at the head of a Purity Society in Ceylon, and the Wesleyans and others fall into line under the crucifix—so writes a correspondent.

In Bombay, a Social Purity Alliance is formed, with the Ritualistic Bishop at its head, and a Cowley father for secretary. Under the leadership of these father confessors Dissenters all join. The Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and other ministers and people, unite, and play second fiddle to Anglo-Romanism. Is it wise for men whose fathers died for the truth in Jesus to compromise themselves and the truth by joining with girl-confessing priests in a purity campaign?

Tract societies in India are too "union" to fight Ritualism. The Ritualists get on the committees, and so outspoken Protestantism is choked down. Individuals must do the work. God will guide and bless them.

Mr. Spurgeon has published his "Annual Paper concerning the Lord's work in the Pastors' College." In it he says, "To preserve the truth of God in these days of declension, it is imperative upon us that we commit the Gospel to faithful men. Controversy with those preachers who are already infected with erroneous views is of small use. The wiser way is to train others to proclaim the true doctrine. . . . There are earnest believers still remaining who will help me in this effort to provide a sound Gospel ministry." We believe there are, and we are glad of it. Bis dat qui citò dat.

Mr. Rogers contributes a letter in which he says:—"The tendency in Dissenting colleges to centralisation, and to a separation, after the example of Universities, of secular and theological studies, is not, we think, one of the most hopeful signs of the times. . . . Separate colleges are a stimulant and a restraint to each other. If error comes like a flood into one, another may set up a standard against it. It will be an evil day in which the various colleges shall be melted into one institution."

This wise forecast and warning is followed by a truly encouraging epitome of the work accomplished by "the Pastors' College Society of Evangelists," and an account of the pastors at work in the Australian Colonies. Then comes a highly characteristic and valuable paper by Mr. Spurgeon, in which he "wonders if he can make anything out of so unusual a subject as the birth, origin, history, and work of a Student of the Pastors' College." We need not say that he admirably succeeds.

We hope our readers are not omitting to read in China's Millions the almost romantic yet most practical story of Mr. Hudson Taylor's early experiences, and how he learned to trust in God for his daily needs, and thus became qualified to be a missionary in China, and then to be the responsible director of the China Inland Mission.

Cardinal Manning does not appear to be quite so hopeful with regard to the future of the Romish Church as some of his verbose colleagues would appear to be. In a sermon which he preached recently at Kensington he gave expression to somewhat gloomy views, both about the past and the future. After quoting the Pope's assertion, that "the condition of the world and the Church is deplorable," he went on to inform his hearers that "the anti-Christian spirit," after spreading all over the West and North "in what is called the Reformation," banishing the Divine Master from "the sanctuaries where He dwelt day and night, and where He no longer is," had at last entered Catholic nations. In France it had taken the form of a devastating revolution, and had penetrated Italy where "the Vicar of Jesus Christ is shut up under his own roof and dethroned so far as the hand of man can go."

However inaccurate the Cardinal's views of the Reformation and its results may be, there can be no doubt that he is a careful student of contemporary history, for he went on to add, and the admission is indeed a noteworthy one, coming from such a source:—

> Already the great majority of nations that once belonged to the Church, I am sorry to say, have ceased to believe that the Pope is the Vicar of Jesus Christ. . . . This I take to be another sign of the declension of the Catholic world.

The death of Mr. Samuel Morley has removed perhaps the largest contributor of our time to voluntary efforts for the spread of the Gospel. Such organisations as the Evangelistic Mission and many others will suffer a very serious diminution of income, unless the mantle of this departed deviser of liberal things fall upon another, or on many, whose privilege it shall be to prove that "there is that scattereth and yet increaseth."

DUBLIN CONVENTION.

The inaugural meeting of the thirteenth annual Christian Convention last week was held on Monday evening at the Christian Union Buildings. A conversazione drew together a large band of Christian workers and friends, who enjoyed the weighty words of Rev. Joseph Potter, of Derry, as he maintained that Christianity was "a doctrinal religion, an experimental religion, and a practical religion," each phase claiming its due position in the Christian economy. From Matt. xvi. he pointed out that the true attitude of the believer is to declare his belief, whenever challenged, that Christ is the Son of God, the personal source of a personal religion. Man must cease to be man before he ceases to be a religious being. There is an innate leaning toward the worship of a God of some sort in all men, and thus the unbeliever assails not so much religion as a principle, as its truths and doctrines. "Thou art the Christ" is the basis of all true Christianity, and a personal consciousness of this is the motive power of practical spiritual life.

The great feature of the Conference has been the presence of some 250 clergymen and ministers of all denominations, who have blended most harmoniously in truest Christian unity, whilst His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin presided on one occasion. The Christian Advocate (Belfast) considers that "at any time work which so unites large sections of the people would be a precious achievement, but in these days of discord, and in a country so torn with civil and other animosities as ours, an occasion that thus fosters union is a national blessing."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 12.

Very rough weather was responsible for the rather scanty attendance at the morning session. With Lord James Butler in the chair, Rev. J. Chalmers, of Liverpool, spoke on "The Christian Life, a Life of Faith." Its commencement is one of faith—"By grace are ye saved, through faith." Its growth is maintained by faith—"The life that I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God." And it should terminate in faith, as did that of the heroes of old who "all died in faith." Whilst many Christians are unable to define the exact commencement of their spiritual life, they should have no difficulty in defining its progress. Their hearts have responded to his loving invitation to come to Christ, but do not realise their blessedness. When, however, we do so, how can we but rejoice in it? If we lose faith we either cease to progress, or do so by our own experience; but if this is so we must come to grief. The life of faith in some is like a mountain stream which gains strength all along its course; in others like a tiny rill sometimes lost to sight, and often struggling for its existence, but increasing as it derives fresh supplies. With the shield of faith any youthful David may conquer and slay his Goliath, and with the bridle of faith we may rein our passions and live to the glory of God.

Rev. J. Whigham followed, upon "The Apostleship of the Christian." Christ Himself was the first Apostle, being the "sent One" of his Father, whose will He came to do; and all who obey his command to go forth as witnesses of the truth are apostles, or sent ones. Conversion brings us into a new relation, both with God and man; and whilst we enjoy our religious privileges, we are also under a spiritual obligation to testify in our words and lives of his love, and to co-operate with Him in his great purposes of mercy to a perishing world. Although but few can go forth into the high places of the field, yet our duty of apostleship remains in its full force. Go, as Andrew did, to your own brother and kindred. The primary sphere of apostleship is the home, whatever may be your position there. If a parent, minister daily at the family altar, and train up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. If a child, honour your parents; be kind, loving, and obedient, increasing in wisdom, and in favour with God and man. If a master, rule your own house well, remembering the Master whom you serve. If a servant, do faithful work with good-will, as unto the Lord and not unto men. There is a vast amount of unused power and talent in our congregations, which must be unwrapped from their napkins. Arouse yourself, therefore, Christian, to a sense of your responsibilities; be an apostle of the truth, and an angel of light and blessing in this dark world. Be diligent in the work given you to do in the home, in the Church, in the Sabbath-school, in the hospital, in the prison, in the sick room, in the abode of poverty, in the chamber of sorrow, in the busy haunts of men, in the great thoroughfares of trade and traffic: be a living epistle, a faithful apostle. And when at last the end shall come, you will finish your course with joy, and receive your welcome into glory from the lips of the great Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Dr. Wright, of Dublin, then gave a sketch of the Baltic provinces of Russia, and of the guarantees given by that Power in the last century in favour of religious liberty; he referred to the way in which these liberties had been gradually curtailed, and pressure brought to bear upon Protestants to join the Greek Church. Especially of late has intelligence reached the Evangelical Alliance of fresh persecution; but details are difficult to be obtained, as it may cost a pastor his liberty, and perhaps his life, to be found in correspondence with the outside Christian world. The Chairman added that unless Protestants band together all over the world, and more especially among the Northern nations, they will have a severe struggle to hold their own against the attack made on them from every quarter.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

This afternoon the subject set down for consideration was the important one of "Religion in the Family."

Rev. Canon Wynne spoke on "Family Worship." It had been said by one of the greatest theologians of the present day that, in the idea of Christian life, every day is a Sabbath, every man is a priest, and every spot in the inhabited world is a temple of the living God. If there was any spot that they might feel to be a temple of the living God, it was that home where God had given them so many blessings, and surrounded them with those who are nearest and dearest to them on earth. Every Christian household is a miniature Church. The union between husband and wife is a type of the union between Christ and his Church; the bond that binds parents and children is a type of the great bond that binds God's people to the Father in heaven. Two things sometimes interfere with the beauty of family worship—formality and irreverence. He mentioned these faults, not for the purpose of supplying cut and dried rules to reform them, but in order that they might be on their guard against what would hinder the edification, the happiness, and the acceptableness of their worship. After all, family worship is the outcome of the family life.

Rev. William Nicholas (Portadown) took for his subject "Parental Teaching and Training." Both teaching and training were referred to in the Word of God. There is a difference, he said, between teaching and training. Teaching is imparting knowledge; training is forming habits. Teaching must be accompanied by explanation; training must be enforced by discipline. Both require repetition, "line upon line, precept upon precept." So far as secular knowledge is concerned, parents may gladly avail themselves of the assistance afforded by day-schools. So far as religious knowledge is concerned, they may avail themselves of the assistance afforded by Sunday-schools; it is an abuse, however, of the Sunday-school system to make it a substitute for parental teaching and training, although it is a blessed thing that there is such a substitute, for the children of ignorant or religiously indifferent parents. The Sunday-school is often spoken of as the nursery of the Church, and he would not quarrel with the epithet. Nevertheless, the true nursery of the Church is the Christian home. Children ought to be trained up in the habit of obedience to their parents. There can be no comfort in a home until it is a settled question that the parents are to rule. The home is not a democracy, nor a republic, but a monarchy, and the parents rule by right divine. In order that obedience may be enforced there must be unity of action on the part of the parents. If a child finds out that he can successfully appeal to the one parent against the decision of the other, he will soon learn to disobey both. Such conduct on the part of the parents will be eventually destructive of each other's authority, and will overturn the very foundations of parental government. But the enforcing of obedience should be done in the spirit of love, and in the training of children their conversion should be distinctly aimed at.

Rev. John MacDermott (Belfast) spoke of "Parental Ambitions." It is natural and right that parents should provide for their children, but there ought to be the most ceaseless care that this natural anxiety should not run into one minor channel, and be kept there. It is right that we should endeavour to provide for and keep our children from penury and want; but, side by side with this duty, there is a larger duty. God's order is righteousness first and riches afterwards. Care should be taken not to allow anxiety for the future position of our children in this world to occupy the time we should devote to our duty in the family circle. If we are willing to trust ourselves to God throughout eternity, we ought to trust Him in regard to the making of provision for our children during that period here which we call time.

EVENING MEETING.

The hall was crowded, as the evening meetings usually are. The first address was by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson (London), on "The Symbols of the Holy Spirit in Scripture." The chief symbols, he said, were those which were considered by the ancients as elements. There were four chief elements—earth, water, air, and fire. The earth was a gross element, and the other three were refined and refining elements. Accordingly, earth was associated with the flesh, while air, water, and fire were of the Spirit, and were all used as symbols of the Spirit. In a most interesting and suggestive way he proceeded to expound the symbols of air and water, leaving for another opportunity the consideration of the highest symbol of all—that of fire.

An earnest evangelistic appeal from Mr. J. Townsend Trench closed the exercises of the day.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13.

Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell (whose addresses have been so much valued, especially by the ministers present) led off the morning meeting with a paper entitled, "Christ and other masters; or, Christianity compared with heathen systems." Although a subject more fitted, he said, for students than a popular gathering, he still believed it to be one of present and practical importance. The comparison of different forms of religion had occupied many minds and formed the subject of endless literary effort. There are many erroneous ideas afloat, all tending to degrade the Gospel of Christ from the unique position God intended it to occupy, whilst many persons consider all religions to be partially true and partially false. He was prepared to show that Christianity has borrowed no truth from any Pagan system, and that all other systems have mingled very much error with what measure of truth they contain. Dr. Mitchell then gave what he termed a sad recital of the ancient religions of the world, including those of Babylon, Egypt, Phœnicia, Rome and Greece, and also a sketch of existing heathen forms as far as they have been brought to light. He strongly emphasised the following points, viz., that civilisation unaccompanied by the true religion of Christ has proved and will ever prove a curse and not a blessing, inasmuch as it only introduces its sins without the counteracting influence of the Gospel: that wherever Christianity has obtained a firm footing, it has asserted and maintained its superiority over any previously existing form of heathen religion, to the gradual decrease of the latter: that, whatever points of good can be found in any existing religion, they are already found in Christianity, whilst the evil and degrading influences which they contain are utterly absent from the religion of Christ, neither Socrates, Confucius, nor Buddha being within reasonable comparison with the sublime life and character of the Son of God.

Rev. J. B. Figgis spoke from John x. 10, upon "Life abundantly." The Church of God needs many things, but none so much as life. Only life can make living Christians, or a living Church, as only an acorn—not even a pearl—will make an oak. There is a great deal of scaffolding about our churches, but this must all be removed, ere the Church will present a perfect, elegant appearance, and then it can only endure if builded upon the Living Stone. With simplicity and beauty the speaker drew a picture of a father's return home after long absence. Sorrow and trouble have perhaps entered, and embarrassment of circumstances ensued, or perhaps discord and quarrelling may have arisen among the members of the family. But, hark! A whisper runs round, "There's father!" and as the glad cry is raised, "Father's come!" the trouble and the discord fly out of the window as he comes in at the door. And presently he opens his bag, and empties his pockets, and gives little presents to one and another, and there is great joy, because "father's come!" So Christ says, "I am come," and why? Has He any gifts? Yes. "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly." In Psalm lxxii. 7 we have "abundance of peace;" in Isaiah lx. 7, of pardon; in Isaiah lxvi. 11, of glory; in Jeremiah xxxiii. 6, of truth; in Romans v. 17, of grace; in 2 Corinthians viii. 2, of joy; in 1 Peter i. 3, of mercy; but all these shall we possess if we have the abundance of life.

Following up somewhat this line of thought, Rev. Marcus Rainsford spoke briefly on the subject of "Living Water." In conversation with the woman at the well Jesus said: "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water." That is the gift which God has to bestow—life, under the symbol of water, which, coming from such a source, cannot be otherwise than abundant.

In the afternoon the hall was filled, and with Major-Gen. Rice in the chair, Rev. J. W. Whigham spoke upon "Christ-like Character." A man's character is not his talents, his rank, or even his reputation. His repute "is what his fellow-men think of him;" his character "is what God thinks of him." Character relates to sound principles, elevated aims, self-denial in spirit, purpose, and life. Such a character is a great moral force in the world, but it must be subservient to, and controlled by, the one true example, godliness, which is seen in the character of the Lord Jesus. What a perfect pattern the character is! What moral beauty encircles it! What a halo of glory surrounds it! Let us look upon it, and study it from day to day, and as the face of Moses shone as he gazed on the Divine glory, so will our characters shine with the likeness of Christ, and we shall become a living likeness of our great Lord and Master.

Rev. E. F. Rambant dealt with the subject of Doctrine, showing the inefficacy of mere doctrine to save or sanctify, which only a living Christ can do. At the same time sound doctrine is the basis of all true religion and Christian experience. The spirit of the age is against sound doctrine, and many of the most blessed truths of our belief are denied in whole or part by some eminent men who are reedy pillars of the Church. He took occasion to protest against the letting of that hall by the Y.M.C.A. to Rev. H. Ward Beecher, but his protest was ruled out of order. It was a great pleasure to see so many different opinions represented by various ministers present, and he trusted that while differing in points of doctrine, the outcome of the Convention would be to establish more inter-communion between the different churches.

Rev. Wesley Guard brought the meeting to a close with an address upon "Co-operation in Service for God."

In the evening over 3000 listened with great attention to Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, as, following up the thread of his discourse of the previous evening, he dealt with "Fire, as a Symbol of the Spirit." Christ declared Himself to be the foundation of living water, and those who believe on Him, "as the Scripture hath said," shall be channels through whom the living water may flow to others. Thus the symbol of water seems specially connected with God manifest in the flesh. But the symbol of fire belongs rather to the dispensation of the Spirit. The baptism of the Spirit was to be "with fire," as John the Baptist predicted, and this was fulfilled at Pentecost, when "tongues as of fire sat upon" those present. Earth, water, air and fire are four elements which, according to ancient idea, are in ascending order. Earth represents all that is heavy, gross and dead. Fire aspires to heaven, whilst water and air maintain intermediate positions. Fire seems a thing of heaven come to earth. It shines with its own light, it is full of life and action of itself, it diffuses the light and warmth of heaven, and whilst water and earth fall the fire rises to the heights from whence it came. Man is of the earth earthy: the Spirit of God cleanses him with water and gives him spiritual breath, but with fire cleanses away his dross and brings him forth purified, made white, and tried. The baptism of fire implies a new element in life—man walking in the Spirit, and a new energy of life—the Spirit working in man. As a cleansing power it burns and penetrates into recesses which water could never reach; and, as a quickening power, it imparts a new energy, whilst most that air or water can do is restore an old energy. You may confine earth, water, and even air in a vessel, and they will remain there. But not so fire. It will either work its own way out, or smoulder and die in the attempt. So with the Spirit of God. If we shut it up, and prevent its working, it will die, and leave our hearts cold and dead. We may receive water without being fountains to others; but not so with fire. Water flows in a channel made for it, but fire overcomes all obstacles, and makes its own way. Many Christians have received the baptism of water, but not that of the fire. They may have many good points and qualities, but these need the application of the fire. The grate may be filled with fuel, but its contents are but cold and dead until the fire is applied. If we receive the fire, we cannot keep it to ourselves. Therefore, shall we not cry to God for it, for the sake of those around us?

Rev. Marcus Rainsford then addressed an earnest appeal to the unsaved.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4.

The morning meeting was devoted to the consideration of the evangelisation of the world. Lord Plunkett, Archbishop of Dublin, presided, and, before introducing the speakers, alluded to the union amongst the various sections of the Church, which it was the object of these meetings to promote. His lordship deplored that such differences should exist, but many felt that it was impossible to obliterate the characteristics of differences which each denomination held without compromising their respective Churches. For this reason many of his clergy had declined their presence, and probably disagreed with him for having consented to preside. But he felt no such difficulty, and, therefore, when asked to be present as chairman, he dared not refuse. He trusted that the great question of the evangelisation of the world, and the unity of God's people necessary to its accomplishment, would help them to bury all their minor differences for the sake of the one great object. His lordship then alluded in very touching terms to the late Rev. Dr. Fleming Stephenson, "whose loss we all deplore, and who, perhaps, has done more for the cause of unity and evangelisation than any who have spoken from that platform on the occasion of such conventions. When we think of his loving nature, of his cultured mind, and his heart burning with evangelistic zeal, we cannot help deeply feeling his loss, whilst we praise God that it is our dear friend's gain. One thing we may all do, to strive to follow his example, that, like him, we may be partners of the everlasting kingdom."

Dr. Murray Mitchell expressed his entire agreement with the sentiments expressed by his lordship, and was glad that the question of the heathen was selected for discussion. He referred to the time when Celtic missionaries overspread the Continent, not in handfuls but in "armies" and inundations. Now, if he were asked "What is being done in the missionary cause?" he would would reply "very little," but he would also add "very much." Very little compared to what the Church of Christ might do, but very much on the part of God considering how little the Church is doing. Darwin described missionary work in the South Seas as being "an enchanter's wand," and speaking of a certain island, he says, "I never thought that any teaching would have made its inhabitants tell the truth, but this the missionaries have accomplished." Similar glorious results have always accompanied the introduction of the religion of Christ. Ethical science demands a gospel which denies miracles and the Atonement, and its upholders maintain that such a gospel would bring forth great results. But where are such results? If that teaching would convert the world why do they not try? Where does the Ethical Science Missionary Society exist? Nowhere. We mean to stick to the old banner and the simple facts of the Gospel, and our weapons, which are tempered in heaven, are unrusted and unblunted as of old.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe then spoke upon the same subject, pleading with his usual earnestness the cause of the millions of Africa, India, and China, quoting figures and facts, with which our readers are already familiar.

The meeting in the afternoon was addressed first by Rev. J. B. Figgis, who spoke briefly upon "Christ's ownership of his people." There are many Christians who practically rob God of this ownership by not yielding themselves up, body, soul, and spirit, to the Lord who bought them. Till we find some part of our being which He has not redeemed, we cannot rightly withhold any portion. Mind, soul, body all are his by right of purchase. This would be bondage if it were for any other but God, but surely it is not bondage to give ourselves to Him, who has withheld no good thing from us, not even his own life.

Rev. J. Chalmers showed that "Consecration" was no more than just yielding ourselves to God in the way suggested by the previous speaker. It presupposes that we have responded to the call of God, offering reconciliation and peace. Consecration is turning from our own will to his will, accepting that as the rule of our life; it is turning from pleasing ourselves to pleasing Him, and this will prove an indescribable joy. Mr. Chalmers concluded with an earnest appeal that as an outcome of the Convention and of this last believers' meeting, some who had never done so before should yield themselves up, body, soul and spirit, to their gracious Master, who is the rightful owner of their souls.

Rev. W. Nicholas supported these speakers, and the Convention was thus brought to a close with remarks of an intensely practical character.

Y.W.C.A. CONFERENCE.

Friday was a day of minor Conventions—a Y.M.C.A. Conference, a Church of Ireland Young Men's gathering, and a Y.W.C.A. Conference. The last-named Conference opened at half-past ten. Mrs. Tottenham presided at the devotional meeting. The attendance was extremely large at half-past eleven. Mrs. Tottenham addressed the ladies on 2 Chron. vi. 41—the glory of the Lord filling the house. She was followed by Mrs. Hatt Noble, on the definite needs of the day, and Miss Bradshaw, on "Hindrances to Consecration." In fact, this was an hour for consecration. Reports followed from each district referee, which occupied till half-past one, some of them being of the most touching description.

At half-past two the Association again assembled. The hall was so densely packed that it was necessary to have an overflow meeting, which filled another room. Mrs. Hatt Noble delivered her annual Presidential Address, too long to be noticed here. It was listened to with the deepest attention, the salient points in it being (1) the marvellous increase of the Association in Ireland, from 5000 members in 1884 to upwards of 9000 in 1886 ; (2) the new Institute in Dublin about to be opened ; (3) the Minor Conferences which have been held in different parts of Ireland.

Mrs. Noble was followed by Miss Reynolds, the head of the Evangelisation Department, who had visited 103 branches out of 219, and applications were constantly coming in for more evangelistic visits. It is a treat to hear the faithful, earnest, loving addresses which these lady evangelists deliver ; clergymen might do well in many instances to follow them in their clear delivery of the Gospel message. At the conclusion of the President's report addresses were delivered by Miss Nicholson, on Spiritual Growth ; Mrs. Pigott, on Joy of Sacrifice for Christ ; Mrs. Tottenham, on Rest in the Lord, the Secret of Successful Service ; Mrs. Menzies, on Life Work—its Aim, the Glory of God ; Miss Reynolds, on Evangelistic Work. Nothing could be more telling than the earnest and thorough manner in which these subjects were handled. The overflow meeting made a terrible strain on some of the ladies. Mrs. Menzies spoke for nearly an hour and a half between the two meetings, and Mrs. Tottenham not much less.

In the evening the Molesworth Hall was packed with women of all classes, and the Association received encouragement from the presence of several dignitaries of the Irish Church. General Noble, the chairman, addressed the meeting on "Onward, Upward, Heavenward, Looking unto Jesus." He was followed by Miss Mounsey, of Sunderland, who, in an evangelistic address, entreated any unconverted hearers to give themselves that night to Jesus. Canon Daunt, of York, next spoke on "Praise," and called on the members to be faithful and true to Him who had so lovingly drawn them to Him.

The next speaker was Mrs. Menzies, who took "Danger Signals" as her subject, the dangers to be guarded against being drift, dreaminess, dress, drink, despondency, dissipation. She illustrated all these with her usual graphic and pathetic manner, closing with an earnest appeal for support to the Association from all who were present.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe followed with an energetic appeal on behalf of missions, urging all the young women to come forward and devote themselves to evangelistic effort in India, China, and Africa.

Rev. F. Gason gave the last address. He was the latest recruit to the Y.W.C.A., and his hearty speech found an echo in the hearts of all present.

Mrs. Hatt Noble, the President, gave a very short farewell, a very solemn warning to all who had heard the Gospel message that night, and who were going either to trifle with it or reject it. At the same time she gave a word of loving encouragement to all who were labouring so steadily in the Master's service, and closed with an affectionate farewell to all those who had stood so faithfully to the Association, and had so true-heartedly, whole-heartedly, supported her and each other.

SOUTH AFRICA.—A quarterly paper, entitled The Pioneer, has been started by Mrs. Osborn, who is well known in connection with Christian work at the Cape. It is intended to be a record of work in South Africa and a means of communication. The October number contains interesting accounts of various Christian organisations at the Cape. It can be obtained from Mrs. Osborn, 12, Camden-hill, Upper Norwood, S.E.

STREET ORDERLY LADS. — These youths, whose appearance and dangerous avocation must be familiar to the frequenters of our London streets, were invited to a dinner at the "Welcome Restaurant," Cross Key Square, Little Britain, last Saturday week. Nearly 150 of these lads accepted the invitation, and enjoyed a good dinner of roast meat, vegetables, and plum-pudding. After the repast, Mr. James B. Wookey, to whose exertions the boys were indebted for the meal, addressed them. He reminded them of the occasion when "No. 13" was knocked down at Ludgate-circus by an omnibus, reading the account of which had so shocked him that he determined to do something for them. Mr. Kemp also addressed them.

AFRICA'S MISSION TO AFRICA.

Last Saturday morning, the Freedmen's Missions Aid Society held its annual meeting at Westminster Chapel. Although the hour was an unusual one, 11.30, there was a good gathering of the friends of the Mission. The proceedings opened with singing of "From all who dwell below the skies," after which Rev. Dr. Davies offered prayer.

The pastor, Rev. Henry Simon, presided, and, after a few introductory remarks, asked the Secretary to read the abstract of the report.

Rev. J. Gwynne Jones then gave a brief résumé of the work in West Africa. It had been remarkably prosperous during the last three years. Commenced by the United Brethren of America thirty-one years ago, the first missionaries were white men, coloured men not being available. During the first thirteen years only two converts were gained as the result of much labour. In the next fifteen years, most of the agents being coloured men, there were 514 Church members. Special efforts which resulted in 1012 being added to the church were made in 1884, and last year the number was 1103. There were eighteen central stations, extending over 100 miles of the coast, and twenty-five miles inland. At each of these, there were day and Sunday-schools, and services were held by the missionaries, who also itinerate in about 300 towns of the interior. The distinctive feature of the Mission is that it is conducted by coloured men, under white supervision. These men are devoted to the work, can stand the climate, and there is no prejudice against them. During the past year, out of forty-seven engaged, only one had died. The Society had sustained a great loss by the death of Lord Shaftesbury, who was its president from its commencement to the time of his death. There were probably 3000 Church members now in connection with the Mission.

Rev. D. K. Flickinger, D.D., then moved the adoption of the report, and in his speech gave a thrilling account of the state of the people when he first saw Africa, thirty-two years ago. He described their poverty and their degraded manner of life. They ate snakes, alligators, and, worst of all, one another. Then they were polygamists. Each had as many wives as he could afford to buy. These wives were slaves, to all intents and purposes. In addition to this, they were devil worshippers. They believed in a great Supreme Being, but also that the devil is controlling this world now, and hence they pray to appease him. During the nine times he had been to Africa, he had gone hundreds of miles into the interior, but he could not go into a village without finding a devil-house. There were acres of ground dedicated to the devil. They also worshipped the spirits of their deceased relatives. He then began to describe the mission work. In addition to teaching at schools, and preaching the Gospel, they sent out their converts to preach. The converted women had commenced a mission. They read and prayed and sang, and thus spread the Gospel.

Dr. MacEwan, in seconding the resolution, said that this was a Mission sent to us from America, and it should command our support all the more for that. The two nations should be united in good works and philanthropy. He then spoke of the anti-slavery agitation, how the Saxon people had worked together for its destruction, and said that these two great nations should build over the ruins of slavery a temple of Christian zeal, endeavouring to atone for Africa's cruel wrongs in the past. This Mission tended to keep in existence a strong anti-slavery sentiment. Some think slavery is dead, but it is not. It is causing thousands to be dragged to the slave market annually. He then described some of the horrors of the traffic in Eastern Africa, after which the resolution was formally approved.

Rev. H. Ward Beecher said that it seemed to him that we were entering a new phase of God's work. In the beginning of missions nations stood still, and Christian churches sent missionaries to them ; now God is sending the heathen to us. He believed that the question of the day was, What would the strong do with the weak, and what would the enlightened do with the ignorant ? On the western shores of America the Mongolians were swarming, and they beat them, stoned them, killed them, and refused them a single leaf of the tree of life for fear that more might come, and then we wonder that they will not receive the Gospel ! The same thing was true in our colonies, where they were going to bar them out. The selfishness of men was saying, we will send the Gospel if you will only keep the people at home. Such a Gospel had better be kept at home itself. The Gospel looks upon all men with one look. Referring to slavery, he described the disabilities he had seen the slaves suffering in America, but he had lived to see them all swept away and to see the character of the coloured man vindicated. The Spirit of God gave wisdom to Lincoln to declare emancipation and for them it was the dawn of manhood. The mind of the African was peculiarly favourable to that side of religion in which the Anglo-Saxon requires aid, the belief in the invisible. They were masters of politeness. There is something more in the African character. There has never been such an exhibition of submission to the Divine will as was shown by the slaves at the time of the war. They were making progress in knowledge. There are rising among them men second to none as preachers. From one association are sent out one thousand dedicated men and women to preach and to teach in the South. Many a revival sprang up from cabin slaves. Tried by bondage, by war, by civilisation, tried in all the professions, they had proved themselves fit for the purposes of God. If such are the results of African genius, what will she be, by and by, when Christianised and civilised she shall bring her consecrated genius, sanctified, to bear upon the welfare of the whole human race.

BLACKGANG MISSION, I.W.

This unique Christian work has been continued for the last thirteen years. Though the removal of the late Mr. C. Reade, more than two years ago, is deeply felt, Mrs. Reade, Miss Edith Reade, and Miss Hamilton still devote themselves to this Mission. Their chief work is to watch for souls, and the Lord is giving them signs of his special approval. They are also helped in the classses for the young, and in other ways, by Miss Margaret Reade.

The annual harvest thanksgiving was held on Thursday, October 7, when over four hundred persons were present, although it is said that there are not two hundred persons in Blackgang. The people came from all the villages around. The meeting was addressed by Mrs. Reade, Rev. H. J. Crouch (of Horsham), Rev. R. A. Davis (of Ventnor), Rev. J. Harrison (of Niton), Mr. J. Newman (of Sandown), Mr. F. H. Bowden (of London), and two friends from the body of the hall. Mr. G. Kelsey (of London) presided.

The Sunday morning, afternoon, evening, and week-night services, and the Sunday-school and Band of Hope, continue to prosper. A small Y.M.C.A. has just been commenced.

The people who attend the services are poor. Mrs. Reade has the responsibility of the expenses, and has been encouraged by a few kind contributions from those who have seen or heard of the good work that is being done here ; still more help is needed, and the friends also desire to purchase the hall in which the services are held.

The writer, who is just now on a visit to Blackgang, would ask the reader to unite with him in prayer to the Lord of the harvest to send labourers into other villages that may be as dark as Blackgang was, that they may be lights therein, and open one of the rooms of their dwelling for Gospel services. This is what the friends did at the commencement of this good work here in Blackgang.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMEMT.—Mr. J. H. L. Christien has, in conjunction with Christian friends, been holding very important and fully attended meetings in various parts of London, especially of young women, in Ratcliff-highway, Mile-end, Commercial-road, Drury-lane, &c. A number of young women, at their own earnest request, have been placed in institutions. A successful effort has also been made to reach the foreign women of London.

The Book World.

SHORT BIOGRAPHIES FOR THE PEOPLE. Vol. iii. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This is the sort of literature that will interest the people. They will read it, and be the better for it, as, indeed, all must be for knowing something of the lives of the good and great.

HIDDEN HOMES; or, The Children's Discoveries. By M. A. PAULL RIPLEY. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. In every way an excellent book, for it is not a story merely, of the aimless kind now so common. It tells of two classes of young life, brings them together, evolves good from the union, and gives the children a common bond of interest, full of instruction, pleasure and profit to the young reader.

ENID'S SILVER BOND. By AGNES GIBERNE. 5s. Nisbet & Co. If the plot and some of the incidents in this story savour of gloom, they are so natural and original, and are so well worked out, that the deepest interest is felt until the last page is reached. Enid herself is one of Miss Giberne's best bits of girlhood, and that is saying a great deal. This is a story to give to any girl who needs a helping hand in coming to the light.

"GRAN." By E. A. B. D. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. Surely this book is not for children to read! With the very best intentions in the world, the writer has produced a story, not so unpleasant, in itself, as in the manner of telling it. The experiences and language of the characters are not such as will elevate the young reader's mind. Temperance stories have need to be written with delicacy and care, or they may subvert the ends which the writers have in view.

THE FAMILY COUNCIL: Conversations on the Home. By EDWARD GARRETT. 3s. 6d. Nisbet. Sensible, clear, wise with "the wisdom that cometh from above," these papers will be a help to many in the training of their boys and girls. The Christian training of children, the starting into life of the boys, the education of the girls—these and kindred topics engage the pen of this ready and clever writer; we doubt not that the little volume will be welcome in many a home.

"STRAIGHT PATHS FOR YOUR FEET." By Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, B.A. 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Mr. Rainsford is a master of Biblical exposition, and we see him at his best in this little volume. He takes up some of the most important Scriptural words, and throws light on their meaning. He shows how they are misinterpreted in common usage, and how their simplicity veils depths of truth that we can never fathom. His style is pleasant to read, and his thinking is devout and suggestive.

THE HANDY NATURAL HISTORY. By Rev. J. G. WOOD. 8s. Religious Tract Society. This is just the book that is needed in the public, private, and family schoolrooms. Mr. Wood, who is a great lover of animals, and a patient student of their habits, writes most fully, interestingly, and even learnedly, yet simply, and he seems to embrace in his study almost every living creature. Natural history is one of the most delightful fields in which to roam, and when it is done in Mr. Wood's company, the pursuit has the additional charm of being invested with clear, fearless, Christian truth.

PHASES OF CHRISTIAN TRUTH. By Rev. A. J. PARRY. Third edition. Charles Higham. A volume of sermons seldom reaches a third edition in these novel-reading days. The fact that the volume before us has attained such distinction speaks loudly in praise of the sermons it contains. Mr. Parry brings to his pulpit work wide reading, a forcible way of putting truth, and intense belief in his mission as a preacher of the everlasting Gospel. So he gives no uncertain sound, but speaks weighty words well worth listening to. We are glad that the press will, in his case, fulfil its true function by giving wider circulation to the messages proclaimed from the pulpit.

THE HOMES, HAUNTS, AND BATTLEFIELDS OF THE COVENANTERS. By A. B. TODD. Jas. Gemmell, Edinburgh. Without any attempt at "canonising" those heroic souls who sealed their faithful testimony with their life-blood, it is right that the Protestants of to-day should hold them in honoured and grateful remembrance. Mr. Todd's graphic and sympathetic record of Covenanting scenes and martyrs will help the present generation to understand how much it owes to these witnesses for the truth in a darker and more perilous day. Let our Scottish youth, particularly, read these thrilling chapters and catch something of the inspiration that nerved their Covenanting forefathers to brave the bullet and the sword rather than deny the Lord who bought them.

A ROUND OF SUNDAY STORIES. By L. G. SEGUIN. Illustrated. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. A beautiful gift-book for the young. The stories are on many and varied topics, but all are well told and fitted to interest youthful minds. The engravings do not appear to us, as a whole, to be up to modern water mark.

THE GOSPEL OF UNION WITH CHRIST. By JAMES CHALMERS, M.A. 1s. 6d. T. Woolmer. A precious book, on a precious subject. "Union with Christ," as stated in the preface, "is the essence of all religion." The man who elects to write on such a subject must not be a worshipper in the outer courts of the Temple. Like Abraham, he must be a "friend of God," one with whom God has spoken face to face, and who often enters into the holiest of all. The author has produced a spiritual book. Confining himself chiefly to the four Gospels, he sets forth the rise, life, and relations of union with Christ. The "mind of Christ" on this blessed union is reverently studied and movingly described. Apt quotations from choice writers are interwoven with his own thoughts. The controversial, critical, or superficial Christian will see little in the book, but no hungry disciple of Jesus will lay it down without thankfulness, hope, and wonder at the unsearchable riches of redeeming love.

AUSTRALIAN PICTURES: Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By HOWARD WILLOUGHBY, of The Melbourne Argus. 8s. Religious Tract Society. This most elegant volume is a worthy and timely addition to the Society's well-known "Pen and Pencil" series of national handbooks. Coming on the flood tide of a movement for the federation of the colonies and the mother country, we cannot doubt it will aid that laudable project. Many of us have very inadequate conceptions of the vast extent and illimitable resources of this Greater Britain beyond the sea; with Mr. Willoughby's book at command we shall have no excuse for such ignorance. The field is so great that the author only undertakes to give "peeps" at the different aspects of Australian affairs; but within his limits he seems to have done excellently, while the many fine engravings reveal something of the profusion of natural attractions of the Continent, and the architectural beauties of the larger cities. No one who would get a bird's-eye view of the land, its peoples, and products, should fail to procure a copy of this magnificent work.

LANGUAGE AS ILLUSTRATED BY BIBLE TRANSLATION. By R. NEEDHAM CUST, LL.D., with a Map of the World and a Table of Languages. Trubner & Co. This little pamphlet has divers properties. If only studied it will inform the scholar, gladden the missionary, cheer the churches, give the candid doubter of inspiration hard nuts to crack, and enlarge the mind of denominational Christians. Its object is to show how largely the study of language, and less directly the sciences, geography, and ethnology, have been advanced by Bible translation. To learn that the thirty translations of Scripture available in 1800 have become in 1886 no less than 267, and that the annual profit of selling Bibles is £100,000 to the Bible Society alone, are facts worth considering. The difficulties of translating certain words are graphically described. The suggestions that instead of many small Bible clubs a few great societies should divide the world, and that Protestant countries should be self-supplying, are well worth consideration. An excellent Map and Table of Languages are appended.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE.—In these days of reviving missionary zeal, any works that throw the light of ascertained fact on the great fields of the world are to be welcomed. Two interesting books of this description are before us. One is PERSIA: the Land of the Imams. By Rev. JAMES BASSETT (Blackie & Son.) Mr. Bassett writes of a little known and largely neglected land; his book ought at once to increase our knowledge and our solicitude for the evangelisation of the races that inhabit this terra incognita. The book is much more a record of personal travel, and a description of Persian social life, than a story of missions, but the closing chapter gives interesting details about missionary effort, its difficulties, and encouragements. THE GOSPEL IN SOUTH INDIA, by Rev. SAMUEL MATEER (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), is an unpretentious but touching narration of "the religious life, experience, and character of the Hindoo Christian." These pages are full of instances of Gospel triumphs; it will afford a highly encouraging study to all who help in mission work, especially those who purpose to spend their lives in the foreign field.

Many interesting particulars found in no previous life of John Wesley are promised in a biography by Rev. John Telford, to be issued immediately by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Such has been the popularity of the "Lives of Robert and Mary Moffat," that a fifth edition is now in the market.

A memoir of the late Rev. James Robertson, of Newington, Edinburgh, the famous preacher to children, is about to be published.

"TRAMPS" is the title of a "dialogue" written and published (1d.) by Mr. J. J. Lane, Brighouse, Yorkshire. The writer, who has been engaged for some years in visiting lodging-houses, has thrown the experience thus gained into this form with the object of arousing interest in this department of Christian effort.

THE ADVERTISER'S A B C of Official Scales and Charges. 10s. 6d. 402, Strand. A bulky volume in which, as its title indicates, we have, arranged in alphabetical order, the names, rates for advertisements, and other information respecting the multifarious periodicals now issuing from the press. A useful feature of the book is the numerous indices. The publications are classified according to the frequency of publication, whether daily, weekly, fortnightly, or otherwise, also with regard to place of publication, while the class periodicals are grouped according to the subjects of which they treat. Of course, in such a publication, errors are almost unavoidable; we have noticed a few, but these will not debar it from being a useful reference book for the counting-house.

VILLAGE WORK in CAMBRIDGESHIRE

To find over one-third of the population of a large village gathered into the pleasant, well-arranged Mission Hall on Sunday nights to hear the simple preaching of the Gospel—while goodly numbers also assemble at morning and afternoon services in the same place—is a cheering sight. To know that many of these had been brought to God under the Gospel preached there is still greater cause for praise to the Lord.

Such is the fact in connection with the Cambridgeshire branch of the (London) Evangelistic Mission at Streatham, near Ely, from which the Gospel is also carried to many villages around, frequently in fellowship with those already labouring as pastors amongst these scattered cottagers. On Tuesday week, the harvest thanksgiving brought large numbers together for afternoon and evening meetings, with tea between. Notwithstanding the most inclement weather, the hall was filled for the two latter—waggon loads of friends coming from villages seven or eight miles away—and addresses were given by Messrs. W. Holmes, Russell Hurditch, Morton, Sennett, from London, and local friends.

The work is in a vigorous state, through God's blessing, and is just such as is needed in many other villages of the land where much spiritual death exists.

NEW BRITAIN.—Rev. George Brown founded a Wesleyan Mission here five years ago. Then the natives killed one of his teachers and were continually engaged in tribal wars. At his departure recently, 500 natives gathered to show their esteem for him and to offer their parting gifts. Some thirty converts have been won, and the tribal feuds have ceased.

"WILLIAM TYNDALE."*

England owes a debt to William Tyndale she can never pay. He helped to lay the foundation of her social and moral greatness by giving her people the Bible in their own tongue. The value of his services are realised in some measure at last, and due honour is accorded him. London has erected a statue to him on one of its most conspicuous sites, and historians place him in his true position. His best memorial, however, is the Biography published by Mr. Demaus fifteen years ago, a new and handsome edition of which lies before us. It is too late in the day to criticise this book; the estimation in which it is held by students of the period with which it deals puts it beyond the touch of criticism. But it is not too late to call attention to its merits. It should be read by any who seek to know all that can be discovered about "the man who lived and toiled as an exile, and who died as a martyr that his countrymen might have the Bible in their mother-tongue." Mr. Demaus ransacked all the sources of information at his disposal, and his labours have been admirably supplemented by his present editor. The result is a graphic picture of the man and his times. It is true that considerable obscurity envelops Tyndale's personal history, but his force of character and consecration of his powers to the highest ends stand out distinctly. A man's real life consists, not in a detailed record of how he filled its years, but in the work he did and the influence he left behind him. Tyndale had one aim, towards which he struggled through many difficulties, and that was, as he himself put it in conversation with a learned scholar, "If God spare my life, ere many years I will cause a boy that driveth the plough to know more of the Scriptures than thou doest." His noble endeavour was, by God's blessing, crowned with success.

It is impossible for us to give in the space at our disposal, any adequate estimate of the character and virtues of Tyndale. They may be all summed up, we think, in the statement, that he was a Christian hero. He put his trust in God, and dared to do the right. No obstacles in the path of duty, however formidable or dangerous, frightened him; he walked fearlessly on. He was the pioneer of the Reformation in England. His was the first voice which rang out like a clarion in denunciation of the unscriptural doctrines and practices of Rome. His words roused sleeping consciences, and the Bible he translated furnished the key to unlock the fetters which bound them. Let our readers study the biography of this man to find out their obligations to him.

It is now 350 years since Tyndale sealed his life's work with a martyr's death. We do right in keeping the anniversaries of such events. We have had a Luther day, and a Wycliffe day: Why not have a Tyndale day? It would perpetuate a hero's memory, and keep facts worth remembering before the nation. Let our ministers and Sabbath-school teachers think about this suggestion.

YOUNG WOMEN AT LEAMINGTON.—There is a blessed work being carried on by Miss Bagster and Miss Craggs amongst the business young women in this town. A crowded and delightful social meeting was held at Stanhope House last week, with the Gospel of salvation afterward. I think, says a correspondent, I never saw a prettier sight than those large rooms packed with happy-looking young women, seated around tables filled with choice food and flowers, in the well-lit rooms, each person wearing the fragrant nosegay, to which printed texts were attached. All looked so bright and cheerful, while afterwards in the same rooms, cleared for the meeting, they sang and heard of "Jesus and his love" till the parting time, ten o'clock. How one longed to see many more of the Lord's stewards bringing about similar gatherings, with all that follows them, in many more towns in our favoured land.

PROBLEMS OF A GREAT CITY.*

Of the many grave questions which at the present day are receiving the prayerful consideration of Christian thinkers and workers, there are few of greater importance or moment than those which are based upon the condition of the under strata of life in our large towns. Day by day the population of these centres is increased by the large numbers who flock from the country districts in search of work; thus the evils of overcrowding and of competition are intensified to a degree which it is impossible to contemplate without deep concern. Such is the alarming condition of things in all our great cities, and in almost every one of our important towns, that no thoughtful man can think of the future of the nation without a solemn feeling of anxiety. There is, however, a helpful element in every determination to face the stern truth and to grasp the full import of those shameful things which some of our economists assert to be necessary concomitants of the high state of civilisation to which we have now attained. To all who really wish to be made aware of the surroundings of our luxurious nineteenth century existence, we commend the perusal of Mr. Arnold White's able contribution to the painful literature of the life of the poor.

To the unbending pessimist such a volume can be productive only of darker gloom, so improbable does it seem that any of the deeper evils and wrongs of which the author treats can be removed or remedied by mere legislation. There are thousands of noble-hearted labourers, however, to whom the book will give a welcome stimulus, and whose determination to do something to lessen the sorrow and suffering around them will be intensified by the array of terrible facts and figures which Mr. White sets before them. Now that there would appear to be a reaction from the strained public feeling of last year, and the labours of many impulsive and intermittent philanthropists—as of the Royal Commission upon the Housing of the Poor—have ended in mere reports and blue-books, we are glad that the subject of our armies of starving poor is again forced upon the public mind. There can be no safety in ignoring the creeping dissolution that is gaining ground within our national life. If the virulence of the disorder can only be overcome as we "break off our sins by righteousness, and our iniquities by showing mercy to the poor," the sooner those "that are at ease in Zion" are aroused from their pampered love of ease, the better will it be for themselves and for us all.

Except in the matters of overcrowding, emigration, and colonisation, Mr. White has few valuable remedies to suggest, and he does not appear to have mastered the rudiments of the drink question. Indeed, he contradicts himself by suggesting in one place the exploded idea of giving compensation for the extinction of the drink-makers' and drink-dealers' interests; and, in another, laying down the self-evident axiom that no persons are vested with inherent rights to profit arising from the misery and degradation of others. Nevertheless, the volume is a highly valuable one, and it will not have been written in vain.

ILLNESS OF MR. SPURGEON.—We regret to know that the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle is suffering from an attack of rheumatic gout. He preached last Lord's Day morning, but could scarcely get through the service. He looked very ill, and leaned upon a staff while preaching. He will shortly go to the Continent for a few weeks' change and rest.

UNIVERSAL PRAYER FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—Last Sunday, being the day fixed by the Sunday-school Union for Prayer for Sunday-schools, special sermons were preached in many places of worship, and special services for the young held in the afternoon. Collections were also made on behalf of the Continental Sunday-school Fund for establishing Sunday-schools on the Continent.

NELSON-STREET RAGGED SCHOOL, CAMBERWELL.—On Saturday afternoon the memorial-stone of the new buildings of the Nelson-street Ragged-school Mission, Toulon-street, Camberwell, was laid by Mr. Edward Rawlings. The company afterwards assembled in a neighbouring schoolroom, where the chairman spoke of the good work done by the Mission. Mr. H. R. Williams (Ragged-school Union), Rev. Prebendary Billing, and Rev. W. J. Mills spoke.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. D. M. Drysdale commenced the tenth series of evangelistic services at Hengler's Circus on the first Sunday of the month. There was a large congregation. The mission has also taken the Rotunda Theatre, Scotland-road, where Mr. T. M. Rothwell will conduct services on Sunday evenings.

CHURCH ARMY.—The Bishop of London will open the new Training Home on Oct. 28, and preside at a public meeting in the Trinity Rooms, Crawford-street, Marylebone, at four p.m. This Mission College (128 and 130, Edgeware-road) is intended for the training of working men only, to be evangelists among their own class. Rev. F. S. Webster has undertaken the training of the men.

MUNDESLEY AND KNAPTON.—Mr. Farrington, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded a fourteen days' mission in these villages on the 11th instant. The Lord has been with us, giving his own children a time of great refreshing, making many young men anxious for salvation, and saving some precious souls. The evangelist set forth the precious truths of the Gospel with great clearness and force, and it was evident that the Holy Spirit accompanied his words with power.

Harriet C. Sayer.

MR. AND MRS. CHRISTOPHER KING, of London, have just completed a fortnight's meetings in the Evangelistic Institute, Rutherglen. From the first the attendances were large, and the interest deepened night after night. Mr. King preaches an exceedingly practical Christianity—Christ in the home life—and his appeals, illustrated from his own experience of stage and prison life, made an impression. While much of his teaching was on this line, at the same time Christ was upheld as the sinner's only hope. Not a few professed to get blessing. Mrs. King also spoke and sang with much acceptance.

MR. VARLEY AT THE CAPE.—In recent letters to his wife Mr. Varley tells of much blessing experienced during the outward voyage in company with Mr. Hannington. There were some decided conversions, and believers were stimulated by Christian intercourse and Bible study. Writing after arrival at the Cape, Mr. Varley speaks of crowded meetings for the Bible-reading and Gospel addresses, with many anxious ones. Mrs. Varley asks prayer for her husband. He has many invitations for the Eastern provinces, and the greatest sympathy is shown by the brethren in offering their churches, and promising their help.

BRIGHTON OPEN-AIR AND CHRISTIAN MISSION.—The last beach service of this season was held on Sunday, October 3, near the Lifeboat House, where for the many years past this Mission has held its Sunday evening services. Mr. T. Thwaites in his address said that the work had now been in existence twenty-five years, and that this year, since May, a hundred Gospel addresses had been given on that spot. At least 20,000 people had heard the Word of God and many had passed from "death unto life." He gave some pleasing instances which had come to his knowledge. Rev. J. Allen, Mr. Davidge, and Mr. Kennard, of the Open-air Mission, also spoke, as well as other local friends.

At the opening meetings of the services for the people, at the Bow and Bromley Institute, Bow-road, about forty stood up as anxious inquirers, and were conversed with.——A seven days' Gospel Mission was begun at Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, on Sunday week.——The Joyful News evangelists held their first annual gathering on the 27th ultimo. About twenty-five of the brethren, who, under Rev. T. Champness, have made the evangelisation of the villages their work, were present.——An eight days' mission, commencing on October 3, has been conducted in almost all the parishes of Oxford.——Dr. William H. Von Swartwout, President of the New Caledonia University, gave an address on "Man as the Temple of God," at St. James' Hall, last Sunday evening, after the evangelistic service which was conducted by Mr. H. W. Maynard. The Doctor is going to give a series of free lectures in this country.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.—Miss Poulton, who spoke on behalf of this Mission at the recent Missionary Conference at Mildmay, wishes us to state that in speaking of it as the largest agency in the country, she meant the largest one at work among women. The American Mission, she says, has a much more extended work among men. The British Syrian Schools, adds Miss Paulton, are at present in urgent need of help. She may be addressed 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon, Surrey.

Letters to the Editor.

"PROPHESYING."

Dear Sir,—Is it right to speak of either men or women "prophesying" in the present day? Does not a careful examination of 1 Cor xiv. make it clear that what is there called "prophesying" was speaking under direct inspiration? See 1 Cor. xiv. 30, where one prophet is to "keep silence" if "a revelation be made to another" (R.V.). Are such "revelations" made now?

In Mr. Judd's address at the late Mildmay Prophetic Conference, it is assumed that the preaching of the present day is the same thing as prophesying. Surely there cannot be a more dangerous assumption. The Spirit of God, in the early days of the Church of Corinth, before the New Testament Scriptures were written, was supplying the deficiency by a temporary ministry of inspiration. I say temporary, because it is written in 1 Cor. xiii. 8: "Whether there be prophecies they shall be done away" (R.V.). To assume that the preaching of the present day is "prophesying" at once lifts every preacher into the position of an inspired person, and opens the door to the most dangerous fanaticism, and, worse still, puts the utterances of such fanaticism on a level with the inspired Word of God, to which alone, in the present time, can the word "prophetic" be rightly applied, as it is in two passages as read in the Greek (Rom. xvi. 26, "prophetic Scriptures," and 2 Peter i. 19, "prophetic Word"). The context of the latter passage leaves no doubt as to what "prophecy" and "prophesying" means—"holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

I own that if I believed that such a thing as "prophesying" existed in the present day I would go many miles to hear it, whether women or men were the channels through whom the gift might be bestowed; but, in the absence of any such gift, I prize more and more "the prophetic word," whereunto I desire "to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise." Yours very truly,

Henry E. Brooke.

P.S.—It is surely unnecessary to point out that 1 Cor. xiv. 3 is not a definition of "prophesying." Were I to say, "He that speaks French speaks a foreign language," I could not reverse the proposition, and argue that therefore he that speaks a foreign language speaks French; yet this is what is done when this text is supposed to mean that he that speaketh to edification and exhortation and comfort, prophesieth.

SCRIPTURAL INSTRUCTION IN DAY-SCHOOLS.

Sir,—I notice in your "Notes and Comments" of October 7 a paragraph on the growing desire manifested in South Australia to remove the prohibition of Bible reading and study in their State-aided schools. This paragraph concludes by expressing a wish for a similar declaration of opinion here in England with regard to the need of improvement in our own educational arrangements. This would lead a person unacquainted with the facts to suppose that in a large proportion, at least, of the English State-aided schools, no Scriptural or religious instruction is given. If so, it is, as you suggest, a most serious matter. But in this, as in so many cases, it is well to examine the facts, and then to consider in what direction our danger lies.

First, then, as to School Board-schools. I have been informed by a clergyman who had investigated the subject that in all these schools, with the exception of about half a dozen places, the Bible is read and taught as part of the regular school curriculum. This shows the almost unanimous desire for Scriptural instruction existing in England, and the ease with which, under the present laws, this desire can be complied with; and that it is a mistake to style Board-schools "godless," as is often done, even by those who ought to know better. In the schools conducted on the principles of the British and Foreign School Society, the Bible is taught as an essential part of the work of the school. In Wesleyan day-schools also the Bible is well taught. In Church of England schools the Bible has a place in the instruction given, though in many cases, it is to be feared, not the higher place which it ought to hold in comparison with catechisms and the teachings of men. There only remain Roman Catholic schools; in these, of course, the Bible is a forbidden book, but "religious instruction" is given in accordance with Roman Catholic doctrines. It therefore appears that the proportion of the State-aided schools, in which no religious instruction is given, is very small indeed, and that there is nothing in the laws affecting these schools to prevent Scriptural instruction being given in them all.

The more important question in this country seems to be in regard to the character of the religious instruction given. How far is it Scriptural in its tendency? Is not State support given to schools where false doctrines is taught, in place of, or in addition to, Bible truth?

I therefore agree with you in your desire for "a similarly powerful expression of opinion" "in this enlightened England of ours" "with regard to the need for an improvement in our own educational arrangements," not because the Bible is excluded from our State-aided schools, but because, in so many of them, its truths are overlaid and obscured by denominational teaching.

I remain, yours faithfnlly, L.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

Sir,—May I call the attention of your readers to the exceptional success which has attended the work of the National Vigilance Association, and to remind them that its consolidation and development depend, under God, upon their readiness to cooperate with those who have already succeeded in planting the banner of social purity on the citadel of vice.

Although we have only been established twelve months a great change has already come over the national sentiment, with respect to the particular form of vice with which we are contending; the emphatic way in which the speakers at all our meetings have insisted that an immoral man must be regarded by society as a fallen man, and be denied those social positions of honour and trust which are in the gift of his fellows is at the present time bearing a rich harvest of holy fruit.

We have succeeded in establishing in London and the provinces between seventy and eighty branch committees, each of these having an average membership of seventy, with a small executive carrying on an aggressive warfare against wickedness in high and low places. In many of the towns where committees are at work there is already a marked difference in the public tone; the local press and officials frequently rendering great assistance to the cause. More than this, the existence of such a committee in a town is a warning and a terror to evil-doers, and at the same time a beacon light to those poor girls (in many instances in their fall more sinned against than sinning) who have become moral wrecks and find themselves stranded on the shore of time.

Our experience in the work has been both encouraging and interesting. On the same platform we have been able to gather men and women of all shades of Christian thought and feeling, who, irrespective of creeds and politics, have stood shoulder to shoulder, determined, in the strength of the Lord, to carry on this warfare against wickedness in its various forms. One of the most pleasing features is the renewed energy with which noble-minded and holy women with Christ-like zeal are renewing their efforts to prevent girls slipping into vice, and pleading with passionate earnestness with those who have already sinned to sin no more. The record of the work done by many of these branch committees is encouraging in the extreme, and a good omen for the future of our cause.

But although much has been done, still much, very much, remains to do, ere this awful vice is altogether put away. Upon every man and woman there rests a great responsibility in this work. It is not enough to do as many, alas, are doing at the present time, sitting with feelings shocked at the bare recital of these evils, and contenting themselves with simply crying, "How long, O Lord, how long?" You may hasten the dawn of the coming day, but you must be up and doing. Do not waste your time in criticising the methods employed by your comrades who are already engaged in the work, but rather come over and help us. You ask how you can help. In many ways. You can send a contribution and do what you can to induce your friends to asssist in this direction if they are able. It would also be specially helpful to us if those who reside in towns where we have not yet been able to form a branch association, would get together a few friends and call a drawing-room or public meeting, to which we should be very glad to send a deputation from London to explain what has been done in other parts of the United Kingdom, and sketch a plan of work for the locality interested.

I shall be happy to correspond with, or send copies of our publications to, any friends ready and willing to help us in the work to which we are specially devoting ourselves.

W. A. Coote, Secretary.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Christian Commonwealth urges temperance leaders, instead of waiting opportunities for temperance legislation to create them.

At a Temperance Conference, held at Merthyr, it has been resolved to demand for Wales legislation on the lines of the Liquor Traffic Veto Bill for Scotland.

At Bismarck-grove, Kansas, lately, 3600 bottles of beer, offered for sale in violation of the Prohibition law, were seized by the authorities, and emptied into the river.

In view of the deadly work being done in Dublin by drink, a local paper asks: "Is the tavern still too strong, socially, politically, and financially, for the Church?"

Efforts are being made in Manchester districts for the abolition of wakes or annual fairs, which are too often occasions of intemperance and its attendant vices.

W. J. Forstabins, of Abo, Finland, states that the Blue Ribbon movement is extending there. The Secular Press favour the movement, but the clergy seem to fight shy of it.

The Voice says, "Hundreds of American churches have temperance committees that are dormant," and urges them to get public sentiment aroused. The same advice is not unneeded in this country.

The "Red Cross Guild" has been founded at the Grassmarket Mission, Edinburgh, and is intended to reach the lowest classes. Already a large number have taken the pledge, and many homes have been brightened.

The Temperance Lesson Book is used in a school at Wellington, New Zealand. At the examinations this year, the answers given showed that the scholars were tolerably well acquainted with the effects of alcohol on the human frame.

Speaking at a meeting, at Leeds, a few days since, Rev. J. Walton, Ex-President of the South African (Wesleyan) Conference, said the greatest of all the missionaries' difficulties was the white man's brandy. The African who has once got it will have it at any cost.

In The Watchword, Rev. W. G. Lane describes the Nova Scotia licence law of 1886 as "virtually prohibition in some points, and tremendously restrictive in others." Sunday closing is provided for. Many of the traders think it more severe than the Scott Act, Canada.

The annual meetings of the United Kingdom Alliance were held, October 12, at Manchester, and were largely attended. Sir Wilfrid Lawson presided. Strong resolutions were passed, not the least important being one in favour of the formation of a Prohibition party in every constituency.

Lecturing at the Royal Aquarium, recently, Mr. R. E. Dennett, a Congo merchant, tried to excuse the trade in rum with the natives on the ground that the natives would have it, and the traders must sell what would pay. Captain de Bisson very properly contended, in reply, that profit was no justification for a trade which wrought such ruin amongst the natives.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 24.—2 CHRON. VII.

1, 2.—These verses tell of a second manifestation of the Divine glory, the first having come a little before (13, 14). On that former occasion, "the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord," when "they were as one, praising and thanking the Lord." Now, the glory appeared "when Solomon had made an end of praying." The first manifestation told that God graciously accepted the house dedicated to Him, and that He had taken possession of the same; the second sealed his approval of the prayer that followed the dedication. The prayer, so sealed, was henceforth equivalent to a covenant that God would never fail to receive any worshipper who came to Him in accordance with its petitions.

There is a twofold parallel to this in the New Testament:—(1) In the life of Christ. His baptism, coming as it did when He was thirty years old, and so had just reached full maturity, seems to answer to the formal dedication of the Temple at its completion. If so, then the visible baptism of the Spirit, and the audible approval of the Father which followed his baptism (Matt. iii. 16, 17), answers to 2 Chron. v. 13, 14. The story of the Transfiguration (Luke ix. 29) completes the parallel: "As He prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering." This answers to our text. (2) The history of the Church. Corresponding with verses 13, 14 is Acts ii.—the story of Pentecost; while the second manifestation of the Spirit, which followed the Apostles' prayer (Acts iv. 24—31) corresponds exactly with the text before us.

10.—Glad and merry in heart for the goodness.—God's goodness is the believer's gladness. There is no mirth like that which comes from knowing and loving God. "The fear of the Lord is a fountain of life."

12—16.—Now mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attent, &c.—To the Jew was appointed a place—the Temple—in which he might always meet his God in peace and covenant blessing. To us is given a Person—Jesus Christ—in whom believing we may come to God as freely as the Jew when he went up to the Temple to pray. Let us then, taking our stand in Christ, ponder and appropriate the delightful assurances of verses 15 and 16.

It is very remarkable that God should have given this distinct and verbal assurance in addition to the visible manifestations that had gone before. See how he considers the feeble faith of his people and reiterates his promises, giving as it were a double seal to his covenant! Compare Heb. vi. 17, &c.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 25.—2 CHRON. VIII.

1.—Twenty years.—"The twenty years date from the commencement of the temple in the fourth year of Solomon's reign, seven years having been devoted to the construction of the Temple, and thirteen to the building of the royal palace (1 Kings vi. 37, 38, vii. 1, ix. 10)."—Sp. Com.

2.—The cities, &c.—Ezra assumes that his readers are familiar with the story of the offer and rejection of these cities told in 1 Kings ix. 11—13.

4.—Tadmor.—This afterwards became famous as the splendid city of Palmyra, whose magnificent ruins still remain. It was built on an oasis in the Syrian desert, lying between Damascus and the Euphrates, and so commanded the great trade road that connected the East and West. It is supposed that Solomon built Tadmor in order to control this great trade, that he became a great merchant monopolist, and that the store cities mentioned here were connected with these vast business operations—fortified warehouses, in fact.

11.—My wife shall not dwell, &c.—Solomon's marriage with Pharaoh's daughter is not condemned by Scripture. Jamieson and others think that Psalm xlv. was composed in her honour. Still, it seems to us that it was opposed to the spirit of the Old Testament. This verse shows that, whether a proselyte or not, there was sufficient, either in the manner or the surroundings of her life, to make Solomon feel that she was out of place in a house hallowed by the ark. The statement of this verse is creditable to Solomon's reverence for a hallowed house; yet, is it not a pitiable confession of the confusion and weakness that comes from a mixed marriage?

18.—Ophir.—Where was it? In Arabia, Africa, India, or Peru? for each of these have their advocates. Probably Heeren is near the truth when he says:—"Ophir, like the names of all other distant places or regions of antiquity—as Thule, Tartessus, and others—denotes no particular spot, but only a certain region or part of the world, such as the East and West Indies in modern geography. Hence Ophir was a general name for all the countries lying on the African, Arabian, or Indian Seas, so far as at that time known."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 26.—2 CHRON. IX.

1.—The queen of Sheba.—"Whence came she? Probability unites with ecclesiastical history, and with the Jewish traditions and Mohammedan accounts, in pointing her out as queen of the Sabæan kingdom of Yemen, and Mariaba or Saba as the seat of its government. This point is so well established by Bochart and others that it may be received as an ascertained fact. . . . All the precious commodities which the Queen brought to Jerusalem were such as the region thus assigned to her was in old time famous for producing. The Abyssinians, indeed, claim her as their sovereign, and trace to her their ancient kings—which may suggest, what is probable on other grounds, that the country on both shores of the southern part of the Red Sea was at this time under one government."—Kitto. Gold.—The bringing in this gold of Sheba was distinctly prophesied (Ps. lxxii.).

This story claims our solemn interest, if only because our Saviour referred to it as an example of how we should seek Him and his wisdom (Matt. xii. 42). "Wisdom is the principal thing," is the great lesson of this incident. Indolence, indolence of body and of mind, the lazy, self-indulgent spirit that regards a sustained effort as "too much trouble," is the quality which this great example rebukes. Neither pains nor expense could keep her from seeking the highest wisdom she was aware of. How much more should we, when a greater than Solomon is before us, and when the object is certain of achievement to those who seek aright, put our whole heart into the seeking of God and his truth! There is scarcely anything that spiritually impoverishes the average professing Christian so much as this laziness of body, mind, or heart in reference to the things of God. "The sluggard desireth and hath nothing," describes many a prayer-meeting, in which the prayers are little more than desires—seldom the expression of a purpose. Prov. ii. 1—6 should be read in this connection.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 27.—2 CHRON. X.

6—11.—Note that those who gave violent counsel (they, no doubt, would call it "firm and manly") were young men; while those who urged consideration and concession were old. This was but natural, we say. Yes, but why? Is it that most of us need a long experience of life before we learn the power of justice and kindliness, and also of that "soft answer" which turneth away wrath? We are here taught caution in reference to what are termed "strong measures"—displays of strength and authority, that secretly minister to our pride of power. It is easy to mistake stout words and extreme action for signs of strength. Generally, they tell of weakness, for true strength is patient, gentle, and considerate. Again, this story teaches us to respect the advice of age. The policy advocated by the young men was inexpressibly foolish; but was the king less foolish when he rejected the old and tried servants of the crown, and listened to the confident and flattering voice of inexperienced youth?

When Solomon began to reign, his sense of duty to the people was very deep. But in his later years, the creeping palsy of a growing worldliness destroyed that feeling, so that he governed very much as though his wealth and glory were the true end of government. Rehoboam, beginning where his father left off, adopted this pernicious principle still more fully. Thus, the father's failings—not his virtues, were both reproduced and aggravated in the son. Is not this the usual experience in the case of those who in mature life lose their early zeal and purity? So the king hearkened not unto the people: for the cause was of God (15). It is most important for our faith and comfort to observe how God permits evil, and works his will by means of it. This thought greatly enlarges our view of God in history. In the presence of actions which are allowed by Him, though most manifestly foolish and evil, we, instructed by this thought, learn humility, thoughtfulness, and self-examination.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28.—2 CHRON. XI.

4.—Your brethren.—Brethren still, observe; though to the men of Judah, Israel's secession must have been exasperating to the last degree. However great the differences that separate Christians from their fellows, they are brethren still. The timely recollection and hearty acknowledgment of this truism would save us much sorrow and sin.

13, 14.—And the priests, &c.—"No marvel if he that cast off God, cast off his ministers. The Levites were driven out of their cities. Their maintenance had been well settled, and yet they lost it. It was a comfort to them, the law so often reminded them that the Lord was their inheritance. In times of prevailing ungodliness and public disturbances, the ministers of God will be exposed to peculiar trials. This is the time when God puts the sincerity of professed faith and love to the proof. These loved their work better than their maintenance. . . . Poverty in the way of duty is to be chosen rather than plenty in the way of sin."—Henry and Scott.

15.—He ordained him priests, &c.—"The persons he appointed to the priesthood were low and worthless creatures (1 Kings xii. 31, xiii. 33): any were consecrated who brought a bullock and seven rams (xiii. 9)."—Jamieson. For the devils.—"A term sometimes used for idols in general (Lev. xvii. 7), but here applied distinctively to the goat deities (see R.V.), which were probably worshipped chiefly in the northern parts of his kingdom, where the heathen Canaanites still abounded."—Idem.

17, 23.—There is an interesting connection between the close of ver. 17, "For three years they walked in the way of David," and the beginning of ver. 23, "And he dealt wisely." A clear head is apt to keep company with a clean heart.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29.—2 CHRON. XII.

1.—Rehoboam forsook the law of the Lord.—1 Kings xiv. 23, 24 tells us how. And all Israel with him.—I.e., the Israelites of Judah and Benjamin. A terrible instance of the power of an evil example. "As long as his throne tottered, he kept to his duty; but when he thought that it stood firm, he thought he had no more occasion for religion. Thus the prosperity of fools destroys them. When men prosper they are ready to say to God, 'Depart from us.'"—Henry and Scott.

5, 6.—Ye have forsaken me, and therefore, &c.—"Lest they should not understand the meaning of his providence, God sent a prophet, who told them plainly the reason why Shishak prevailed. God never leaves any till they first leave Him. The king and princes humbled themselves, saying, The Lord is righteous. Then it becomes us, when we are under the rebukes of Providence, to justify God, and judge ourselves."—Idem.

7.—They have humbled themselves; therefore, &c.—"Compare the repentance of Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 27—29, and of Nineveh (Jonah ii. 5—10), which produced similar revocations of Divine decrees. Some deliverance.—"Rather, 'deliverance for a short space.' The threat of immediate destruction is withdrawn."—Sp. Com.

8.—They shall be his servants.—They would be obliged to own the sovereignty of Egypt. "That they may know my service." So, now, when his people grow vain and careless in his service, He often allows them to fall into the power of the enemy for a time, that they may know and value the liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free.

9.—So Shishak, &c.—"An account of this conquest of Judah, with the name of "King of Judah," in the cartouche of the principal captive, according to the interpreters, is carved and written in hieroglyphics on the walls of the great palace of Karnac, where it may be seen at the present day."—Jamieson.

14.—Because he prepared not his heart.—"Rather 'in that he did not set his heart in seeking the Lord.' His sin was want of earnestness and consistency." We fear that Rehoboams abound. Alas for them! the day of life will test them, every one.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30.—2 CHRON. XIII.

Abijah seems to have been the aggressor. The two armies met near Bethel, just within the borders of Israel, Abijah occupying high ground, and Jeroboam the low land at the foot. Following a most ancient custom, Abijah made a long harangue. "The staple of such harangues," says Kitto, "always consists of self-praise on the part of the orator, and dispraise and abuse of the enemy. Of this we find enough in the speech of Abijah." The first, the political, part of his speech was very unfair. He claims God's promise to David (5), but carefully overlooks its solemn condition. "If thy children keep my covenant," &c. He overlooks, too, all that was wrong on the other side. The latter part was not to be answered, through its exaltation of mere ritual rather than righteousness, and its manifest self-complacency, are offensive. Still, it showed some measure of true faith, and this God could honour. While Abijah was talking Jeroboam was acting; so that soon after he had finished his speech, he found that the enemy had crept round the hill, and surrounded him. The battle seemed to be lost ere it had well begun, when lo! defeat became triumph at the magic touch of faith. First came the prayer of faith (14), and then the shout of faith (15). Worldly-minded Jeroboam, so confident in his skill and superior numbers, is routed, while Abijah and his men, in spite of great failings, prevailed, because they relied upon the Lord God of their fathers.

Solicitor—Francis Howse, Esq., 3, Abchurch-yard, E.C. Consulting Actuary—Ralph P. Hardy, Esq.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

A WINTER'S · CAMPAIGN.

Dear Friends,

Men's hearts are filled with dismal forebodings. The winter on which we are entering must be one of dire distress. Already we hear of an unprecedented scarcity of employment in some of the home counties. Experience teaches us that many who fail to find work in country districts will, as a last resource, gravitate with their families to the Great City to swell multitudes already starving.

In alleviating this vast misery Christian men and women must lead the way. What is the task before us? Free meals, or weekly doles, may stop the clamour of the hungry for the moment, but it is not thus that the axe can be laid to the root of the evil. These methods can at best only tide us over a poignant crisis, and with a rapidly multiplying population of the very needy, shiftless class in question, the difficulty must recur winter by winter with ever-increasing gravity.

The only solution of the problem is emigration. A large proportion of the adults in this "crowded out" mass of humanity are two spiritless and resourceless to make successful emigrants. It is therefore to the young we must turn our attention, that we may by judicious selection and careful preparatory training, send out bands of boys and girls, who will by their usefulness and tractability sustain the demand for party after party in succeeding years.

On this side of the Atlantic we have our three Homes, where 250 homeless and erring lads can be sheltered and trained. Across the Atlantic, in "The Queen City" of the Dominion, we have a distributing home, which can receive a party of 100 boys till they are drafted out to the openings, with well-accredited colonists, which our Colonial Superintendent had previously selected for them.

Our latest report from Toronto says: "Not one boy of this year party left; in fact, of all sent out up to this, not a single boy in the Home is on our hands from any reason whatever. You must send us 200 next year."

We cannot possibly do this without increased accommodation and further monetary help.

(A) Accommodation. I have lately had offered to me, in a bye-street quite near our Southwark Home, a two-storied warehouse, with room for sixty more boys. If I was able to secure this building at a moderate rental, I think we could undertake to fill 200 openings in Canadian homesteads with well-trained lads next year.

(B) Monetary help. It is only by dint of the utmost economy and simplicity in our arrangements that we have been enabled to maintain the three large families already dependent upon us, under God, for every necessary of life. The expenses incidental to sending out 100 boys (nearly £1000) a year have been a serious tax upon our resources the last year or two. I cannot possibly increase the number in our Homes, or propose to send out an additional party of young emigrants next year, without enlarged and immediate pecuniary assistance.

£7 10s. will maintain a rescued boy under training in the Home all through the winter.
£5 will feed the 60 boys for four days.
£2 will pay for all a boy's clothes.
£1 will provide a bed for a homeless wanderer.
10s. will supply 60 boys with a good hot dinner.
5s. will supply 30 boys with a good hot dinner.

On waste places, under the shelter of street hoardings, in the ruins of dilapidated houses, wandering the cold, lonely streets all through the night, are hundreds of lads with "no chance" in life but the workhouse or the gaol: in the far West are millions of fertile acres only waiting for settlement and cultivation, and thousands of comfortable homesteads offering the very best practical training for future pioneer life. Who will help us to rescue these starving, tempted street lads from their misery and peril, and to place them amidst the healthy surroundings and the cheering prospects of a natural life of open-air labour in tilling a rich soil which bountifully rewards the industry of the husbandman?

Our heart's desire and prayer to God for these boys is, that they may be saved from sin, its guilt and its power. The Lord has marvellously answered in this respect, and we are determined that so far as the diligent sowing of the seed is concerned, nothing shall, by His grace, be wanting on our part. He alone can give the increase, who has promised if we go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, we shall "doubtless come again with rejoicing," bringing our sheaves with us.

I am, dear Friends,
Yours faithfully,

THE BOYS' HOME,

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

NEW EDITION. JUST READY. Seventh Thousand.

The Veil Lifted:

OR,

The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

AUTHOR OF

"Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated." Berwick Warder.

"Convent life is death to all the finer feelings of our nature, and an outrage upon the plainest teachings of the blessed Gospel which has come to us to make us free. And here is a chapter on 'Righteousness by Works,' which is, of course, the great aim of the miserable bondage of the poor prisoners. The book is elegantly written, with a feeling and a pathos becoming such a dismal subject. Ye lovely maidenhood of England, beware of the fearful convent!"—The Christian World.

NEW EDITION. JUST READY. Tenth Thousand.

Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

Author of "The Veil Lifted."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly denominination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is . . . effective and invaluable."—The Freeman.

"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore, but in what was once a Protestant Church we have converts and the Confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details." Evangelical Christendom.

"Any of our readers who may have friends or neighbours journeying Rome-ward, will do them a great kindness, and perhaps save them from much suffering, by giving them a copy of this pleasantly-written book." The Christian World.

Brought to the Test of God's Holy Word in the form of a Catechism.

By Rev. THOMAS PHILLIPS.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs, in all parts of the World.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Cloth boards, 10s. 6d.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know."—Primitive Methodist.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"We strongly advise our readers who do not already possess this truly national standard work to secure it in the attractive form in which it is now produced."—Fireside News.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

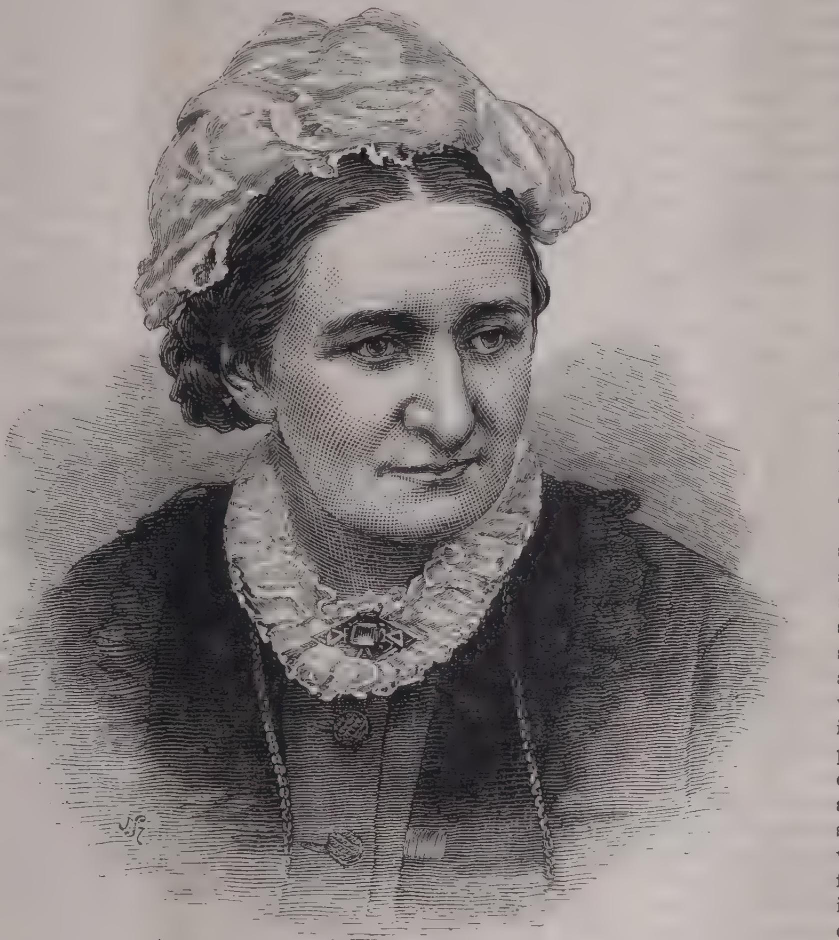
MISS SARAH ROBINSON, PORTSMOUTH.

WOMAN'S sphere is one of the problems of our day. Some narrow it to the fireside; others give it a larger scope. Though critics may differ widely in their definitions of "woman's rights," they must agree in maintaining that the noblest right of woman is to comfort and to help. There are certain kinds of philanthropic work for which a woman is peculiarly adapted; and work among soldiers seems to be one of these. A soldier's life is hard and cold. He is, as a rule, debarred from marrying; he has no children to lead his thoughts upward; and the softening influences of mother and sister are unfelt by him in his hour of need. When he lies sick, surrounded by rough men, he longs for the touch of a tender hand and the music of a gentle voice. These wants are supplied by the ministry of a lady visitor. She comes to his bedside, and talks of the home he has never forgotten. She reads to him, and prays with him. Into her sympathising ears he pours confessions he would never make to chaplain or missionary; and through her pleadings and the truths she brings before him, he is raised to a better life. The brave defenders of our country have such true friends. In the front rank of them, pre-eminent by her tact and zeal, stands SARAH ROBINSON, "The Soldier's Friend."



Miss Robinson's early years revealed the passion which dominates her life. She loved to read and talk about military matters. Napoleon was her hero; her favourite lessons were those that dealt with battles and deeds of bravery; and the amusements she liked best were to make bows and arrows, and to experiment with gunpowder. Yet she was gentle and kind in disposition. She would not hurt a fly, and delighted to study the habits of all wild creatures.

During her girlhood she hated religion; or, to speak more accurately, she hated what she believed was "religion." She had somehow got hold of strong predestinarian views. It was her conviction that if she was to be saved, she would be saved, and if she was to be lost, she would be lost, in spite of any effort of her own. This fatalism took her into a dark and dreary wilderness, where no light shone, and the winds blew cold. But one day she heard a sermon that changed the current of her feelings. The preacher told of Christ's power to save then and there. Moved by an irresistible impulse, she prayed God to receive her, and her cry was answered. A new happiness filled her heart. She crept out of the chilling gloom of doubt into the sunshine of love.

For some time after her conversion she did not think of Christian work. A wise friend turned her energies into this channel. She opened a Sunday-school, and visited the village people. Her shyness hampered her usefulness at first, but she gradually gained boldness. Her experiences trained her for the wider service which lay before her. Part of the training came through the discipline of pain. A spinal complaint, which developed with her growth, caused her much suffering. She went to London, and got the best medical advice. No doctor could cure her. She returned home in the belief that her life was to be spent on her couch, but her Master had work for her to do. With the help of an apparatus which clothes the body in steel, and takes its weight off the spine, she was able to resume her labours of faith and love. She has suffered much physical agony, but she bravely toils on, without a murmur. Her heroic endurance is beyond praise. Weakness and pain only make her more devoted, and more dependent on God.

It was in Guildford that she first thought about special work among the soldiers. Mrs. Daniell started her Aldershot Mission, and found a valuable assistant in Miss Robinson, who flung herself with eager impetuosity into the enterprise. She conducted Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, and singing-classes for the soldiers, in addition to individual visitation of the unfortunates who had gathered into little colonies on the outskirts of the camp. Her messages of love recalled many wanderers from paths of sin, and filled hopeless hearts with new courage. She was thoroughly in earnest, and that smoothed difficulties before which lukewarm natures would shrink.

She had now discovered her mission. She gradually extended the scale of her operations. She visited various military stations, held religious meetings, and lectured on topics both interesting and profitable. Her pen as well as her voice was pressed into service. She kept up an extensive correspondence with those she had been the means of leading to Christ. She was always ready to give them advice in perplexity and comfort in sorrow. Though naturally shy, her zeal made her bold. She would enter a troop-room, hand some tracts to the men lounging about or lying on their cots, and talk to them with an earnestness which carried their hearts captive. Sometimes she was the butt of a rude jest, but that did not often happen. Her friendship for them and her real interest in their welfare were so apparent that the soldiers welcomed her gladly, and listened attentively to what she had to say.

As the years rolled on her work grew, and won recognition in official circles. Her name appeared in the Parliamentary Blue-Book on military education, and officers gave her access to the regiments under their command. She liked to go to the men in the barracks. They could come to her meetings there without the trouble of dressing, and those who were ashamed or reluctant to appear at outside services, went readily to hear an address in their own recreation-room. She laid special emphasis on total abstinence. The ravages wrought in the camp by strong drink, and the difficulty of a man holding true to his profession of Christianity, unless he became an abstainer, led her to take up this position. She found that in many cases teetotalism prepared the way for conversion. With her, temperance has never been made a substitute for the Gospel; it has kept its true place of being a means to an end.

The hold she got and maintained over those who came under her influence was marvellous. They were devoted to her, and were proud to own it. The secret of her power was well described by the soldier who said: "We call Miss Robinson 'The Soldier's Friend,' because she isn't like some people who try to do us good. She does not sit at the top of the stairs and tell us what we ought to do, but she comes down and takes us by the hand, and looks us in the face, and leads us in the right way." More of this spirit is needed in Christian work.

It is with Portsmouth that her name has of late years been mainly associated. She often visited the busy seaport, where many regiments returning from abroad disembarked, and where many of Her Majesty's ships are paid off. She noticed with sorrow how soldiers and sailors were enticed into evil haunts. The town was a pandemonium: wickedness seemed to reign triumphant, and vice stalked about with brazen countenance. Her heart was moved to its depths. She resolved to do something to stem the tide of sin. She was but a weak woman, yet God had blessed and strengthened her. The past gave her hope for the future. The plan she decided on was to open a Soldiers' Institute, from which emissaries could be sent to each troopship on its arrival. These agents would invite Christians and well-disposed men to the Institute, where they would be provided with home comforts, and surrounded by healthy influences. Thus steady men, feeling that they had friends to whom they could go, would be saved from the iniquity around them; and they, in their turn, would prove a means of reaching the careless and profligate.

The scheme looked so likely to secure the end aimed at, that Miss Robinson lost no time in putting it into practice. She sought a suitable site for the proposed institute, but could find none. In perplexity she submitted her plan to the Secretary for War, and asked Government land. Her application was granted, thanks to her services on behalf of soldiers. All promised to go smoothly now, but a new difficulty suddenly sprang up. The Roman Catholics, with their usual cunning and hatred of what would help on sound evangelical teaching, objected to a grant which, they alleged, favoured the Protestant soldiers at the expense of those who belonged to their own faith. They demanded that the land should not be given, except on the condition that the Bible would be excluded from the Institute. They were backed by men of high authority, as, unfortunately, they too often are, and carried the day. They had not the shadow of a reason for the position they took up. The slightest pressure would not have been brought to bear on any Roman Catholic to attend the religious instruction which was to form a special feature of the Institute; and, as a matter of fact, the Papist soldiers were as anxious for the establishment of the Institute as any of their Protestant comrades.

Miss Robinson was not daunted by this defeat. She purchased a large, old hotel, and re-modelled it into a building adapted for the purposes she had in view. She entered into possession of it on December 31, 1873, and in September of the following year she had the joy of seeing it opened as a Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute. Then the hell-hounds around her began to bay. Their trade was endangered; their victims were to be rescued. They persuaded the newspapers to abuse her, and tried to stir up bad feelings against her; but she bravely held on her way. The motto she had chosen comforted her: "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that trust Him." The history of what she has done and is doing in Portsmouth is a striking illustration of the truth of that text. Clinging to God, she found that her weakness was perfected in his strength. Indomitable faith and perseverance have raised an institution which is both a lighthouse and a haven to storm-tossed mariners on the sea of life.

The Institute has been for years an accomplished fact. It offers many advantages. It has a handsome bar, where refreshments may be had at moderate prices. Needless to say no stimulants are sold. A soldier can come here with his friends, and have a comfortable chat over a cup of tea. There are smoking and billiard rooms, which attract the more careless, and often prove the first step to attendance at religious meetings. The large reading-room has lounges to sit on, and tables for reading or writing. It is always crowded. There is a work-room, where garments are cut out and soldiers' and sailors' wives come for needlework; from 3000 to 4000 garments are made up yearly. In it also is transacted the business of the savings bank, the lending library, and the temperance committee. In a pleasant room, with three windows looking down on the garden and over the sea, a Bible-class is held on week-evenings and on Sunday afternoons. Letters from abroad show that it is the room to which the hearts of the writers turn most fondly. At the top of the house are baths and sleeping quarters for single men and for families. Outside, in letters six feet tall, and covered by the shadow of a waving flag, the words "Soldiers' Institute" are seen, welcoming those who enter, and bidding Godspeed to those who leave Portsmouth.

The Institute, like its active superintendent, has won official recognition. The Duke of Cambridge has visited it three times, and expressed his satisfaction with the work carried on in it. The Prince of Wales and Lord Wolseley have seen it, and they also are delighted with it. It has found a neighbour in "The Sailors' Welcome," where sailors board and sleep. The two buildings are a mile apart, but they are connected by telephone. The Blue Ribbon Coffee Tavern soup kitchen, free laundry, &c., for the poor of Portsmouth, and a large Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute at Alexandria, Egypt, are also established. Miss Robinson rules all with tact and wisdom. From a room of suffering, and in great weakness, she directs an enterprise which would tax the administrative abilities of the strongest man. She has to be carried down-stairs to the Bible-classes and other meetings, yet she keeps in personal touch with all the agencies under her control. Everything, from the counselling of her assistants to the packets of sweets to be given to the children, passes under her eye. Such heroic devotion in circumstances so unfavourable shows with what consecrated enthusiasm Miss Robinson has taken up the work God gave her to do.

"THE HOUSEMAID'S PARADISE!"

WHERE is that? Well, according to an enthusiastic colonial statesman, now in London, the fixed point is Sydney. His authority? Because fifty-seven single women recently arrived there, and though not qualified domestic servants (at least the majority of them), yet they were offered wages varying from £20 to £46 a year, and all obtained situations in less than half an hour. Naturally the English papers caught at such a puff, and the memorable words were scattered far and wide.

Whether the incident is true or not we are unable to say, but the result is not far to see. Hundreds of silly servant girls in England will "run and read," and then, in a whirl of excitement hurry off to our shores in search of the situations which provide plenty of money and little work. A paradise, indeed, if such could be found. But alas, we know only too well the fate of many of the servant girls who set foot on our shores in search of such havens of pleasure and enjoyment Heartrending pages might be written telling of bright hopes and prospects blasted, through young girls who, arriving alone and unprotected, are decoyed away ere they get the chance of being engaged by respectable families, and the end of it all is only too often suicide or lunacy.

We do not say that such is the general rule: thank God it is not; but we do say that such representations as the above are far from statesmanlike inasmuch as they paint pictures to the uninitiated which are never realised.—Australian Christian World.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS.—If Christians would earnestly and affectionately seek to correct any little misunderstandings that may arise between them, doing so seasonably, and always accepting and making mutual explanations, they would not only illustrate "the spirit of Christ," but prevent a large amount of unhealthy and bad feeling in their relations to each other. Most of the difficulties that alienate Christians from each other begin with little misunderstandings.—New York Independent.

MISS ROBINSON'S WORK.

"We did not think there was any other lady who would speak to a soldier." Such, Miss Robinson tells us, in her most interesting "Story of Progress," just issued as a companion to reports of her work, was the remark of one of three soldiers to whom a lady had spoken, and who thought that it must be Miss Robinson who was speaking to them. That "the reproach that rested on Christian and respectable people of not caring for the soldier and the sailor has long since been wiped away" is largely due to Miss Robinson's work. Like most great works, it began in a very simple way. "It was Miss Robinson's custom in her frequent journeys to carry in her bag fruit and attractive little books, for any soldier she might meet in railway-carriages and stations." And these little deeds of kindness were the seeds which presently yielded an abundant harvest in the minds and hearts of numbers of soldiers and sailors; while it is not too much to say that the Soldiers' Institute at Portsmouth, the Sailors' Welcome at Portsea, and the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute at Alexandria, all of which have sprung therefrom, have proved veritable "Edens" to thousands of our brave defenders, and to their wives and children.

Of the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute the twelfth annual report is before us, and the little book already referred to gives by its illustrations a good idea of the buildings. These occupy the site of the "Fountain" Inn—"a rambling old rookery," built 300 years ago, which had gradually degenerated, until it became of very evil repute as a rendezvous for gambling, cock-fighting, &c., while the back premises were filthy in the extreme. The front portion of this place having first been bought and transformed, the Soldiers' Institute was opened in September, 1874, and since that time nearly the whole square, now known as "Our Barrack Square," has been acquired. The interior of this square presents with its grassy lawn and shrubs and creepers against the walls of the buildings, a veritable transformation scene to any who knew it in the old days. In front are, besides the institute, the lecture hall, officers' house, and private hotel, a home for ladies and families, together with other buildings. In 1882, the numbers of civilians attending the meetings in the large hall were so great that another public-house, "The Sir John Falstaff," in Nobbs-lane, was bought and transformed into "The Blue Ribbon Coffee Tavern;" here the "Helping Hand Temperance Society," with several hundred members, is in full work. Then two courts of low houses were secured and swept away, to make room for a lodging-house for soldiers' families, soup kitchen, mission hall, and free laundry. In regard to all which it is said, "The moral improvement of the neighbourhood has made our work among the soldiers easier, and the mutual good feeling and attachment to the Institute of both soldiers and 'Helping Hands' is a source of very great happiness to myself." We should not forget to mention that, working in connection herewith, is one of Mr. Spurgeon's colporteurs, who, in three months, has sold 306 Bibles and Testaments, besides many other books and texts, and also distributed 10,000 tracts and papers.

Miss Robinson's already extensive work has stretched down to the sea, for on the Embarkation Jetty she has a coffee shed and waiting rooms, where "thousands have enjoyed their coffee and 'soft tack' after weeks of ship's fare." This year a very considerable expenditure has been incurred in renovating the old Institute; besides very considerable alterations and improvements, a new Bible-class room has been built. From a list of meetings appended, the average weekly attendance at which is about 2230, we see that Miss Robinson herself conducts a soldiers' Bible-class in the Institute on Sunday, a class for young Christians and soldiers and sailors on Monday, a senior Band of Hope on Wednesday, a Bible-reading on Friday, and a Gospel temperance meeting on Saturday. Some of our young readers may be glad also to know that she has formed a Children's Society for young people of the upper classes from four to sixteen years of age, called "Little Friends of Soldiers and Sailors," who promise to pray and to help, and to join the 328 members already enrolled. For efficiently carrying out the objects for which the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute was established, about £1000 per annum is needed, and at present the maintenance of the work depends on the subscriptions collected yearly by Miss Robinson.

There is a capital view from the reading-room of the Sailors' Welcome, Portsea, and their appreciation of this Home is evidenced by the fact that during the twelve months 47,000 beds were let. There is a refreshment-room with temperance bar, where sailors may bring their friends, and, besides 228 beds, there are baths and lavatories, a locker-room with 225 lockers for the men's "shore clothes," reading and billiard-room, and good lecture hall. The blue-jackets are very proud of their house, which is self-supporting, except for a building debt of £2000 still owing.

But this work has extended beyond the sea, even to Alexandria, where, two years ago, the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute was erected amidst the ruins of the bombardment, the Old Brompton Oratory supplying the materials. The account given of the site of this building on these historic shores, with its references to Christian heroes "greater than Cæsar and Alexander and Napoleon," as well as of the difficulties to be surmounted, and of the splendid work accomplished in the brief two years since its opening, is truly romantic, but we can do no more than recommend our readers to procure the little book for themselves, which they can do by application at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth. As one reason for the erection of this Home, it may be mentioned that in two streets there are 500 wretched, dirty, disgusting-looking drink-shops, into which English soldiers once crowded, because there was no other place for them to go to. But when we follow the workers to the decks of the ships bringing invalids from places up the Nile to the troopships as they enter the harbour, to the military hospital at Ramleh—when we see them caring for the sick and ministering to the dying, dispensing coffee and lemonade to disembarking soldiers, and in various ways labouring amongst the English colony in Alexandria, then we see how great and beneficent a work is this at Alexandria; and, looking back over the twenty-five years during which Miss Robinson has been labouring on behalf of our soldiers and sailors, again would we point the moral, and show how great the result from those "little deeds of kindness," the giving of fruit and books to men whom she met.

Miss Robinson asks for more workers. Four ladies are now at Alexandria, which has a beautiful climate, and where many a worker who has broken down under the stifling air and fogs of London might begin life again. "We want those," she adds—and with these words we may well close this notice—"whose chief wish is to live for Christ. What we are will have more influence here than what we say."

LONDON LADS IN CANADA.

Mr. Gooderham, of Toronto, has lately returned to Canada, having visited England to see how Christian work among the poor was carried on here. He visited Mr. Fegan's Homes, and was highly pleased with the spiritual character of the work. He sends us some notes respecting a hundred boys from that Home who were sent out last June in the charge of Mr. A. H. Brace. These lads have all been placed in situations. On the voyage to Canada, in the Circassian, two services were held daily, and Mr. Brace preached on the Sunday morning, Captain Richardson reading the prayers. Gospel temperance meetings were held, and several pledges taken. Mr. Brace visited the lads in their homes, and speaks very highly of the families with whom they are placed, declaring that nothing could be better. One little lad said to Mr. Brace, "I did not think Canada was like this; I was afraid to come at first, but now I should be just crazy to come. This woman is like a mother to me. I am so glad I came here." Most of the lads are decided Christians, and one conducts family worship in the home to which he was sent.

A NEW MISSIONARY HYMN.

A correspondent has received from Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, and sent to us, the following hymn, of which the doctor writes:—

"You have doubtless heard the cheering fact that more than one hundred young men enlisted for the work of foreign missions during Mr. Moody's school for summer students at Northfield. They chose four of their number from as many different universities to go about during the winter to stir up the various colleges on the subject of missions, and the duty of Christian young men to enter the foreign field. These four, when elected, were found to constitute an excellent choir, and so they are going forth pleading and singing for missions. This hymn I wrote at their request as part of their musical outfit."

WHOM SHALL I SEND?

(Isaiah vi. 8.)

Oh Spirit's anointing,
For service appointing,
On us descend;
For millions are dying,
And Jesus is crying,
"Whom shall I send?"

Ethiopia is reaching
Scarred hands and beseeching,
"Rend, Christians, rend
The chains long enthralling!"
And Jesus is calling,
"Whom shall I send?"

See China unsealing
Her gates, and revealing
Fields without end!
Her night is receding,
And Jesus is pleading,
"Whom shall I send?"

Dark India is breaking
Her caste-chains, and making
Strong cries ascend
To Jesus, once bleeding,
But now interceding,
"Whom shall I send?"

Japan is awaking,
Old errors forsaking;
Haste, your aid lend!
"More light!" Hear her crying,
And Jesus replying,
"Whom shall I send?"

While Israel's unveiling,
And penitent wailing,
All things portend,
Why, why our delaying?
Since Jesus is saying
"Whom shall I send?"

The islands, once hating
His yoke, are now waiting
Humbly to bend.
Hear Jesus appealing,
To bear help and healing,
"Whom shall I send?"

KINGSLAND INSTITUTE FOR GIRLS.—Miss E. Roberts, writing on behalf of the factory girls in the North of London, says:—"We are beginning our winter's work, and are sadly crippled for want o workers. Will some friends sacrifice, at least, one evening a week to bring brightness into the lives of girls who have been working all day long at hard monotonous labour, and who, moreover, will find relaxation somewhere in the evening. We want a few earnest Christian girls to come and show them that religion is not the dull dreary thing they imagine it to be, but to join in their games and singing, help them in their needlework, and show sympathy with their daily lives and difficulties. We also need funds for our work, and must raise £100 during the next three months. Mr. R. C. L. Bevan has sent us £25." The address of the Institute is Ridley-road, Dalston, E.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, Leicester.

I.

An old-world story this! In its strange Eastern dress it appears to be as remote from us as the garb of an Arab, or the barter of an Oriental bazaar. And yet human life is much the same, whether lived 1800 years on this side or 1800 years on that side of the Cross; whether hidden beneath our broadcloth, or the flowing robes of an Arab Sheikh; whether spent in modern towns, or on the free, open pasture-lands of Southern Palestine.

Our critics complain of our poring over these time-worn pages of ancient biography; but, with all deference to them, we feel bound to say that we learn better how to live, we inhale more spiritual ozone, we see further into the reasons of God's dealings with men, when doing so, than when scanning the pages of yesterday's newspaper, or of a society journal.

With human life and discipline, one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. Souls grasp hands across the intervening centuries. Thousands of miles cannot part us from our kin across the seas, and thousands of years cannot part us from our kin across the ages, or sever the readers of these words, who daily weep over an often-dropt ideal, from that son of Isaac, who, nearly drowned in the seas of his own craft and cunning, at length emerged a new man, and a prince with God.

There are many reasons which invest this story with absorbing interest:—

I. Jacob was the Father of the Jewish Race, and a typical Jew.—They called themselves by the name of Jacob, and surnamed themselves by the name of Israel. God calls them children of Israel. We call them Israelites. We speak of Jacob, rather than Abraham, as the founder of the people to which he gave his name; because, though Abraham was their ancestor, yet he was not so exclusively. He is the founder of a yet richer, mightier line. The wild son of the desert claims him as father equally with the bargain-loving Jew. Nor is that all. We Gentiles have reason to be proud to trace back our lineage to the first great Hebrew, the man who crossed over, and whom God designated as his friend. He is the father of all who believe, not of the circumcision only, but of those who walk in the steps of the faith which he had, even before he was circumcised (Rom. iv. 12). We go to make up the sands of the shore and the stars of the milky way, which he saw in the visions of God (Gen. xxii. 17).

But Jacob is the typical Jew; his life is the epitome of that wonderful people, who are found in every country and belong to none; who supply us with our loftiest religious literature, and are yet a by-word for their craft, their scheming, and their love of money; who have supplied us with our highest ideals of nobility, and our lowest types of villainy; who have played so great a part in the history of the past, and are only waiting now for the final catastrophe which is to replace them in the van of the world's progress.

No thoughtful man can ignore this wonderful people. Their history is, without doubt, the key to the complications of modern politics, and it may be that their redemption is to be the fruit of that mighty travail, which is now convulsing all peoples, and which is being ushered in amid the throes of earthquake and the rumours of war.

If we can understand the life of Jacob, we can understand the history of his people.—The extremes which startle us in them, are all in him. Like them, he is the most successful schemer of his times; and, like them, he has that deep spirituality, that far-seeing faith, which are the grandest of all qualities, and make a man capable of the highest culture that a human spirit can receive. Like them, he spends the greatest part of his life in exile, and amid trying conditions of toil and sorrow; and, like them, he is inalienably attached to that dear land, his only hold on which was by the promise of God, and the graves of the heroic dead.

But Jacob's character was purified by tremendous discipline.—The furnace into which he was cast was heated one seven times more than it is wont to be heated for ordinary men. He stands among the peers in the kingdom of sorrow; and through it all he passed into a peerage of moral and spiritual power, which made the mightiest monarch of his times bend eagerly for a blessing from his trembling hand. Through such discipline his people have been passing for centuries, and surely, before its searching fires, the baser elements of their natures will be expelled, until they recognise the true Joseph of their seed, who has sent them many generous gifts, whom yet they have not known, but towards whom they are certainly being brought. Then shall they share his glory (Gen. xlv. 13, 18), and they shall be amongst many people, as a dew from the Lord (Micah v. 7); yea, in them shall be fulfilled the ancient promise, "I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing" (Gen. xii. 2).

II. Jacob also has so many Points of Contact with Ourselves.—Newman has said truly, "Abraham was a hero, Jacob was a plain man dwelling in tents. Abraham we feel to be above ourselves, Jacob like ourselves. We no longer stand in the unclouded golden dawn of the patriarchal age; it is overcast with clouds, and is more like our own chequered life."

Here are our failings.—He takes advantage of his brother, when hard pressed with hunger. He deceives his father. He over-reaches Laban. He wrangles fiercely, though inwardly he is in panic. He thinks to buy himself out of his trouble with Esau. He mixes in a terrible mingle-mangle religion and worldly policy. He brings up his children to hatred, violence, and murder. He cringes before the distant Egyptian governor, who sends him a present. Mean, crafty and weak, are the least terms we can apply to him. But, alas! who is there that does not feel the germs of this harvest to be within his own breast, hidden there as seed-germs in a mummy-case, and only waiting for favourable conditions to ripen them to the same disastrous growth. "There goes myself, but for the grace of God."

Here, too, are our aspirations.—We, too, have our angel-haunted dreams, and make our vows, when we leave home. We, too, count hard work a trifle, when inspired by all-mastering love. We, too, cling in a paroxysm of yearning to the departing angels, that they should bless us ere they go. We, too, get back to our Bethels, and bury our idols. We, too, confess ourselves pilgrims and strangers on the earth. We, too, recognise the shepherd care of God (Gen. xlviii. 15). We, too, wait for God's salvation (Gen. xlix. 18).

Here, moreover, are our sorrows.—In every life, there is a leaving home to go forth alone, and a weary struggle for existence, and a limp which reminds us of some awful crisis, and an Allon-bachuth (an oak of weeping), and a lonely grave on the way to Ephrath, which holds some priceless jewel-case, and a lost Joseph, and the grey hairs of sorrow. And we have mourned over hopes, which have mocked us with their non-fulfilment: "I have not attained" (Gen. xlvii. 9).

What a comfort it is to find that the Bible saints, who now shine as stars in the firmament of heaven, were men of like passions with ourselves.—They were not always saints. They sinned, and murmured, and rebelled, as we do. Heaven's rarest blades were not wrought of finer metal than that which is within our constitution. God's choicest vessels were not turned from superior earth to that of which we are made., The jewels which now lie at the foundation of the new Jerusalem were once obscure, un-named men of no finer texture than ourselves. Look to the quarry whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged, and say if there was much to choose between it and your own. And then, take heart; for if God were able to take up such men as Jacob, and Simon Bar-Jona, and make of them princes and kings, surely He can do as much for us. The discipline may be keen as fire, but the result shall be glorious, and all eternity shall ring with His praises, who raises up the poor out of the dust, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghill, and makes them kings and priests unto God.

III. In Jacob we can trace the Workings of Divine Love.—"Jacob have I loved" (Mal. i. 2). It was pre-natal love. Before the child was born, it was the object of God's love (Rom. ix. 11). In God's heart all his members were written, when as yet there was none of them. Though God forecasted his disposition and habits, yet He loved him. It is ever sweet to rest on a love which is dated not in time but eternity, because one feels that as God's love did not originate in any unforeseen flash of excellence in us, so it will not be turned away by any unexpected outbreak of depravity. It did not begin because of what we were, and it will continue in spite of what we are.

It was fervent love. So strong that, in comparison, the love which shone around Esau might be almost termed hatred (Rom. ix. 13). For God loved Esau as He loves all men. He hates nothing that He has made. But there were as many degrees of temperature between his love to Jacob and that to Esau as there are in human hearts between love and hate. Sometimes in an early morning the moon shines in the same sky as the sun, her beams still fall on all things, but one might almost assert that she did not shine by reason of the brilliance of his beams. So was it with these two men. And who shall find fault? There must be degrees in the love of God. Was there not one disciple whom Jesus loved? (See also Matt. x. 37 and Luke xiv. 26.)

It was a disciplinary love. We have low thoughts of love. We can only count that as love which caresses, and soothes, and says sweet things, and makes of itself a shield so that no rough wind may breathe on us. We have no notion of a love that can say, "No," that can use the rod and scourge and fire, that can sustain the long discipline by which the mean and false and evil elements are driven out of the beloved soul. But such is the love of God. "The grace of God which brings salvation appears, instructing us, disciplining us" (Titus ii. 12, R.V.). So it came to Jacob.

If we had been asked to tell which of these two men was Heaven's favourite, we should, in all likelihood, have selected the wrong one.

Here stands Esau, the shaggy, broad-shouldered, redhaired huntsman, equipped with bow and arrows, full of generous impulse, affectionate to his aged father, forgiving to the brother who had done him such grievous wrong. He became a chieftain of renown, and the ancestor of a princely line (Gen. xxxvi.). He was happy in his wives and children; we read of no such outbreaks as embittered Jacob's lot. He was so rich that he could make light of Jacob's presents, and so powerful that Jacob's company was helpless in his hand, and his people were happily settled in their rich territories, whilst the children of Jacob were groaning in Egyptian bondage. And, as we consider him, we are inclined to imitate the words of Samuel, when Jesse's eldest son entered his presence, and say: "Surely, the Lord's beloved is before me!"

There, on the other hand, is Jacob. In his young manhood, an exile from his father's house. In his mature manhood, a hireling, in the employ of a kinsman. In his declining years, worn by anxiety and trouble. In his old age, a stranger in a strange land. Few and evil were the days of the years of his pilgrimage. Yet he was the beloved of God; and it was because of that especial love that he was exposed to such searching discipline. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth."

Earthly prosperity is no sign of the special love of Heaven; nor are sorrow and care any mark of God's disfavour, but the reverse. Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus. When He heard, therefore, that he was sick, He abode where He was, and let Lazarus die. God's love is robust, and true, and eager, not for our comfort, but for our lasting blessedness; it is bent on achieving this, and it is strong enough to bear misrepresentation and rebuke in its attempts to attune our spirits to higher music. It therefore comes instructing us.

Let us enter ourselves as pupils in the school of God's love.—Let us lay aside our own notions of the course of study; let us submit ourselves to be led and taught; let us be prepared for any lessons that may be given from the black board of sorrow; let us be so assured of the inexhaustible tenacity of his love as to dare to trust Him, though He slay us. And let us look forward to that august moment when He will give us a reason for all life's discipline, with a smile that shall thrill our souls with ecstasy, and constrain sorrow and sighing to flee away for ever.

IV. JACOB'S LIFE GIVES A CLUE TO THE DOCTRINE OF ELECTION.—There was election here. The Apostle Paul uses it to illustrate that mysterious truth (Rom. ix. 11). And it is obviously so. Jacob was the younger son, and his life is as much a Gospel for younger sons as is that matchless parable of the prodigal. The children were not born when God foretold and fixed their destiny.

It is impossible to ignore election; it has been truly said to be the key to the order of all nature and history. "There are elect angels, elect stars, elect races of animals, elect flowers and fruits, elect human souls. Nowhere do we meet with equality, uniformity, the monotony of a dull level. Everywhere things and beings, with superior endowment to other things and beings, seem made to head them, and sweep them along in the orbit of their motion by the attraction of the superior on the inferior spheres. One star differeth from another star in glory; some flash forth resplendent, regal gems in the diadem of night, while others are scattered faint and dim like seed-pearls on her dusky robe."

So is it with races. Some, like the Anglo-Saxon, stand forth in a sunlit circle, the pioneers in civilisation, the easy masters of the world. Others, like the Hottentot, drag on a dull existence, which, when at high-water mark, is little removed above the brutes that share with them the forest glades.

So is it with souls. Some men are evidently born to be the leaders, teachers, masters of mankind. Thus it was with Jeremiah the prophet (Jer. i. 5); with Cyrus the conqueror (Isa. xlv. 4), and John the Baptist (Luke i. 17), and these are types of myriads more.

But to what are these elect? To comfort, ease, success? Nay, for these things fall to the lot rather of the Esaus than the Jacobs. The elect of God seem chosen to stand in the front rank, and bear the brunt of the storms of sorrow, pain and care.

Are they, then, elect to personal salvation? Many of the cases in which the words occur do not demand this, as their exclusive meaning. Indeed, Scripture does not certainly exclude Esau himself from a share in Abraham's bosom. He lost his birthright, truly, and he could not recover it by strong cryings and tears; but the loss of his birthright did not necessarily entail the loss of his soul.

But may we not hold that election refers largely, if not primarily, to the service which the elect are qualified to render to their fellows throughout all coming time? They are elect, not for themselves, or for the sake of their own future; but rather for the sake of the work which their position of privilege would enable them to do for mankind.

This, certainly, has been one result of the election of Jacob and his people. They were elect to be the spiritual leaders and teachers of mankind, to furnish us with a matchless religious literature, to provide a suitable platform on which the Saviour of the world should appear, and from which He might influence the world. Not for the sake of their own comfort, but for the sake of the dark and dying world, God gave them light and life, and sustained them in existence against overwhelming odds, and stored in them streams of electric force, as in some mighty battery.

This, then, will explain also the terrific discipline through which they passed. It was needed, not for their sakes alone, but for the race they were destined to serve, that they might be set free from deteriorating influences, and stand forth as God's chosen vessels, brimming with blessing for the world.

Seeking souls need not then concern themselves with this mysterious subject. Outside the house of salvation, there is no word save this—"whosoever." When once we have crossed the threshold, look around, we may find some such text as that with which Peter begins his First Epistle; and we may find that God had some purpose of mercy to others, when He first drew us to Himself.

But this and many other similar questions will receive new and beautiful illustration, as we pursue our studies of Jacob's life.

THE LORD'S SECRETARY.

A CHRISTIAN lady, on hearing from a friend of blessing received through the ministry of the pen, wrote: "The Lord's secretary! He will always tell thee what to write when He has business for thee to do." And how true this is! There is not half enough importance attached to the wording of the every-day letters and notes that grow into hundreds under our hands in the course of the year. One of old wrote: "Set a watch, O Lord, before the door of my lips," and poets, and many other writers, have grown eloquent on the power of spoken words; but few have discoursed of the mighty influence of the tons of written language that pass annually through the post in Great Britain alone.

Yet every Christian should be one of the Lord's secretaries. Just as the tongue is held in check by the remembrance of "the Name which is above every name"—just as it often burns to tell of Him, so the pen should be held by the Christian in such wise as the Lord may best be able to control it, and the thoughts behind it—held so that it may, without fetters, trace something to the glory of God, and the help of a fellow-creature.

Letter-writing as a fine art may have decayed, but letter-writing as an every-day means of conveying thought between individuals is on the rapid increase. What glorious opportunities are here, then, for Christian letter-writers to become the Lord's secretaries! And opportunity means responsibility. Every letter written by the Christian should bear the Royal Treasury stamp—the paper, "without spot or blemish;"—the quill, a plume pointed with the confidence that, though you are the instrument in his hand, "He shall cover thee with his feathers," and reveal Himself only upon the page. The ink, sympathetic, remembering that He is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and is "full of compassion." The blotter—ah, think then of the words, "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions," and how tender this will make you as you write! Perhaps it is the first letter to a new friend—it may influence the whole of the friendship hereafter and through eternity—think of this, and ask for wisdom. Or it may be, the letter is to one whose guile has pained you—be gentle with the sinner, and let the Lord write about the sin, for his secretary must be faithful.

Perchance you are writing to one whom you know to be in the perilous position of those who are "without God and without hope in the world." A young lady was once writing to a young man indulging in vicious courses, whom she desired to warn and counsel; but before she began her letter, she sought her greatest Friend. "My Father," she pleaded, "Thou hast commissioned me to write this letter; do Thou, then, guide the pen thy child shall hold, and give the thoughts that pen shall trace." In such a spirit was it written that the recipient, in his reply, said: "Surely God dictated that letter; bad as I am, I yet understand every word of it, and could believe it was written with a quill from an angel's wing." Of course this was an exaggerated piece of compliment as to the latter idea; but the young man was led, by that letter, to give up his evil companions, and to seek the Lord with all his heart. Here is encouragement for you. Ask in faith, and God Himself will teach you.

An Italian waiter in a London hotel, who had been led to see the sin of his gay life, and to know God, through the preaching of Mr. Moody, was so distressed at his employer's sinful life, that he wrote on a slip of paper and pinned it to his master's pillow: "Oh, dear master, the kingdom of God is at hand, and you are not ready!" Mr. V., finding who had written this, said to the man, "Now, my good fellow, since the kingdom of God is so near, I shall not need you any longer, because you will be wanted there, so go to-night." The poor waiter was ready with an answer, "Ah, sure, you will need me. I am to show you ze way!" For this bold speech the man was sent off at once; but so strongly did his words cling to his late master, so often did "the kingdom of heaven" come up before him in contrast to the world, that at the end of a week he sent for the man, who became the humble instrument of his salvation. Poor fellow! He was one of the Lord's secretaries, he wrote just what he felt, and he prayed as he wrote, and the blessing was granted.

A beautiful letter-writer once wrote: "I live between the folds of a sheet of paper." "I live"—how suggestive! How easy to make it, "I live, yet not I, but Christ!" To some, whose chief literature is friends' letters, what a blessing is the life thus revealed "between the folds of a sheet of paper!" In that Psalm xlv. of instruction (margin) for the sons of Korah, where the writer ends by saying he will make his Lord's name to be remembered through all generations, the opening words are: "My heart is inditing (bubbleth up) a good matter; I speak of the things which I have made touching the King." Here is a text for the Lord's secretaries: "Things touching the King." If every Christian letter-writer would resolve henceforth that the spirit and groundwork of his or her letters should originate in this "Fount of every Blessing," what a "bubbling up" of love, of truth, of gentleness, of joy, there would be in some reams of correspondence for ages to come! And why should it not be so? A letter will reach where voice cannot hope to be heard, a letter may be read not once, but often, and each time under different circumstances, in varying moods, so that if not appreciated at first, it may speak with fresh power in a second reading.

Let these thoughts stimulate us to re-consecration in the matter of our pen-work, and that we may "count it all joy" to be used of God in this way, for among some of his most successful missionaries and faithful ministers are those who, writing in his Name, are indeed the Lord's secretaries. M. BUTLER GERDS.

A GOOD CONFESSION.

MEETING a soldier whom I had formerly seen at a Bible-reading, I said, "And are you on the Lord's side?" His emphatic reply was worthy of record: "The Lord has been on my side for eight years; He has kept me. I am safer than Adam in the Garden. He might have been there for years, and the devil might have come to him; but I am in Christ, the Ruler!"

Such a testimony was like a ray of sunshine on the dusty London street! It was more—it was a ray of light from the glorious Gospel of God, shining through the earthen vessel that held such a treasure (2 Cor. iv. 6, 7). May all believers realise this blessed truth, and walk in the power of it! A WORKER.

THE FISK JUBILEE SINGERS have had very successful gatherings at Melbourne, the Town Hall being crowded night after night. They were to visit Sydney this month, commencing their meetings at the Y.M.C.A. Hall on the 4th inst.

FRENCH AUSTRALIAN MISSION.—This mission, at Sydney, is under the direction of Rev. W. Anderson, who conducts services in French at the Seamen's Mission Hall. To bring the Mission more prominently before the French population of that town, he gave a lecture at the Town Hall, recently on "Jesus and Renan." Mr. W. Neill J.P., presided, and there was a good attendance of Frenchmen, Germans, and Italians.

Y.M.C.A. DISTINCTIVE PRINCIPLES.

By Mr. J. H. TRITTON.*

Distinctive evangelical principles—Scriptural principles, I would rather term them—may mean little or much just in proportion to the correspondence between the doctrines indicated by the phrase, and their effect upon the lives of those who hold them. That there may be no mistake as to what is meant by these principles, I have attempted, not without assistance, to formulate a definition :—

(1) That man, though a reasonable and responsible creature, is by nature spiritually lost and undone.

(2) That salvation is wholly of God by grace.

(3) That the Lord Jesus Christ is the only Saviour.

(4) That Christ saves (a) By giving his own life a sufficient and perfect atonement. (b) In giving spiritual life through that atonement by the Holy Spirit. (c) By maintaining that spiritual life in his people by his Word and Spirit for evermore.

(5) The new life or creature, the sanctified and glorified character, are the result of God's grace, the atonement of Jesus Christ, and the indwelling of the Eternal Spirit. The whole of these doctrines were certainly included in the apostolic teaching, and the often-asserted antagonism of St. Paul and St. James, both equally inspired by the Holy Spirit, exists only in the beclouded imagination of rationalistic critics. It is, however, worthy of note that subsequently, and from age to age, the relative importance of the doctrines to one another has, in the estimation and teaching of those who have held them, unquestionably varied. I need not stop to give instances, suffice if to say that all have been used of God to bring out successively different aspects to the same truths.

Of all the topics embraced in the phrase, "Evangelical Principles," that which, it seems to me, most claims attention to-day, standing out prominently from all others, is "The Headship of Christ, and his oneness with his own." Here, again, we must remind ourselves that the doctrine is one to be lived out, and is otherwise but of little moment. The most correct theology, set forth in the most precise terms, by the most logical mind amongst us, may be utterly lifeless—nothing, as it were, but festoons of charred filament gracefully looped in a crystal vacuum. The electric current is needed to be applied, and at once the little glow-lamp charms and illuminates the darkness by means of these same slender threads, supplying an illustration ready to our hand of the Light of Life in us, the earthen vessels, the connection with Christ the living Head, completed ere the light will shine.

The need of the Y.M.C.A. at the present time as a whole, and of every individual member, is, I do not hesitate to say, to be brought into closer contact with, and to have a fuller revelation of, Jesus, the Christ. The threefold revelation of Him in the Scriptures must fill our lives. (1) The revelation given in the Gospels of his atoning death as our only plea, and of his earthly life as our example. (2) The revelations given in the Epistles of his heavenly life in us, and with us, and for us, by the Holy Ghost, the Comforter. (3) The revelation so appropriately closing the inspired canon, of his coming again as the Lord from heaven.

One object of this paper is to go behind the doctrines, and to set forth before the Y.M.C.A. the motive power, the inspiration, the enthusiasm, of everyone who is in living contact with Christ the Head. The Association can never be kept together by constitutions, however carefully prepared, or by a scheme of doctrines, however theologically correct. We are not "Paper Unionists," to borrow a phrase from politics. The only cement which can bind and keep us together is that of Col. ii. 19, "Holding the Head," or as it is in the R.V., "Holding fast the Head." This is emphatically an individual, not a corporate, act, a penetrating to the very heart of Scripture principles on the part of all who rightly hold them.

What, then, have we individual members of the Y.M.C.A. to offer to those whom we would influence, to those young men on whom the world is dawning, and with false glamour enticing to ruin? What have we to offer to those entangled in the devil's meshes of sin and lust, who, in spite of outward bravado and mirth, are sick at heart, disgusted with themselves, and longing for deliverance? A library, a gymnasium, educational advantages? Good! But all these are easily obtained without our intervention, and without the stigma of the Association name. Were these all, or even were they deemed the chief part of our work, few, if any, of those here to-day would be found in the ranks of our Association.

What then? Bible classes, where distinctive evangelical principles are rigorously maintained? Good! But how inadequate in themselves to attract our friends, or meet their need. Let us ask ourselves another question, What have others to offer? Atheism—alas! that we should be compelled to allude to it at all—openly avowed now in every rank, although but a generation ago the man who exhibited atheistical tendencies was scouted—Atheism lifts its blatant voice and preaches an Enthusiasm of the Flesh: "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Agnosticism, in which, by a strange paradox, the pride of intellect glories in ignorance, goes a step further, and by the mouth of its apostles offers to its followers an Enthusiasm of Humanity. What agnosticism has done for humanity it were hard to discover. Supernaturalism and Spiritualism wherein, under cover of seeking after God, men and women ally themselves with the "Prince of the Power of the Air," are insidiously obtaining a foothold in our midst—surely a sign of the last times—and offer to their devotees (is it too much to say?) an Enthusiasm of the Devil. Rome and her allies, with their many blandishments, offer to those who seek an outward and material expression of the Church on earth, in derogation of the one Mediator, an Enthusiasm of the Church. Among all these no place for the Y.M.C A.

But manhood, especially young manhood, must have an enthusiasm. What counter attraction, what grander enthusiasm can we exhibit? The dry bones of dogma; distinctive, Evangelical Principles merely? A thousand times, No! A living Christ, first and foremost; one who has claimed us for his own; one whose power and love we have tasted; one who lives in us, and fills us with his Spirit, transforming and transfusing into his own likeness our daily life. Him, our glorious Saviour must we proclaim by word and life; an all sufficient Saviour—one who has satisfied our own deepest instincts and longings, who is able to keep as well as to save, and who will one day reveal Himself in the midst of a renewed earth—Him will we commend to our brothers. May the enthusiasm be such as will fire every heart, and carry all before it. Herein alone is found the true secret both of the worth and of the weight of evangelical principles.

But fashionable as is the cry of Christ without theology, we will have none of it. I remember well the answer of one known to most of us, who for many years conducted a Y.M.C.A. Bible-class with great success, made to a sceptic, who asked, "What is Christianity?" Expecting a theological reply, which would afford scope for an argument, he had nothing to say, when the answer came in two words, "A Life." Yes, a life from on high, a life in Christ. But this life is subject to laws, and has its foundations, though not its origin, in Articles of Faith. Hence the importance, from one point of view, of distinctive doctrine. "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" And if an assault of the enemy overthrow one article of belief, it will surely endanger, if it does not lead to the abandonment of others.

We shall be agreed in thinking that no little danger threatens our Associations when young men, recently brought to the Lord, and still very ignorant as to doctrine, are not only allowed but urged to stand up and speak. This is a very real danger at the present time, and one difficult to meet; but a training class for workers, which should be presided over by one "sound in the faith," might surely often take into consideration doctrinal subjects, even though it be as "milk for babes."

We are exhorted to "hold fast the form of sound words," "rightly dividing the word of truth," but as an Association we have, I think, paid too little attention to these matters, and the time has come for amendment.

A declaration of faith has been drawn up, setting forth in simple, but brief phrases, things most surely believed among us. It may be obtained from the secretaries of the Metropolitan Council at Exeter Hall, and I would earnestly press upon all leaders of Bible-classes, secretaries, and members of committees to procure it.

In the religion of too many of us, at any rate in the South, there is an absence of strength—of back-bone—of everything except obstinate tenacity, which brings but little credit when put to the test.

The schemes of so-called natural religion, and equally of ecclesiasticism, are carefully and logically presented, and so also should be our own Scriptural faith; always remembering that faith must be, where infinite truth is concerned, superior to finite reason. With this proviso, and content to be thereby and therefore humbled, if need be, we should, everyone, be more ready to give a doctrinal reason for the faith which is in us, than we are at present.

From another point of view, also, is seen the importance of distinctive evangelical principles in our work. We are an Association of men of like aims; and, although we by no means look for uniformity, still, in furthering those aims, we must have a well-known and generally accepted basis of belief. This the Y.M.C.A. finds in these doctrines, and it is absurd to complain, as I see men do from time to time, that we are narrow, and endeavouring still further to narrow the Paris Basis, when we appeal to these Scriptural doctrines as generally received among us. Would they degrade our Associations into a heterogeneous collection of men who know not what they believe, and who believe they know not what?

Nay, my brethren, if there is to be change, let it be in the case of each individual member of the Y.M.C.A. more and more doing our Saviour's will, and, consequently, more and more knowing his doctrine: holding more fast to the Head, and, consequently, more and more "filled with the Spirit." Thus, and thus alone, shall distinctive evangelical or Scriptural principles become through us a blessing to others, being instinct with the Living Christ.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.—This institution was re-opened recently, after thorough renovation, by a public meeting. It seeks the benefit of the working population of the East-end; the various branches of the work are now in full working order. Last year more than 30,000 persons of both sexes attended the library and free lectures (on Christian evidences, health, and other important topics), a large proportion of whom were Sunday-school teachers, district visitors, city missionaries, and other Christian workers.

HOSPITAL SATURDAY FUND.—Mr. H. N. Hamilton-Hoare writes intimating that the time for closing the books for the year is approaching. He says that increased support has been given to the Fund this year by employers of labour and that the amount in hand at the present time is considerably in excess of that at the same date in any former year. During the past twelve years the Fund has contributed nearly £75,000 to the medical charities of London. A Seaside Convalescent Home for working men has also been established at Dover, to which over 1000 men have been admitted during the past three years, and a scheme for supplying surgical appliances is working satisfactorily at the office of the Fund. Contributions paid before the end of November will be included in the thirteenth annual report. They may be sent to the secretary, 41, Fleet-street, London, E.C.; or to Mr. Hoare, 37, Fleet-street.

THE POPE AND THE JESUITS.

BY MONS. E. REVEILLAUD.

[Abridged from articles in "Le Signal."]

POPE LEO XIII. has just published a Brief in favour of the Jesuits, which effaces the last traces of the condemnation pronounced against them by Pope Clement XIV. in his celebrated Brief, Dominus ac Redemptor, of July 21, 1773. In the face of such opposite judgments, with the interval of a century between them, delivered by two Popes equally infallible, what becomes of even the principle of Papal infallibility. How can the Ultramontane theologians agree that Clement XIV. was infallible in suppressing the order of the Jesuits, and that Leo XIII. is equally so in restoring it to all its honours, rights and privileges?

The history of this dangerous order is not sufficiently known, and it ought to be studied, not in the books of laymen and anti-clericals, but in a book written by a priest attached to his Church, the Abbé Guettée. In the preface to his Histoire des Jésuites, he declares that he derives his authority only from documents of incontestable authenticity and value. Founded by the visionary fanatic Ignatius Loyola, as an Order of Knight Errantry devoted to his Lady the Holy Virgin, and to the Most Holy Father, this too celebrated company passed into the hands of subtle and intriguing men. According to their constitution, submitted to Pope Paul III., the "Company of Jesus" was to be composed of those who were willing to bear arms for God under the standard of the Cross, and serve the only Lord and the Roman Pontiff, his vicar on earth. Those enrolled had to take vows of poverty, of chastity, and of obedience to the General, and of submission to the Pope. The General was to be absolute; such rights of the associates as were at first proposed soon became a dead letter: as to the vow of poverty, although mendicity became the fundamental principle of the order, it became the richest order in the Church. The blindest obedience was yielded to the Superior, and the order is always faithful to this vow. There is the most complete abnegation of the individual will and intention. They must, in fact, be like soft wax, to be moulded according to the will of the General, or like a dead body that has no will of its own.

It is easy to imagine from all this what the power of the General is. Besides this absolute and blind obedience, there is a complete system of correspondence and of universal espionage. The General resides at Rome, as the centre of the Roman Catholic world. Each province (it is well known that France, Spain and England are simply "provinces" of the company) has at its head a governor, who bears the title of "Provincial." His charge is to watch over the progress of the order, and to see that the laws and orders of the General are carried out. The assistants who are with the General keep up an active correspondence with the provinces, so as to be thoroughly acquainted with the affairs of the kingdoms in their department. The Provincials have to write to the General every month, to tell him everything they have discovered from superiors and rectors, and a chosen deputy is sent to Rome to make known to the General the particulars which it is not deemed prudent to commit to paper.

The General, in his turn, is kept in check by a monitor and the two assistants. The monitor has to watch the General, and to reprove him secretly when they have observed anything irregular in his conduct. The General, in his turn, carries on this system of espionage, by means of all the functionaries of the order, over all the members, and by all the members and affiliated members (Jesuits of the short robe, as they are called) over all those who do not belong to the company. This system of espionage is not very dangerous for the General, as all are under his control, and he can dismiss his assistants as he chooses, and he is, besides, on terms of good understanding with the assistants, in order to govern despotically.

Such is in substance the interior organisation of the Jesuits, a system of slavery in the highest degree. There is, of course, in this ambition to dominate over all, much that satisfies human nature, as may be easily seen from the fact that recruits for the order are never wanting, who are willing to renounce country, family, liberty, reason, judgment, conscience, and give all up to their chiefs.

We learn from the Abbé Guettée's "History of the Jesuits" that they have obtained from several Popes all the privileges which could possibly be granted to render them free from all control. Thus they may build and acquire property in all parts of the world, in spite of every power, ecclesiastic and secular. Their goods are inviolable, being the property of St. Peter—in other words, of the Holy See; yet they can be disposed of only through the Jesuits, who are also exempt from all dues, customs, subsidies, &c. The General alone having the right to make engagements, he can disclaim any made by the members of the company. He can also change the destination of legacies. The company is declared to be superior to all kings, princes, and rulers—to be above all priests, bishops, and religious orders, and they can exercise their functions in all places and at all times without permission of the resident clergy. It is easily understood that their action is often regarded with a jealous eye by those whose parishes and rights they thus invade.

Besides all this, the Pope has given them the right of choosing their own judges, as conservators of their privileges. These can judge without the ordinary judiciary formalities, can summon before them all persons, ecclesiastic or secular, who may have injured them or their goods, or their privileges, and can repress all power or authority inimical to them. If the Jesuits cease to have confidence in their judges, they can change them. Thus they are sure of being always in the right. They can also choose their notaries, and they can put any member of their company into a place of power.

By this it is easy to see the bearing and the gravity of the measure which Pope Leo XIII. has just taken in his recent Brief addressed to Father Anderly, vicar-general of the company, which gives to the Jesuits, or confirms to them, all the privileges which had been conceded to them by his predecessors. It is as much as to say that if the Papacy ever became the mistress of the world, which is the dream and design of all faithful Jesuits, these would be placed above the laws of nations, having no limits but those it might please them to fix.

This senseless dream failed to become a reality even under the old régime. Invading the rights of princes and magistrates, masked though it was by the pretence of the public interest and the good of religion, the Jesuits arrayed against themselves kings and their ministers, the parliaments and universities of the Roman Catholic countries of Europe. They were considered as a public scourge in Europe, and in Canada, and Paraguay. The Cardinal Bernis addressed a memorial to Pope Clement XIV. complaining of the abuse the Jesuits made of the Brief he had granted to them, and closing with the following words:—"Without repeating here all the grave accusations brought against the Jesuits, how shall we reply to the following objection? An order of simple monks, formidable at all times and in all countries to other monks, and to the secular clergy, to monarchs, bishops, and even to the Sovereign Pontiff himself, on whom this Society entirely depends, now, when almost annihilated by the laws of various States, continues to be a terror to all."

Yielding to these and other reasons which were set before him as for the good of Catholicism, Clement XIV. decided to sign, July 21, 1773, the Brief of Suppression—Dominus ac Redemptor. On August 17 he caused it to be notified to the Jesuits at Rome, where seditious letters were seized, rendering necessary the imprisonment of the General and his assistants. The other Jesuits were treated by Clement XIV., or at his recommendation, with the utmost kindness and gentleness; but they made little of this, and spared no pains to blacken his character and reputation, and to hinder the execution of his Brief of Suppression. When Clement died, on September 22, 1774, the Jesuits were commonly accused of having poisoned him. If this fact is not proved, neither can it be denied, says the Abbé Guettée, that they showed the greatest joy at his illness and death, and spread the most absurd and horrible reports as to his last moments. They wished to make people believe that God had punished him with a horrible malady for the measure he had taken against their company. The way in which they spoke of the malady, gave consistency to the report that they had poisoned the Pope. They are too much given to acts of this nature for the public to reject these suspicions as unfounded, though they may not be judicially proved.

The Jesuits partly recovered themselves after the death of Clement; and, by way of obeying the edicts against them, disguised themselves under the names of Pacanarists, Fathers of the Faith, &c., retaining their organisation and neglecting only their vow of obedience to the Pope. The various Popes who have succeeded since then, not wishing to share the fate of Clement XIV. have managed to keep on good terms with them. In 1801, Pius VII. authorised the order, which had contrived to maintain its existence in the form of a secret society, to reconstitute itself in Russia, and afterwards, in 1814, permitted it to exist everywhere by his Bull, Solicitudo Omnium Ecclesiarum. Since then the Jesuits have constantly exacted from the Popes the disavowal under one form or another of the interdict of Clement XIV. It was expected that Leo XIII., who was nominated in opposition to the Jesuits, would, seeing that the Infallibility of the Holy Father had become a dogma, disavow the solemn act of his predecessors; but Leo XIII. has submitted as did Pio Nono, and the Papacy is henceforth incorporated with Jesuitism.

Will the democratic governments, which have almost universally taken the place of the old order of things, show themselves more accommodating to this formidable and ambitious association? At first sight, one might be tempted to believe that they could be so without danger. For what peril can there be to our modern governments, resting on the solid foundations of universal suffrage, in these inoffensive religious corporations devoted to education, and to the Confessional? Is not the best guarantee for their harmlessness in our republican institutions? Do not let us be deceived by words. The peril of these formidable international associations, whether red or black, is perhaps greater for democracies than for monarchies, democracies being generally more simple, and more easily taken by surprise, by flattering their passions, or by favouring their material interests. It is sufficient to remember that the Jesuits have been, or are now, masters of Paraguay, of Uruguay, of Ecuador, and of other republics of South America, to understand that the form of government has nothing to do with the matter. As Belgium has again fallen into the hands of their friends, could we not see by the events of May 16 and 24 what is reserved for France? No; the danger is not got rid of, because, instead of having the head of an emperor or a king, we have an allegorical figure on our money. It is, on the contrary, to be feared lest our modern democracies, comparatively disarmed by their liberal legislation, should become an easy prey of a party whose strength is in their theocratic military organisation.

France—let it be said and repeated with emphasis—and we may add England, will always have everything to fear from the designs of the black party, as long as her citizens have so little moral courage, and that our Catholic fellow-citizens—numbered by millions—who consider the Jesuits a public pest, do not decide for their own part to join the reform movement, and who remain, whether from indifference or weakness, within the bounds of a church which has now entirely fallen into the hands of these very Jesuits.

THE TWILIGHT CONTINENT.

We have been accustomed to call Africa the Dark Continent; but so many streaks of Gospel light are now penetrating its interior here and there that it seems as if we must now discard that appellation. This was the feeling uppermost in our minds as we left the very interesting meeting at Harley House, Bow, on Tuesday evening last week. It was the commencement of the fifteenth session of Mr. Guinness's East London Institute for training young missionaries; but these occasions have always a much more extended scope than the immediate work of the Institute. Though it has sent out men with the message of the Gospel to almost every part of the mission field, a peculiar and special interest has for some years attached to the Congo Mission, which was founded by Mr. and Mrs. Guinness. Though the active management of that Mission has passed into American hands, a lively solicitude is still felt in it by Harley House, and these reunions seldom pass without some story of fresh interest with respect to its progress and development. On Tuesday evening Mr. Guinness, at the close of a lucid address on dispensational truth in its present bearing on missions, referred to the wonderful opening up of Central Africa. At least three of the languages spoken, he said, have been acquired; the Word of God has begun to be translated, and there are by the latest reports, in connection with the Livingstone Inland Mission alone, more than 1000 professed converts. The work continues to spread, and the prospects for the future are of the most promising kind.

Mrs. Guinness also made an intensely interesting statement as to the present position of Central African missions. It is difficult, she said, to realise the wonderful change that has come over this great Continent within the last few years. How dark and sad its past history has been, and it is only now that we are beginning to know anything about it. For 1800 years and more the command has been ringing, "Go ye," but Africa has never heard the glad tidings, with the exception of little bits here and there in the north, and round some parts of the coast. That seems a strange thing; and it is still more strange that now within a few years the providence of God seems to have been throwing open door after door into the very heart of the Continent, as if God would say to his Church, "March in. Before the dispensation closes, proclaim to these darkened souls the glorious message of eternal life." May it not be the purpose of God that these African races are to receive the Gospel in a way that no other people has done? There seems to be something childlike in the nature and disposition of these peoples, so that when they hear the Gospel and can grasp it they are prepared to receive it. We could not, of course, give them the Gospel until the language had been mastered. Now that has been done in some degree, and the missionaries are able, by a knowledge of the habits and customs of the people, to use illustrations that they can comprehend and take hold of. No doubt this is one cause of the wonderful spiritual results that have been achieved.

I want that we should be full of hope for Africa. I think there are good grounds for it. When Livingstone began his work nearly thirty years ago, Africa was almost wholly unknown at any great distance from the coast. The dangers of exploration were believed to be so great that people refrained. Livingstone contended that it was not all desert, but as good a continent as any other, if you once got into it. It is wonderful how God seems to have stirred the hearts of all sorts of people, acting from all kinds of motives, to open up the land. Hardly a month passes but you hear of some new expedition starting, or of some new discovery being made. God has even moved the hearts of kings and statesmen to pour out their treasure without stint. Probably half a million of money has been spent by the King of the Belgians alone, in having the country investigated and explored. All the learned societies are sending their agents to search out the geographical and other scientific aspects of the land. Commerce is pouring in at all the newly-opened avenues. Surely the Christian Churches will not be behind in doing their part as the evangelisers of these dusky sons and daughters of Africa.

Mrs. Guinness went on to note some of the most recent geographical discoveries in Central Africa. Quite lately a direct waterway has been discovered from the Congo at a point ten days' distant from the coast, to the central part of the Continent, without going all round the north bend of the Congo. There are now known to be four mighty rivers crossing the Continent from east to west, connecting the Nile system in the north, the great lakes in the centre, and the Zambesi in the south. More recently still another river, called the Sekoli, has been discovered by a brother of M. De Brazza, the well-known French explorer, flowing into the Congo from the north, and navigable for 300 miles. It flows through a populous and fertile country, in which there are almost interminable herds of oxen, antelopes, elephants, and hippopotami. All this means a mine of wealth to the traders in ivory and the other products of those lands; in a few years these regions will be in direct communication with the European markets. The King of the Belgians is now in London making arrangements for the Congo Valley railway. When that is constructed the vast sweep of the Continent from Banana to Stanley Pool will be within easy reach of London. Already there are six steamers on the Upper Congo. Mrs. Guinness said it seemed as if God had opened up this new world "just in time," so to speak. The economic problems in England and in America have become so grave that it is fast becoming a serious question how our rapidly increasing populations are to be supported. In India it is the same. There are millions in that land who are living on one meal a day, and who never know what it is to be free from the pangs of hunger. Is it not wonderful that this new world opens up at such a crisis with so many millions of naked people wanting to be clothed, and plenty of good things to give in return?

If God in his providence is thus indicating Africa as a great mission field—may we say, as the last task of the Church on earth?—shall we not be full of hope and courage, and gird ourselves to the task? Mrs. Guinness then gave some details of the progress made by the Livingstone Inland Mission—the early sacrifice of valuable life through ignorance of the climate and the conditions of living; the firstfruits of the work, and now the thousand converts that have been reported. The great hope of Africa is that these converts will themselves become evangelists; then we may expect the Gospel will spread like wildfire. Mrs. Guinness read the following post-card from Mr. C. H. Harvey, recently to hand from the Congo:—

> Just come back from Equator. Glorious things at B. M. Over a thousand professed in six weeks! Most marvellous work. General stir throughout the whole country. Am starting with H. Richards and some converts to specially evangelise Lukunga. Even Palabala is not without some blessing. M'bunga has thirty professors now and more coming in every day. Have held meeting of special committee, which became finally a praise meeting.

At the close of Mrs. Guinness' statement, a most interesting account was given by Mr. Ingham of his mission experiences on the Congo, and the wonderful entrance that he gained through the exercise of a little medical skill in the treatment of native complaints, and of accidents. His address was one more remarkable testimony to the supreme work of medical missions in heathen lands. Mrs. Ingham also gave a pleasing account of school work among the children, which showed that a great field is open for the instruction of the young in these far-off Congo regions. We have seldom been present at a more deeply-interesting or stimulating missionary meeting.

Most of the friends present united in the observance of the Lord's Supper at the close of the addresses.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. Guinness spoke on the restoration of Israel in relation to the evangelisation of the world, and the intimate connection between the blessing of the Jews and of the Gentiles.

He was followed by Mr. Banks and Mr. Pettersen, who gave some very interesting and very terrible facts about the Congo people. After Mr. Banks had spoken, he brought forward a little Congo boy, Makiudu, who sang a verse of "Saviour, like a Shepherd lead us," in his own language.

The last speaker was Mrs. Alexandrian, who, with her husband, is shortly returning to Constantinople to establish a medical mission at Scutari; she gave a most interesting account of the time when she landed without one friend in England, and her subsequent efforts to support her husband and children during the medical education of the former. Though discouraged in their attempt by almost all the friends whom they consulted, they bravely struggled on, amidst great difficulties, and their efforts have now been crowned with success.

MR. VARLEY AT CAPE TOWN.

Letters from Cape Town, dated September 21, say that the work under Messrs. Varley and Hannington is extending. The large Dutch Church is crowded every night to hear Mr. Varley, while the Bible-readings at the Metropolitan Methodist Church attract hundreds. At a meeting for men only, in the Exhibition building on September 18, there were about 3300 present, and others were unable to gain admittance. On the following Sunday, Mr. Varley preached in the Metropolitan Church, and in the afternoon about 3500 Sunday scholars and their teachers crowded the Dutch Church to hear him. Fully two hundred confessed Christ at the after meeting. Afterwards Mr. Varley went to Wynberg, and preached in the Dutch Church there, returning subsequently to the city and speaking in the Dutch Church. Nearly ten thousand people heard the Gospel that day.

Every night there have been nearly a hundred inquirers, and about half of these profess to accept Christ. Mr. Hannington is at the Y.M.C.A., where he is kept busy dealing with the inquirers who call. Some sceptics and numbers of coloured people have been brought to Jesus, and some Malays (Mahomedans) have been interested listeners. The newspapers at first determined to make light of the work, but it has diminished the attendance at the theatres and drinking saloons, so they cannot ignore it and are opposing in every way. Mr. Varley has received invitations from Natal, Port Elizabeth, Grahamstown, Kimberley, and other places. He proposed to leave Cape Town on October 1.

CLEVEDON CONVALESCENT HOME.—A sale of useful and fancy work in aid of this Home will be held at the public hall, Clevedon, on November 25 and 26. To complete the purchase of the Home £500 is needed. Articles for sale may be sent to Rev. E. Forbes, Elmhurst, Clevedon, who will supply information respecting the Home.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION.—A charming variety, in the way of harvest thanksgiving festivals, was illustrated in the Vinegar Ground Mission, in the City-road, on the 19th inst., when a tea feast was prepared for some of the poor women by two ladies whose absence from home had prevented the customary invitation to a suburban residence. The tables were florally decorated, and the guests spoken to about the value of the harvest; and, before the meeting broke up, an address on "The Harvest of the Wind" (Hosea viii. 7) was given by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Secretary of the Open-air Mission. Mr. and Mrs. Penrose waited upon the party with their accustomed cheerfulness, but the small room was so crowded that it was difficult to move, and we wished that some of the Lord's stewards would aid in providing a larger building. The treasurer of the Mission is the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, 2, Pall Mall East, S.W.

CANADA FOR THE PEOPLE.

By Mr. EDWIN H. KERWIN.

The question that is still agitating the minds of those who interest themselves in the welfare of the poor is, "What can we do to supply willing workers, bread-winners, with work?" How many thousands will suffer severely if we have another hard winter? How heartrending it is to those of us who labour among the poor to hear their piteous tales of starvation for want of work! Thousands who are able to tide over the summer with the scanty pittance they earn, are unable in any way to get through the winter months. How different it is in this grand country, Canada, where, with Captain A. Hamilton, of the East-end Emigration Fund (31, Mile End-road, E.), I have been spending some time in seeing settlers sent out during the past four years by our Fund. Captain Hamilton has been up to Manitoba and the great North-West, and we have been north, south, east and west o Ontario.

The vastness of the country and its capabilities are beyond description. We have seen scores of families whose histories in the old country are most painful to recollect, but with what grateful hearts and praise to God shall we return to the old country to tell of all the wonderful things we have seen and heard. Families who were starving, and in rags once, now with possessions of their own; children, who were wan and pinched, and ready to sicken and die, now rosy and bonny, playing about the green woods and beneath the trees, without a thought of trouble.

I have no hesitation in saying that Canadians welcome the man who is willing to work, though he has not a cent. Many well-intentioned friends of the poor have acted unwisely in sending men out because they have asked for relief, without investigating their capabilities for work. Numbers have thus arrived whon ever worked at home, and never intended to work in the new world. These have made it in some quarters extremely hard for those who mean to do right. I can truthfully say that, with the exception of a few cases of those who fell sick, and some sent to us with recommendations, which ought to have been sufficient guarantee that they were worthy of the support given them, we have been unable to find failures. They may exist, and no doubt do; but although we advertised our presence in the cities, and especially in Toronto and Montreal, no one put in an appearance to blame us for having sent them to the land of plenty.

Let me give a case which will convey an idea of what has occurred over and over again, and which no one can read without thankfulness of heart to God, who has so abundantly blessed our efforts in assisting our poorer brethren. A young man, over three years ago, came to the Great Assembly Hall and told me a pitiful story. He had been out of work some months and was starving. Neither he nor his wife had broken their fast for three days, and everything the pawnbroker would lend upon was in pledge. I gave him temporary relief, and next morning found my way to where he resided. In a garret in St. George's-in-the-East, I found that all he had said was true. In the room was an old table, too rickety to stand straight; an old box turned upside down served for a seat, an old preserve tin can on the hob served to boil water in to make a cup of tea, when a neighbour out of kindness of heart gave them a pinch of tea, which he often did, for it is just what the poor do—help one another. I soon found a Christian lady ready to pay their passage, and supply some clothing for their emigration to Canada.

Now, thank God, we leave the last picture for ever, and draw the curtain and reveal a state of things that I sincerely trust will be the experience of thousands yet who are feeling the pinch of hunger in the old country. A few weeks ago Capt. Hamilton and I took the street car down one of the principal streets in the beautiful city of Toronto, and alighted in front of a good-sized nice-looking house. We went up two flights of stairs, and found on entering one of the rooms on the flat a sumptuous repast awaiting us. The busy bonny wife, with her darling fat baby, welcomed us, and we were requested to be seated. We were then, as we drank our tea, told of wondrous things that God had done for them. The husband earned two dollars a day (£2 10s. a week). They had four furnished rooms—two let out to lodgers. He went out after work fishing in the lake, and sometimes brought home sufficient fish to last them three days. This is the same family I visited in St. George's-in-the-East.

Someone may think this is an extreme case. I assure you it is not. It is a typical one, if you like. I think I have said sufficient to substantiate my assertion that Canada is the place for the people. Here the working man has nothing to lose and everything to gain.

Just a word about the spiritual condition of the people. We have been extremely delighted to shake hands with very many who have become Christians since they settled in this country. We cannot speak too highly of the efforts made by the Y.M.C.A.'s for the spiritual welfare of those coming to their cities. Captain Hamilton and I had the privilege of speaking at several meetings, and also at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, both in Toronto and Montreal, and blessing followed.

Our hearts are full. We can never sufficiently praise God for his great goodness in permitting us to see so much fruit of our work. We beg the prayers of your readers for guidance in the future, that on our return we may make wise selections for the coming spring, and that God may draw to Himself those who are chosen for emigration to this glorious country.

HOMES OF HOPE.

The Church of Christ must be the foremost witness of the mind of her Lord in yearning pitifulness over the erring and lost. Happily, the spirit of his doings towards these wrecked and wretched ones has been caught by many. Great is the blessing which has rested on the "Homes of Hope," and specially in the efforts made for the restoration and future preservation of those who have fallen through their affections, or through over-mastering temptation, and have become young mothers. Details and instances abound in their records, to show that no unfruitful field of labour is theirs; but they long to bring many others into direct co-operation with their most hopeful sphere of Christian work. Who will make these "Homes of Hope" a bridge across the chasm of despair? Who will make them a means of return for one longing penitent to reach the Saviour's feet, to wash them with her tears, and to hear his voice thrilling her sad heart with the words, "Thy sins are forgiven"?

Since the Homes were established 2670 have been admitted; of this number 910 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 292 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent of the others. While inmates of the Homes, the young women are trained in household and domestic duties, with a view to their becoming good and useful members of society. The great object, however, kept most anxiously before the Committee is to afford them opportunities of religious instruction, and to impress upon them the extreme importance of turning to God with all their hearts. The applications for admission are painfully urgent, and the charity is wholly dependent upon voluntary contributions. The Secretary, Mr. William Hornibrook, 4, Regent-square, W.C., will be happy to forward the last annual report.

BIBLE STUDIES.—35.

SONGS IN THE NIGHT.

"In the night his song shall be with me."
Ps. xlii. 8; Job xxxv. 10.

(1) The night of soul-distress.—"Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me" (Mic. vii. 8). "He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake" (Ps. xxiii. 3).

(2) The night of pain.—"He said unto me, my grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me" (2 Cor. xii. 9). Many a sufferer sings in anticipation: "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. xxi. 4).

(3) The night of bereavement.—"Absent from the body . . . present with the Lord" (2 Cor. v. 8). "Sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him" (1 Thess. iv. 13, 14). "The youngest is this day with our Father" (Gen. xlii. 13)—is engraved on a child's tombstone in a Somersetshire village churchyard.

(4) The night of temporal losses.—"Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. The Lord God is my strength" (Hab. iii. 17—19). "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you" (John xiv. 2).

(5) The night of loneliness.—"There is a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" (Prov. xviii. 24). "No man stood with me, but all men forsook me . . . notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me" (2 Tim. iv. 16, 17). "He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5).

(6) The night of defamation.—"Oh how great is thy goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee; which Thou hast wrought for them that trust in Thee before the sons of men! Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: Thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues" (Ps. xxxi. 19, 20).

(7) The night of death. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me" (Ps. xxiii. 4). "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 55—57).

"There shall be no night there" (Rev. xxii. 5).

Streatham. Janet Clark.

SERMON TO YOUNG MEN.—Dr. Thain Davidson preached his monthly sermon to young men at Colebrooke-row Church on Sunday, October 10. He took as his text, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. xiv. 12), and warned his hearers against the varied ways of vice, which entice young men from the way of salvation.

OLD CALABAR, WEST AFRICA.—Mr. Frank Foster, who is pastor of a native self-supporting church at Eyamlea Town, writing to us, says that the church has seventy members. There is also a day school, with nearly 100 scholars, and a Bible-class. God has greatly blessed the work, and there has been several conversions. The members are formed into bands to visit the heathen in the town. A new church has been built of corrugated iron. It is, however, to be lined with timber. Each family has to provide its own seat. At the opening service the building was crowded, and many could not gain admission. The native King was present in State. A number of the natives spoke, amongst them being Prince Eyamba, who gave the ground for the mission. At Qua Iboe, which is seven hours' sail from here, the people want a missionary to go to them, and have offered ground for a house and school.

AT WORK IN CORSICA.

Dear Sir,—The sad description about idolatrous Spain, published lately in The Christian, can be literally applied to Corsica. Christ, the only Mediator between God and man, is almost ignored, and the people are taught that without the intercession of the Madonna no soul will ever be saved. The Corsicans, descending partly from the ancient Romans, partly from the Saracens, still keep up heathen customs. Especially in the south of this beautiful island, the vendetta—fierce enmity and bloody revenge—is carried on among their own families for several generations.

The so-called Culte des Morts, of very ancient origin, is performed by inspired women, called Voceratrices, who chant in poetical language the noble actions and misfortunes of deceased persons, lying in state previous to the funeral. No religion is mixed up with these strange ceremonies. Witnessing such scenes, listening for twelve hours to the incantations and the piercing cries of the afflicted family, carried me back to the times when Roman emperors* had to forbid this noisy usage as a public nuisance, which is even to this day ending in feasting and drinking.

Though nominally Roman Catholics, the Corsicans represent two extremes: bigotry and general infidelity. As a voluntary helper of the MacAll Mission (established here for some time), I have shared the violent persecutions which were intended to put down every Christian effort among the priest-ridden population. Thanks to God, neither large blocks of granite nor rockets thrown into the hall have been allowed to harm us. Now, since the Lord sent us Mr. Mabboux, an evangelist full of power and missionary zeal, these disgraceful scenes are gradually disappearing, because he is able to exercise full control over the audience. Men of all classes, even magistrates and students, flock to the meetings, listening attentively to faithful interpretations of the Scriptures, as well as to the singing, which is a great novelty at Ajaccio. The seed is sown in faith, and already a spirit of inquiry is being manifested among a number of men who have long ago rejected all Divine revelation. Some are deeply convinced of the truth, but fear of man keeps them back from confessing their faith.

During the summer, when the hall is closed, I am privileged to evangelise in different places on the mountains. At Bastelica, a village of 3000 inhabitants (2000 ft. above the sea), I found willing hearts to listen to the Gospel message, as not one man in a hundred attends the church. On inquiry, I got the invariable answer, "We do not believe what the priest says." "But," I added, "your salvation depends upon what Christ says in the Word of God; and if you care to examine the real truth about Jesus, you will find it in this little book." I left them portions in large print, fully trusting that the Holy Spirit will work in their hearts, and lead them from darkness to light.

Though the work is very difficult, yet there are signs of blessing. An educated young woman under my special care at Guagno, read with me St. John's Gospel. After much prayer she grasped the doctrine of "free grace," and at once abandoned her soul to the Lord. In the full enjoyment of a new life, this happy girl is daily experiencing the power of prayer. Another young person, in whom I am greatly interested, one day took her Bible to the convent school, where she was to finish her education. One of the sisters perceived it, threw the precious book into the fire, and dismissed the impenitent girl on account of such a shocking act of rebellion.

At Sartene, a large place built on granite, where the vendetta is in full play, I had daily opportunities of confessing Christ in presence of total unbelievers. It quite startled them to meet —once in their life—a person with deep convictions and assurance of faith through the finished work of our Lord. Witnesses are wanted everywhere, and I pray earnestly that this short sketch may induce Christians (travelling for health's sake) to spend the winter at Ajaccio, where they will find an English church, consul, Swiss hotels, and constant sunshine.

It is intended to open a reading-room for the soldiers, as there are many Protestants here in the barracks. I am ready to devote the evenings to this work. At present my small means are quite exhausted, and I humbly trust that some of the Lord's people will send me help, as £60 will cover all expenses.—Yours truly,

Mission Evangélique, Eliza Stapfer.

BOYS' SCHOOL IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

Dr. Sims has written the following account of how a boys' school on the Congo was commenced, and is taught:—

On the summit of a small hill was built a house of clay with a palm-grass roof. There it was prettily perched on the top, fifteen or twenty feet from the ground, with a wooden ladder to reach it, and large enough to hold eight or ten boys. From the river this house looks lovely, and all the boys like it. Here they take their meals of manioca, stewed fish, palm oil, and potatoes. For three pence a week they keep themselves. They sleep in it on mats, or bamboo frames, only a few inches from the floor. They are fine and happy in it; and far into the night their merry laughter and conversation go on till we have to get up and quiet them. For clothing they have two yards of calico around the loins, and a small print coat. We give them a small blanket to sleep under at night.

Mr. Petterson planed three boards, nailed them together, and hung the board thus formed upon the house wall. On it we wrote copies in charcoal (we had no black-boards or chalk). Round it the boys gathered and did sums till it was too black to do more; then the eldest boy would wash it with sand and set it to dry till the morrow.

Their greatest pleasure is a game at ball with goals and sides, and fine fun they have. When tired they run off and jump into the Congo. They are clever little swimmers, and go far out in races with one another, dive deep, and show their best feats. Later on they sweep up our rooms, make the beds, lay the table, serve us at dinner, remove and wash the dishes, and cook their own food, rest, and perhaps sleep a little, help us in gardening towards the evening time, and finally come in to prayers, sing and hear the Gospel, and retire to their house on the top of the ant-hill.

We have over twenty boys attending it, and twelve or fifteen of them live with us at the station and very rarely go to their own villages. Some of these boys are slaves who live with us through the consent of their owners: most of them are free boys. All of them live with us by choice. We are now able to have prayers with them in their own language. When we have services crowds of people gather and look on in much astonishment.

One poor little slave boy about six years old came many times and begged me to go to his owner and get his permission for the boy to come and live with us. I was very much attracted by this dear little boy and asked him, "Who is your owner?" "Ranangesi." "Where are your friends?" "I have no friends." "Where are your brothers?" "I have no brothers." "Where are your father and mother?" "I have no father or mother; I wish you to be my father." "Where is your home?" "I came from far away: I should like your house to be my home." Poor little homeless, friendless Loleka, I could not resist his entreaties, and went to his chief and got his consent for the boy to come and live here. When he got dressed in a coat and cloth, he came running to me, threw his arms around me, and said, "You are my father and friend; I will live with you day by day."

CHILDREN AT THE SEASIDE.

The keen interest felt by many in the summer services on sands and beach was manifested on Wednesday of last week, when Exeter Hall (lower) was crowded by friends of the Children's Special Service Mission to listen to accounts of work at various watering-places. Rev. E. A. Stuart presided in the afternoon; after praise, prayer, and the reading of the children's portion for the day, he called upon

Mr. T. B. Bishop (Hon. Sec.), who made a statement with regard to the extension of the work. Services have been held, he said, at some sixty watering-places during the past season, while ladies have distributed picture leaflets and loving messages at about fifty other places. In all a quarter of a million of these leaflets have been distributed during the season. While, however, the work has grown, funds have not come in proportionately; in fact, the contributions have been £400 less than last year. There have been many evidences of God's blessing, and it is exceedingly encouraging to find that at least five of this year's preachers were in former years converted at these services. Mr. Bishop acknowledged with much thankfulness the help rendered by many undergraduates from Oxford and Cambridge.

Encouraging accounts followed, by Mr. E. T. Dennes, of Saltburn-on-Sea, Mr. Martin J. Hall, B.A., of Beaumaris and Penmaenmawr, and Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, of Scarborough. The latter spoke out clearly and firmly as to the inconsistency of those who bore the name of Christ indulging in dancing and similar worldly amusements.

Mr. Stuart testified to the good work he had seen in a very small and retired watering-place. In many ways it was an advantage to work in such places, for you could get at everybody. He, then, in accordance with his usual custom, as President of the C.S.S.M., addressed the workers and local secretaries, founding his remarks on the parable of the seed growing secretly in Mark iv. 26—29. There we are taught (1) What we may do and may not do; (2) What we may know and may not know; (3) What we may expect and may not expect; and (4) What sleep may be taken and may not be taken.

In the evening, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard presided, and spoke of what he had seen of the services at Eastbourne. He was convinced it was an agency God is greatly blessing.

A young Australian, now at Cambridge, Mr. A. E. Bellingham, gave a bright and lively account of work at Llandudno; Mr. H. M. Trickett, spoke of Eastbourne experiences; Mr. Arrowsmith urged the importance of seeing after the boys during the Christmas holidays; grand as the seaside services are, they are but the beginning of the work; they must be followed up. Mr. George Banaster told of his experience on board the yacht Kingfisher.

Mr. Josiah Spiers urged the importance of looking well after the little ones. Some of the brightest Christians he knew had been converted at the age of five or six. He then spoke of work at Redcar and Whitby.

Pastor Hubert, of Norway, gave some account of the Rev. E. Payson Hammond's labours in that land; while Rev. W. S. Standen concluded the proceedings with a stirring appeal for more workers and fuller consecration.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—October 31, Mark vii. 24—37; November 1, Mark viii. 1—13; November 2, Mark viii. 14—26; November 3, Mark viii. 27—38; November 4, Mark ix. 1—13; November 5, Mark ix. 14—32; November 6, Mark ix. 33—50.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS AT CAPE TOWN.—Dear Sir,—We are to have a sale of work at Upper Norwood. The proceeds are intended for our Mission at Cape Town among soldiers and and sailors, and also the Y.W.C.A. I shall be grateful for contributions, and if garments for the poor are given, the needy ones of London will be helped as well as the Lord's work abroad. Gifts should reach me not later than November 22.

Yours very truly, M. S. Osborn.

MISS MACPHERSON'S RETURN.

The reception accorded to Miss Macpherson, by the many friends drawn to the workers' meeting last week at the Home of Industry, was most cordial, within the limits ordained by conventional decorum. According to our sister's account, however, the little people who are being gathered under the fostering wing of the institution, were by no means hampered with any ideas of dignity or restraint in tendering her a welcome back from Canada. "She's there!" "she's there!" came from excited hearts, through the medium of as many juvenile throats; and there was much laughing, embracing, and shaking of hands. The gladness was evidently not all on one side. It must have been quite an exercise of self-denial to leave Canada just as the gorgeous glory of the autumnal tints was beginning to unfold itself with the first touch of frost. "But we wanted to get back," said Miss Macpherson, "to our loved work in the dear East of London; and we have rejoiced to see the welcome on your faces and the faces of the little ones."

She is indeed much missed, during those seasons of absence, at the old Beehive and at the Hackney Home; but it was comforting to hear that the work had gone on, nevertheless. Pointing to the group of lads and lasses in the corner, she said that Miss Granger had well cared for them when the other helpers were away; while Mr. Merry had gathered in a few others, making up a tidy family of thirty bairns to welcome back the "mother." This party, by the way, now being trained for emigration in the spring, will be the fiftieth and jubilee band of children that Miss Macpherson will have taken or sent across the Atlantic. Those of them who were at the meeting last week seemed a splendid nucleus; we trust that by the generous co-operation of the many friends of the work, this jubilee party will be the very best and most thoroughly equipped young colony that has ever buzzed out of the portals of the Commercial-street Beehive.

Miss Macpherson had many things to say to us last week. The accumulated store of facts and impressions and feelings received during the byegone weeks, all seemed to be struggling for utterance at the same moment. But in order to be appreciated, our eloquent sister must be heard and seen. She will never even begin to be adequately reported till some genius brings the phonograph into common use; then every syllable and inflection and tone may be reproduced. But the flash of the eye and the emphatic, expressive gesture will still be lost. She led off with Canada, over the length and breadth and fruitfulness of which she expatiated with all the enthusiasm of a prejudiced native. In the course of the evening she exhibited some monster potatoes; she was told that three of such potatoes, off the same field, were enough to constitute a meal for husband and wife, two children, the hired man, and the servant-maid! If that is not a land of plenty, where is such a land to be found? She advised everybody to buy and read the Marquis of Lorne's book, which is now issued as one of the threepenny series of the Religious Tract Society. The opening of the Canadian Pacific line, making an unbroken stretch of iron way from Quebec right away to Port Moody on the Pacific Coast, brings China within six weeks of London. Let nobody be afraid that the space in the Dominion is getting exhausted. The great province of Ontaria is only a little patch on the corner of the map. When some of the boys saw it and noted the vast region that stretches away to the west, all they could do was to exclaim, "Oh—h—h—h!" And that, said Miss Macpherson, was something like how she felt every time she went there. At the Stratford Home she had left Mrs. Merry with only twenty tiny children on hand; all the others were scattered, and comfortably placed in Canadian homes. She told how General Sir F. Middleton had visited the Stratford Home during her visit, and how the stern warrior was moved to tears by the sight of the children, and the affection they manifested towards those who were befriending them. Some instances were given of the encouragements that have been met with in the development of the work. One young man, who now occupies an honoured position in the Church where he resides in Canada, had emigrated his widowed mother and two sisters, one of them a cripple. He is a faithful worker for Christ, speaking about spiritual things to the farmers in the market, and reviving the Sunday-school in his town. In the work at home there are tokens of blessing through the preaching in Bird Fair. Miss Macpherson gave the friends an urgent and cordial invitation to go down to the East and see the Bird Fair evangelising for themselves. She did not encourage Sunday travelling, but all who went down on Saturday would be entertained—the sisters at the Home of Industry and the brethren at Hackney. Many ladies, she said, were applying for work in the East-end. They would be received on payment of £1 a week; or the poorer ones, of 10s. a week. If they were very good at work they would be paid 10s. a week. Here is a fresh field for young ladies who are seeking a mission in life. Among other items with respect to the immediate future, Miss Macpherson said a Home was about to be opened in connection with the work among factory girls. At the next workers' meeting particulars as to locality, &c., would be given.

A most interesting account followed from Miss Stock as to the dispersion of the children in Canada, and her experiences in visiting those who are now in happy homes in different parts of Ontario. A lengthened narrative from Miss Stock's pen appeared in our issue of last week. Among many other points in the life of the children, in favour of the Dominion, she spoke of the absence of temptations to drink intoxicants; such a thing even as a glass of beer is scarcely ever seen on the table of a Canadian homestead. What a painful contrast is the East-end, with its gin-shop at every corner! She asked prayer on behalf of Mr. James Merry, who has suffered extremely from an attack of blood poisoning, but who is now on the way to recovery.

During the evening prayer was made for blessing on a new Home to be opened at Redhill in connection with Miss Steer's rescue work in Radcliff-highway; for work among the Jews in the East-end; and for Miss Henderstrom's Mission to Scandinavians.

Miss Steer, being present, gave a few most touching details of the work in which she is engaged. She invited all her friends to attend her annual meeting at 26, Prince's-square, Ratcliff-highway, on Saturday next, at 3.30 p.m., and unite with the workers in praising God for what He has done through the Mission. Day by day and week by week she was more deeply impressed with the necessity of this rescue work. Only that afternoon it had been her painful lot to receive a poor girl, eight years of age! It was no uncommon thing for them to meet with creatures of very tender years who had been corrupted and led astray. They were doing at the same time what they could in the way of prevention. She could tell the most heart-rending stories; but, thank God, she could also tell of some of the vilest sinners that could have been found in the Highway, now living quiet and happy lives as Christian women. She entreated her hearers to realise something of the evil that was in their midst, but to believe at the same time that none were too far gone for Christ to reach and to save.

BIBLE LANDS AND HISTORY.

A lecture was delivered by Dr. J. Monro Gibson at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, on Monday week, entitled "My Recent Tour in Palestine." Mr. Howard Williams presided, and Rev. James M'Caul, of Montreal, offered the opening prayer.

The lecturer said he was not going to give a narrative of his travels, but merely a few impressions made upon his mind during a journey which lasted about three months. After referring to several countries he passed through, and their connection with the revelation of the Bible, he said one could not but be strongly impressed with the wide extent of the Bible lands. It was not to be expected that God would reveal Himself only in the small country of Palestine. Palestine was the centre of the then known world, and so it was wisely chosen to be the place from which the revelation of God was to go forth to the ends of the earth. It was impossible to have chosen a more central position. God's word was true when He said, "I have not spoken in secret." Jerusalem was a city that could not be hidden. Those who said that God revealed Himself in a corner of the world showed their ignorance of history and of revelation. Jerusalem was a magnificent centre.

Another impression made upon his mind was the inextricable and Divine weaving of God's revelation with the great facts of history, which was so wonderfully seen in the history of the Pharaohs and of Moses being called to be the deliverer of the Jewish slaves at the time when Rameses wielded the most stupendous power over Egypt. It was nonsense to say that the Israelites were set free by any power of their own, or by the force of any evolution of circumstances. It was a salvation from the Lord, and Moses was right when he sang, "The Lord is my strength; He also has become my salvation." This one fact of history broadly demonstrated that the Lord reigneth.

Then, as plainly as it was written that God brought his people out of Egypt, so plainly was it written that He was with them in Palestine. The revelation of the salvation of God was a golden thread which ran through the world's history. Another impression made upon him was by the very beautiful scenery. In giving a lucid description of the various places through which he passed, the lecturer closed with some forcible remarks upon the bearing the Holy Land had upon the history of the world as being the place in which the great work of redemption was accomplished.—Daily Chronicle.

PROTECTIVE AND TRAINING HOME FOR ORPHAN GIRLS.—Miss E. Fidge, who for seven years worked with Miss Sharman, is about to open a small home for orphan girls. Her aim will be to win them to Christ, give them a good plain education, and fit them for domestic service. She will be glad of any assistance, articles of furniture or clothing, &c. Her address is 55, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E.

CAMBRIDGE. — A special after-service for University men was held in Trinity Church on Sunday week at 8.30. The church was quite full, in the gallery as well as elsewhere, and a most solemn and moving sight it was. The address was given by Mr. Moule, of Ridley Hall. The possibility of such a gathering, in the course of ordinary local ministration, is a most cheering indication of the religious state of things. From many sides I hear a very happy account of the Christian tone of a large proportion of the new men. On the other hand, the influences of evil are active; I know of one godly Freshman who, within a few days of his arrival, received three invitations to Newmarket.—Record.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION.—The first anniversary of the opening of the new hall was celebrated on Tuesday week by a social gathering in the hall, Collingwood-street, Blackfriars-road, followed by a public meeting. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. The Secretary read an account of the work of the Mission during the past year, the tenth of its existence. They had been able to meet all their liabilities, except £75 due for alterations, and £50, one of four instalments of a debt of £200. The work of the Mission was very satisfactory, and the meetings were held daily. The chairman in his speech warmly commended the Mission, and promised to give one-half of the £50 due. Several other speakers also addressed the meeting. Brothers T. and J. Young are the Superintendents of the Mission, and their address is 39, Oswin-street, St. George's-road, Lambeth, S.E.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE.*

THIS work consists of a series of discourses expository of sometimes a sentence, sometimes a chapter; it is not a consecutive commentary on each book, as perhaps some may have supposed. Nevertheless, it gives on the one hand a comprehensive bird's-eye view of its subject, and on the other abundance of thought and fact deduced therefrom. There are few books or discourses in which there is so much suggestive thought. The present volume contains Numbers xxvii. and the whole of Deuteronomy. The second discourse is entitled, "Moses ordered to Abarim." It is argued, on the authority of the "Speaker's Commentary," that verse 14 of Num. xxvii. is a gloss, not belonging to the history at all, and importing into the narrative an element which does not belong to it. In this view the death of Moses outside the Land of Promise was no penalty. Dr. Parker asks, "If God were to mark our sins in this way, who could live? If man were to die for one sin, what man would be living?" The death of Moses is regarded as a crowning, not a penalty. We would not diminish by an iota the honour due to Moses' faithful and obedient career; but "he that offends in one point is guilty of all," and Dr. Parker's exposition appears to us to miss the lesson conveyed by the fact that he by whom the Law was given was himself the illustration of its inexorable righteousness. Moses was worthy of all the honour given to him; but when he had done all, he had but done his duty, and, being under Law, the Law exacted the penalty of its breach.

From another discourse we make the following extract, which we earnestly commend to all preachers as a wise and reverent handling of a very solemn portion of God's Word:—

> Are there in any poems made by men such words as these? Tell me if any poet dare write such words: "They gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and of their sores, and repented not of their deeds." "My soul, come not thou into their secret." Some man wrote these words who had seen hell. We lightly utter the word. We try to modify its force and its meaning. We do what we can to mitigate the pressure of that tremendous punishment, which is implied in the use of such a term; but when we have done our utmost at modification and mitigation, there remains this terrible fact, "They gnawed their tongues for pain," and with their gnawed tongues "they blasphemed the God of heaven." They felt their "pains and their sores," but they "repented not of their deeds," and God cannot give way. "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked;" but "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Do not endeavour by any means to make God's hell a pleasure. Do not trifle with the idea of future punishment. Whatever it be, it is the last answer of Omnipotence to rebellious man. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." This is not a question to be argued. It is not a theme for speculation. When logician and speculatist have accomplished their task, there remains the unexplained word—hell!

GERMANY.—This being the Jubilee year of the Kaiserswerth Institution of Deaconnesses, the Empress has sent a "Women's Order of Merit" in gold, accompanied by an autograph letter, to the widow of the late Pastor Fliedner, the founder of the Institution, who is the Lady Superintendent, together with £50 for the Deaconness' work. There are now nearly 6000 deaconnesses occupying 1800 different spheres of Christian and philanthropic activity.

THE GOSPEL IN LONDON.

AN INTERESTING GATHERING.

IN anticipation of the winter's work of the Evangelistic Mission a stirring meeting of Christian workers was held at Kilburn Hall, on October 20, for prayer, praise, and conference. After tea, interesting particulars were given of Mr. Henry Varley's work at Cape Colony, and various other missionary operations at home and abroad. Praise was also given for much blessing with the special mission at Eccleston Hall, and for blessing on the early labours of young converts to spread the Gospel. Prayer was asked respecting the trying condition, financially, of many of the landed proprietors and agriculturists in England and Ireland, which greatly affects mission work; for special Gospel work now being conducted from house to house in many of the villages of Hants; also for special services in Cambridgeshire and at Swindon.

Mr. ABRAHAM WALLIS testified to the good work at Forest Gate, and mentioned the salvationed of a man who was on the verge of bankruptcy through intemperance; of nine boys, all down on their knees together; of a mother and two sons, and of others.

Speaking of the West Kensington branch, Dr. POPHAM said friends there make hot prayers, which are to the point. Before we deal with others we must make sure we have kept nothing back from God. A worker from Malden Hall mentioned the Thursday night children's services there, and joined the same with a request for prayer for the work of the Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. R. E. ASHTON spoke of a mission to the unemployed of London, of whom 3000 were recently gathered together in one week, and 200 a week were relieved at his place of business At the first mission 100 souls confessed Christ as their Saviour. There was much need for God's people to pray Him to guide and control this terrible element of London life.

The conviction was expressed by Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH that Christians have never realised the spiritual destitution of London, with a population increasing by 60,000 or 80,000 a year in the miles upon miles of streets of Greater London, and far outrunning all effort ever made to evangelise it. There never was so much Divine truth in the Churches, but this means increased responsibility. Churches will grow if God be in their midst.

Mr. P. M. CRANE, of Manchester, said the people had become accustomed to special services. Cottage meetings are small means, but have been found very effectual.

Mr. WALLIS said a Sunday morning school of thirty-eight men has been begun at Forest Gate for educating working men to preach the Gospel to their own class. Christian work could not be done without money, and he wished all Christians to feel responsibility to support the Evangelistic Mission, not with a "thank God. it is done for a twelvemonth," but systematically.

Mr. R. C. MORGAN said there is a great deal of preaching which is not Gospel; few professed Christians can give an intelligent statement of foundation truths, and the devil is busy in furbishing up old delusions. Another speaker said the antidote to these modern departures from the simplicity of the truth is more preaching of salvation through the precious blood of Christ.

Dr. MCKILLIAM deprecated preaching over the heads of the people. Intense simplicity is needed. The main causes of the successful work at Blackheath are, real prayer-meetings started and sustained by faith in God, open-air meetings with much singing previous to the indoor service, and a devoted band of sisters who throw themselves heart and soul into the work of the after-meeting, One of these sisters, once a "heretic hunter," is now better engaged in seeking souls for the Master.

Dr. POPHAM, referring to a remark that prayer-meetings were often starving, freezing affairs, suggested that those who attend should test their prayers by inquiry, whether they had received any answers. If not, there is something wrong in their own souls.

Mr. ST. DALMAS testified to the growth of the Blackheath prayer-meeting, and traced this result to simplicity in contrast to dryness and formalism. Mr. MORGAN said most good things begin with individuals. Observation of what God is doing in answer to prayer, keeps the spirit of prayer alive. Prayer for foreign work reacts upon home work.

After another season of earnest supplication, Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH announced that he would be glad to hear from any Christians able to place their time at his disposal for cottage meetings, and exhorted sisters to make a point to attend the prayer-meetings and encourage absentees to come back. All who attended this gathering felt it to be an exceedingly helpful one, and workers are looking forward to much blessing from the God of all grace, upon the winter's campaign. It is intended to arrange for a similar meeting next month in another hall in the West or North-west district.

A MESSAGE FROM LIBERIA.

PERMIT me to thank those who send me packages of your periodical and other good reading. These publications have a twofold value—the good they do by being read, and the good cheer and encouragement they bring, indicating how many hearts are warm and true to God, watching for opportunities of doing good.

Only to-day I heard about a package I had sent to a Baptist preacher in one of the Liberian settlements. He made a public statement last week to this effect: After reading THE CHRISTIAN he came to the conclusion there was a deeper, richer experience in Divine things than what he enjoyed. He went out to a grove, and there on his knees settled the matter, consecrating himself afresh to Christ and his service.

My work is among the heathen who do not sufficiently understand English to profit much by good reading as yet. So I circulate reading matter among Americo-Liberians, many of whom are pressing on to know the "deeper things." The heathen on every hand are begging for missionaries—"Someone to show we de light." The labourers in this vast harvest-field are few, and most of those are wan and weary from overwork in so deadly a climate. Yet

The kingdom is coming, Oh, tell ye the story,
  God's banner exalted shall be,
The earth shall be full of his knowledge and glory,
  As waters that cover the sea.

"Floods of Revival," by Mr. Radcliffe, in THE CHRISTIAN of July 29, found in me a responsive conviction. We should expect, and would realise far greater results, if we complied with the conditions, and believed for and expected results accordingly. God has wonderfully blessed me in health, and has given me access to the hearts of a tribe that was considered by nearly all as inaccessible to the Gospel. I have a large attentive congregation; quite a number that have made a profession of religion, and live very consistent lives.

There is one drawback in work among the Africans: they are not aggressive Christians; they do not make much, if any, effort to bring others into like precious faith. Will your readers pray earnestly that we may have the large results that we may reasonably expect from what God has promised, that the heathen may soon become the inheritance of the Master whom we serve. Much can be done for the redemption of Africa before this year closes. Thousands of heathen children could be gathered into mission schools, and receive Christian training, and in a few years Christian colonies could be planted far into the interior, where the millions sit in darkness; but the mission schools are very few, only here and there, like shreds of light on the fringe of the Dark Continent.

Yours in the Master's service,
Monrovia, Africa, Sept. 23. MARY A. SHARP.

MISSION WORK IN THE EAST-END.

The parish of St. George's-in-the-East forms one of the greatest strongholds of heathenism in our great metropolis. It is notorious alike for physical squalor and moral degradation. The great bulk of the population is of the very lowest class, consisting largely of criminals, fallen girls, and worthless characters. The dim and dingy alleys that branch off Cable-street and Radcliff-highway are haunts of sorrow and starvation, disease and sin. It is almost impossible to truthfully picture in words the misery and degradation which the smoke-stained walls of those grimy dwellings conceal from outside view.

The brutality and ignorance of the neighbourhood is enough to make missionaries shrink from any attempt to evangelise; but here, as in the other dark portions of London, the noble standard bearers of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ have been at work. Various agencies, among which may be mentioned the London City Mission and the Bible Society, have for years been carrying on operations, and have done a large amount of good. It is only within the last twelve months, however, that any really adequate results have been attained in the process of reclaiming; and these results have been procured through the instrumentality of an organisation still in the first stage of its infancy—the London Wesleyan Methodist Mission in the East. The advisability of establishing a Mission for East London formed the subject of a long discussion in the Wesleyan Conference of 1885. Ultimately the principles and constitution of such a Mission, as submitted by a committee, were generally approved, and it was resolved that operations should be commenced as soon as possible. At the Conference, Rev. Peter Thompson (formerly of Redhill) was appointed superintendent of the Mission, and the Wesleyan chapel in Cable-street was constituted the headquarters. In order to be properly adapted to the work, extensive alterations were made to the chapel. The schoolrooms were made larger, and the vestries nearly doubled, while a good reading-room, and a kitchen for preparing soup and coffee and tea, were added. To effect these alterations and improvements some months were necessary, and Christmas was at hand before the regular work of the Mission began.

Mr. Thompson and his band of helpers were not long in the East-end before they found they had a difficult and peculiar people to deal with. They recognised that they would have to adapt themselves specially to the character of the people, overlooking much of the depravity of which they were the witnesses. Above all, it was plain that the religion they would have to present must be seen at a glance, as it were, to be a reality—a religion which could not fail to commend itself to every man's conscience; and that if the Gospel of light and hope, and peace and gladness, was to be carried into that dark region, it must be done in an unpolished, unvarnished, and simple manner.

In this shape then has the Gospel been published, and here doubtless is to be found in a large measure the secret of the wonderful success that has attended the operations of the Mission. The results, so far as can be accurately ascertained, have been the bringing to Christ of 500 souls, many of whom had been regarded as "sold unto sin," and the obtaining of over 800 total abstinence pledges. Many a man, who six months ago was looked upon as a hopeless drunkard, is now the proud bearer of the badge of blue, an earnest Christian, and the head of a once wretched but now happy home.

The efforts of the Mission are not solely confined to the saving of adults. The reclamation of the rising generation forms an important section of the work. There are two bands of hope—a senior and a junior—the membership of which is 800, and the Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, the attendance numbering about 400. It is no easy matter to win those children who run about in the polluted atmosphere of Ratcliff-highway and Cable-street. They have only the education of the public streets, with its unconcealed vice, its oaths and curses, and vagabondism. The work, therefore, among the juveniles is of a very gratifying and encouraging nature, and it is to be hoped it may steadily go on increasing.

Sunday begins with a prayer-meeting, at 7 a.m. The congregation gathers for service in the chapel at 11 a.m.; at three a meeting is held for men only, after which a prayer-meeting, with a free tea, takes place for sailors, which is generally well attended by men of almost every nationality. There are also class-meetings for young men and women, and in the course of the day several open-air services are conducted. At the close of the evening service an inquirers' meeting is held, at which many have been turned from darkness to light. On Monday evenings there are Gospel temperance meetings, at which most interesting and remarkable testimonies are given by converts. Every Wednesday evening a musical evangelistic service is given by members of the chapel choir, and friends from the suburbs, and a goodly number are always present. Two mothers' meetings take place during the week, which are attended by about 260 women. A sewing class for young girls has been established, and has been joined by 120. Many girls are attracted to this class, who would otherwise be in the midst of temptation of the worst kind.

Last month a small house was opened at College Farm, Burnt Ash Hill, as a Home, where young girls are trained for domestic service. Already Mr. Thompson and his co-workers have been the means of rescuing many girls from the curse of a street life, and securing respectable employment for them. Mr. Thompson is anxious to furnish a parlour in the neighbourhood, where young girls may meet in the evenings for spiritual and social benefit; but, as yet, he has been unable to do so for want of funds. He, however, trusts, through some generous-hearted Christian friends, to be able to carry out this project soon. Let us hope he will not be disappointed.

The Dorcas Society connected with the Mission has done good work. A Family Relief Association has been started, and through its agency happiness and comfort have been carried to many a poverty-stricken, cheerless home. A large quantity of old clothes has been given away to poor people. Mr. Thompson is always glad to receive gifts of cast-off garments to distribute among deserving families. Through the kindness of friends at Redhill, Mr. Thompson has had placed at his disposal a bed in the Fresh Air Home at Redhill Common, and the patients sent there, it is needless to say, have been greatly benefited. Visitation work is extensively prosecuted by Mr. Thompson, and his able lay missionary, Mr. Jameson, who are assisted by a large and earnest staff of voluntary workers.

Such is a brief account of the work that has been performed by the Wesleyan Mission in East London. Much has been done, and we are thankful for it, but much remains still to be accomplished. We heartily wish Godspeed to the effort.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.—More than four hundred lectures by the agents of this Society have been held during the summer in the open air, in all parts of the metropolis, with the most gratifying results. Thousands have shown their interest by frequent attendance and fixed attention. Infidels have publicly acknowledged their errors and announced their conversion. Many have declared that they have been prevented from drifting into infidelity. Nearly eighty thousand special tracts have been given away.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—The Mildmay and North London Auxiliary of this Mission celebrated its anniversary in the Conference Hall on the 19th inst. Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and the speakers were Revs. J. H. Shaw, Vicar of St. Paul's, Ball's Pond; P. Williams, his curate; A. Bax, Salters' Hall Chapel; G. A Bennetts, Mildmay-Park Chapel; W. Spenseley, Abney Chapel; and Mr. G. Kirkham. An admirably-compiled report was read by the hon. secretary, Mr. Charles L. Young, which told of much patient labour, and some present fruit to reward the labourers' toil. The earnest labours of these voluntary workers (for this branch of the Mission has more than eighty members) is a cheering factor in the problem of how the masses are to be reached.

THE REPRESSION OF VICE.

A Conference of the members and friends of the Central Vigilance Society on "the work and needs of the society" was held last Friday afternoon at the Church Room, St. Paul's, Onslow-square. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe presided. He said that they were met to consider the best means of delivering the nation from the curse of unchastity. They felt deeply the responsibility that rested upon them, and realised that after three years' work their efforts were but tentative. It was difficult to know how best to destroy the open profligacy and shame, and by God's grace to render our nation moral. They wanted suggestions.

Mr. Stephen Bourne, the secretary, had received letters from the Bishops of London, Rochester, and Bedford, and others, regretting their absence. He described the work of the Society during the past year; referring to a recent case of selling indecent broadsheets in the City of London, he said that the Society made a strong representation to the Home Office, and the sale had been stopped in London, and also in Liverpool, where prompt action was taken. He next referred to the sham registry offices, which decoy young women for improper purposes, and said that the Committee was dealing with some cases at the present time. Then there were applications respecting the inveigling of young girls abroad, the dangers to children, and of the streets. These came before them in increasing abundance, but they needed pecuniary assistance to enable them to deal with them.

Professor Hodgett introduced the subject of "The Press as affecting morality." He said while we could keep indecent prints out of our homes, we could not keep out the papers, which at times contained details that were perfectly disgusting. He had been all over the world, but never found such immoral newspapers. We found nothing of the kind in German, Swedish, or Russian papers. He advocated the starting of a social paper which should not admit such matter in its columns, and urged that when people saw anything objectionable in the papers they should write a strong protest to the editor.

After some discussion Rev. Prebendary R. C. Billing called attention to the necessity of dealing with the influence of immoral parents. One great difficulty arose from the parents of children who had fallen into the hands of others. They could not get the parents to come forward and prosecute, or give the necessary information. Indeed they would often make a compromise rather than come before the courts. They needed a radical change in the law; he suggested that there should be an officer connected with the police in every district, who should take these matters up, and to whom evidence could be given.

Rev. W. St. John Bourne called attention to the fact that when the mother of a child was the only immoral character in the house, the child could not be removed, as the wording of the Act was in the plural. This should be amended.

Lieut.-Col. Everitt introduced the subject of the treatment of immoral men by society, and advocated that they should be treated precisely as women were. This was warmly supported by Mr. Thomas, who likewise spoke of the necessity of more vigorous opposition to the granting of licenses to music halls. In one recent case they had got up a petition signed by 4700 people of all classes, and the license was refused.

The Hon. A. F. Kinnaird then brought forward the question of finance. They needed an increased subscription to enable them to work. The first year of their existence they received £436, the second £343, and this year, to August, they had only received £108. The office of the Society is 13, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

TOULOUSE.—A large hall for the use of soldiers, who are very numerous in this town, has just been opened. Civilians are invited to attend every evening except Sundays.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next week's issue will contain portrait and biographical sketch of Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester.

On Friday morning an advertisement appeared in the papers, offering for subscription stock in the Brewery of Arthur Guinness & Co., Limited, to the amount of £6,000,000, debentures to bear interest at six per cent. On the same day applications were made for stock to the extent of £20,000,000. Three things are manifest: that there is no lack of money; that there is great faith in drink as a safe and profitable investment; and that there are many who have no conscientious difficulty with regard to the drink traffic which is not outweighed by the consideration of six per cent.

Our readers will be interested in the Conference of Christians, ministerial and otherwise, proposed by Dr. Parker in the following letter:—

> NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON EVANGELICAL PREACHING.
> SIR,—I am strongly inclined to organise such a Conference, and to hold it in the City Temple, before the close of the year. Do your readers think the time has come for such a Conference? I propose to deliver an opening exposition and testimony, and then to invite representative members of all Christian communities to follow with such criticism or corroboration as may occur to them. I cannot but think that such a Conference might be so conducted as to do much good. Nothing is to be gained by concealment or reservation, but much by frank and solemn exchange of opinion and purpose. I shall be glad to receive public or private replies from all parts of the country, and all sections of the Church.
> I am, truly yours, JOSEPH PARKER.
> The City Temple, October 21.

Such an opportunity for consultation and mutual information is most desirable and necessary. At present our teachers appear to be drifting nobody knows whither, and words which meant vital truths in days gone by, now mean very little in quantity, and that little is of very uncertain and varying quality. It is most important that men professedly evangelical should explain to and learn from one another what the term evangelical means to them, and to what extent those who professedly walk together are in reality agreed.

Such a Conference as Dr. Parker wishes is called for on account of the duality of mind and teaching which exist. At the meeting at the Memorial Hall, to which some representative Congregational ministers invited Mr. Beecher, he so spoke and prayed as to call forth the unqualified admiration and confidence of the reverend men who entertained him. When he "was engaged in the City Temple in instructing the large audience of clergymen, ministers, and students how to preach, he elicited," says an evening paper, "much laughter and sensation, applause and dissent." The writer adds that, though Mr. Beecher could teach them many things, he could not teach them reverence. We do not understand how the preacher who could use the language we have quoted from Dr. Parker's "People's Bible" (p. 12) could allow Mr. Beecher's statement on that occasion concerning eternal punishment to pass without remonstrance. Yes, we need a Conference that we may discover where we are, and that we may cultivate the old-fashioned virtue of consistency.

Dr. Parker, amongst many other words of truth and wisdom in his latest volume, referring to the words of Moses to the two and a half tribes—"Wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel?"—says:—

> Take the word "Discourage" in any sense, and it is full of meaning. Perhaps a stronger word might have been inserted here—a word amounting to aversion and utter dislike to the idea of going forward. Our actions have social effects. There are no literal individualities now; we are not separate and independent pillars; we are parts of a sum total; we are members one of another. Consider the social effects of certain actions. . . . You have miscalculated your own influence: you have undervalued your own social importance. When men like you do certain things, your doing of them must have an effect upon inferior minds.

We fear that Dr. Parker and a large number of other ministers of Christ have not duly estimated their influence on other minds, or the effect certain to result from their almost unqualified acceptance and endorsement of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher and his teaching. We are far from wishing to speak discourteously of the late visitor to our shores; nor would we desire that the courtesy of those who received him should have been niggardly expressed. But it is one thing to show courtesy to a visitor, and another to commend him, with the weight of trusted names, to English Christians as the great teacher of the age.

The Congregationalists of to-day claim to be the children of the Puritans; but doctrines which the Puritans held more dear than life, and which have always been regarded as axioms by evangelical Chrisians, are ridiculed or denied by Mr. Beecher. The doctrines of original sin, of Atonement (i.e., expiation) by the blood of Christ, and others, vital to the evangelical conception of New Testament truth, are explained by him in such a way as to entirely distort them from the views held by the Puritan divines.

A correspondent notes the following characteristics of the recent Conference at Dublin:—"What were the striking points in this Convention? It was remarkably well attended, more so than in any of those of the last four years. There was a deeply spiritual tone in most of the addresses. The tone of each meeting seemed to be given by the chairman, notably in the cases of those presided over by the Archbishop of Dublin and Colonel Saunderson.

"The number of requests for prayer was unprecedented, and some other arrangement must be made for presenting them than during the short time allotted for this purpose. No Christian man can approve of prayer for the conversion of twenty-two unconverted persons en masse. If we are to pray let it be about some person in whom we are interested, and let it be real prayer. Again: anything that is likely to cause extraneous discussion or create an unseemliness in a Conference ought to be avoided. We ought to have deep solemnity in the perception that we are sitting before the Lord. But, after all has been said, this Convention of 1886 will rank as a very blessed one."

We are sure none will rejoice more than our dear friend Mr. Radcliffe in the letters (p. 19) which tell of not a few beneficed clergymen who have given up their livings and themselves for missionary work in other lands.

Will the writer of the plea for British Guiana in THE CHRISTIAN of October 7, 1886, kindly supply us with his name and address?

We strongly recommend all pastors, teachers, and Bible students to give a careful perusal to Rev. Edward White's masterly address at Norwich on "Handling the Scriptures," published by Mr. Elliot Stock. (6d.)

After years of entreaty, says The Union Signal, on the part of the W.C.T.U. and others, the International Committee of the Evangelical Alliance has consented to set apart one whole day of the "Week of Prayer" for Temperance. The year 1887 will be memorable because of this advance in Temperance history.

A correspondent complained that remittances to missions were sometimes not acknowledged. On the other hand, it is said that often the address is not given, or is insufficient. Friends remitting to societies or missions are kindly requested to write their names and addresses fully and legibly.

A correspondent sends us the following paragraph from The Western Times, of October 20:—

> ENGLISH CHURCH UNION.—Preaching at the annual festival of the Exeter Branch of the English Church Union, held at Allhallows-on-the-Wall, yesterday Rev. N. Z. Birkmyre, vicar of St. Simon's, Bristol, who founded his sermon on the text, "One body" (Ephes. iv. 3), urged the desirability of the re-union of Christendom. He attributed the cause of so many having left the Church during the past 300 or 400 years to set up a new fangled religion, having immense fragments of truth, but leaving out so very much that belonged to the Catholic faith, and, in most cases, losing all the Sacraments, to the schism existing in the Western Church. The Church must gradually throw off the remaining poison of Protestantism before it could be ready for the great re-union. There was no time for resting until every man, woman, and child in England belonged to the Catholic Church, nor until every member of the Catholic Church realised sacramental union with Christ.

Zealous Christians and Protestant papers play into the hands of the papistical English Church Union when they minimise or deny the persistent Romish advance in England, and cultivate philanthropic alliances with Romanists.

We do not think many of our readers will be able to peruse the communication from Miss Steer on page 18, without moistened eyes and a quickening of the pulses of the soul; at least, we hope not. We hope, further, that all who can will heartily respond to her tender and touching appeal for help in saving those of her sisters who are exposed to such terrible perils. It will be seen from our announcement page that her annual meeting is fixed for next Saturday afternoon.

With very deep regret we have heard from Mrs. Josephine Butler of the continued serious illness of her husband, Canon Butler. Writing on October 19 from near Berne, Switzerland, she states that the Canon was lying between life and death. His heart and lungs were affected—the remains of his recent attack of rheumatic fever. We are sure our readers will pray with heartfelt sympathy for these sorrowing friends, to whose devotedness to truth and righteousness this generation is so deeply indebted.

The Eighteenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BOTH LUNGS DISEASED.—CASE of MISS COOPER.

In May last I received a statement of the case of Miss Cooper, residing at Kingswood-lane, near Aylesbury. Through the recommendation of a friend, whose daughter had been under my treatment, she applied to me. Her mother and a brother had died of Consumption. Her own case had commenced nearly six years before, and been slow and sure in progress. Severe cough, with yellow and green and heavy expectoration, occasionally streaked with blood: palpitations, severe pains in chest and side, hectic flushes, loss of flesh, profuse night perspirations, erysipelatous swellings in the feet and legs, and wasting of flesh; all these, and other symptoms, were now manifest. The doctor who attended her reported "both lungs diseased."

It was little more than two months in this case that I heard (July 28) that the patient had got well. "I have recovered from my illness (she writes). Your medicine has done me good."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY,
56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

A striking and encouraging statement appears in The Times of October 12 from Dr. Dawson Burns, as to the Leinster Regiment, stationed at Fyzabad, India, respecting total abstinence. The number of soldiers in the battalion has been about 832. Practically one-third have been abstainers. During a period of two years and a half there were 280 non-abstainers imprisoned, and only 2 abstainers. The former deposited 14,156 rupees in savings banks, the latter 27,028. For good conduct, pay was granted to 21 more who were abstainers than to non-abstainers, and while 9 abstainers were sent to England invalided, 34 were sent of the others.

A letter, which deserves attention, appears in The Record of Oct. 8 as to the present position of Père Hyacinthe. Many authentic facts prove that the Papacy has spared no effort to crush the New Catholic party, and its faithful adherents have had to struggle alone. Father Hyacinthe's house in Paris is a kind of refuge for distressed consciences. As many as seven priests, burdened in mind and body, will come to him in one day, and some will be kept three months. His expenses have been growing beyond his ability, and there is even a difficulty anticipated by him in paying the future rent of his church. Cannot some adequate method of sustaining him in a conflict beyond his strength be devised in Great Britain?

One of the addresses delivered at the opening for the season of the Medical Schools in London would indicate that disquietude reaches just now the medical profession as well as others. Mr. Malcolm Morris discoursed at St. Mary's Hospital on "Mysticism, Scepticism, and Materialism in Medicine." It would appear that, among the younger members of the profession, especially in France, novelties are sought unto in the place of steady work, and that some of these new methods are leading to a denial of human responsibility altogether.

The debate in the autumnal meetings of the Baptist Union on "Recreations" would seem to have favoured a different conclusion from that of the Church Congress recorded by us lately. It was said—and such a fact ought to lead to great searchings of heart—that theatre-going, card-playing, novel-reading, dancing, and drinking were sapping the life of many members of their churches. Happily, the prevailing sentiment was strongly condemnatory of these things.

The four following notes are by Dr. Wylie, and are extracted from his address on "The Papacy," which will be ready this week, price 2d.

"Since the appearance of the paper in The Christian and The Record, The Methodist Times (October 7) has made a vigorous attack, we cannot say on our facts or our arguments, but on our general presentation of the case, and the conclusions to which we point. We submit that a torrent of vituperative words is no answer to an array of undoubted facts. If our statements be true—and we stand by every one of them—we have verily arrived at a critical and solemn crisis, and it is only the part of folly to shut our eyes to it and ignore it. We are persuaded that most earnest Christian men will take a different view of the part it becomes them to act at this hour for their country and their Church. We are in the midst of a great revolution, we are in the thick of a great battle; there is advance, great and rapid, along the whole line of the Romish Apostasy, and along the whole line of our Empire at home and abroad, and we can bestir ourselves not an hour too soon. We do not despair. We hear the voices that still cry, 'The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.' It is not against us only that Rome fights. She makes war on that Great King who sits on the 'Right Hand,' and He will overcome her. The modern Babylon is as certainly doomed as the ancient Babylon was.

"The writer, among other misrepresentations, insinuates that we rely on Acts of Parliament for the upholding of Protestantism. We do nothing of the sort. There is a vast difference betwixt the enactment of pains and penalties and the reckless and wholesale destruction of the legal securities which our fathers have left us. We have not a moment's doubt that the Gospel will as certainly overthrow Papal Rome as it overthrew Pagan Rome. Only let us take care that she do not pull us down with herself.

"The one fact in our paper which this writer has directly denied is our statement that thousands of Protestant children have been drawn into the Popish schools. 'Dr. Wylie,' he says, 'has stated the exact opposite of the truth.' It is this writer who has stated the exact opposite of the truth, as we proceed conclusively to show. The Government Education Reports for England and Wales, 1870-1, p. 400, and 1872-3, p. 192, show that numbers of Protestant children of all denominations are found in all the Romish schools. The Weekly Register, Dec. 6, 1884, notices the Report furnished by the R. C. (Government) Inspector to the R. C. Bishop of Hexham, states of the schools in his diocese, 'the satisfactory item, that there are no fewer than 4447 Protestant children on the school registers.' Upwards of 4000 Protestant children in the Popish schools of one diocese! How many such children must there be in all England! Nor are these Protestant pupils protected by a 'Conscience Clause.' The ruling of the Propaganda at Rome (see Acta et Decreta of the Synod of Westminster, 1874) is that children of other religions admitted into R. C. Schools 'are to be brought up as Catholics.' The Synod of Westminster resolved to act on that ruling, in disregard of the 'Conscience Clause,' in the Education Act.

"We do not lay much stress upon the number of avowed converts; neither do we disregard that consideration. It has repeatedly been stated on both the Popish and Protestant sides, based on official statistics, that from 50,000 to 100,000 perverts, many of them of distinguished rank, have gone over to Rome. The most formidable branch of the growth of Popery, in our view, is its steady advance to political power—power in Parliament, in the Cabinet, in the Privy Council, in Viceroyalties, in places of power and trust abroad; and whenever it shall have seized on the rule of the kingdom, for which it has cleared the Statute Book, then what a crop of converts, now unavowed, shall start up in the open day!"

REV. J. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN have been holding evangelistic services in South Australia. From August 7 to 15 they conducted a successful nine days' mission in the Congregational Church at Gawler.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

The devil has frequently over-reached himself, but he has seldom made a more fatal mistake than when he prompted certain of his myrmidons to shut up John Bunyan in Bedford jail. Like many another of the Lord's persecuted ones, the godly tinker found that, as far as his spirit was concerned—

> Stone walls do not a prison make,
> Nor iron bars a cage.

The bars and bolts might imprison his frame, but his thoughts and aspirations could run holy riot all the same. John might not disport himself on the village green, but he could dream, and that to some purpose. So it came to pass that the very thing that seemed to be so grievous for the servant of God, turned out to be an occasion of joy and gladness to thousands in succeeding generations who should be fast bound in the chains of sin and Satan, but who should find swift and sweet release through the night visions of "the immortal dreamer." While the world standeth, having in it souls heavy-laden with the burden of sin, and pilgrims buffeted by the trials on the way, "The Pilgrim's Progress" will continue to bring deliverance to the one, and speak comfortable words to the other.

Many have been the editions of "The Pilgrim's Progress" that have been issued from the press since its first publication, and probably there will be as many more. The publishers of this paper have just issued it in a cheap and popular form, with a number of original illustrations. The illustrations they have also collected on a broadsheet, combined with The Christian Almanack for 1877, a copy of which forms a supplement to each number of our present issue. Here the reader will be able, almost at a glance, to trace the well-beaten track of the pilgrim from the time when he turns his back on the doomed city, to the transcendent hour when he is borne across the swelling Jordan of Death with the glory streaming down upon him from the further shore. The artist has been happy, we think, in depicting the work of the evangelist—not himself seeking to remove the grievous burden, but pointing the troubled bearer to the Cross where it miraculously disappears. The now happy, light-hearted Christian presses forward, past the lions that can roar but cannot bite, through the revels and allurements of the fair, and a thousand other hindrances, on and on to the delectable mountains, and to the last scene of the earthly career of every heaven-bound pilgrim. In these days we are learning by the engraver's art to make the eye the handmaid of the mind, and of this it seems to us that these illustrations of the Pilgrim's Progress are an excellent example.

THE "THREE WEEKS' WORK" in Paris, which is a mission engaged in sending delicate or diseased children into the country for that time has issued a report containing many cases of complete restoration to health.

CITY LIFE IN JERUSALEM.—During this month, Mr. Peter Mamreoff von Finkelstein, the brother of the well-known lecturess, has given three lectures on the above subject. On the 12th instant, at the Parochial Rooms, Vassal-road, Brixton; on the 14th at St. Leonards-on-Sea; and on the 19th at Park Hall, Sydenham. On each occasion a large audience gathered, which, aided by the brilliant coloured costumes and flowing draperies of Eastern dress, was better able to comprehend the usages of life in the Bible lands, which were explained by Mr. Finkelstein. The lecturer has a commanding and agreeable presence; his delivery is clear, and speaking as he does of scenes amongst which much of his life has been spent, he is able to carry the sympathies of his auditory with him.

CARDIFF CONFERENCE.

October 19, 20, 21.

Our hearts are full of praise to our blessed Lord for the wonderful blessing He has so abundantly poured out upon us, not only during the mission by Mr. Spencer Walton, but also the happy Conference which closed it. He has, indeed, exceeded our most sanguine expectations, and we can but exclaim—

> 'Tis his great delight to bless us,
> Oh! how He loves.

The town has been greatly moved, and Christians of all denominations blessed, while not a few have been induced to offer themselves as missionaries. We had good attendances from the beginning, which gradually increased until the large Park Hall was crowded out and numbers unable to get seats.

Four very important subjects concerning the Christian life were taken up, which made a grand preface to the last day's meeting, on the Evangelisation of the World. The afternoons were devoted to Home and Foreign Mission work, when the claims of China were urged by that devoted missionary Mr. C. H. Judd, and North Africa by Mr. Bridgford, while the Railway Mission was represented by the energetic secretary Mr. D. Spencer, whose power of speech on behalf of the Mission was a marked feature in the Conference. Mr. Spencer Walton also spoke for the Mission, detailing how it commenced through the energy of his brother, Mr. Eliot Walton, who was its founder. The chair was taken by Messrs. J. and R. Cory, who have done so much to further God's work by their liberal donations to all deserving missions.

The chair was occupied, both morning and evening, by the Right Hon. the Earl of Cavan, who not only entered most heartily into the meetings, but spoke with much power. On the first day "The Restful Life or Peace" was the subject. After a few introductory words by the chairman, Rev. Colin Campbell opened up the subject. He urged "the necessity of a very decided surrender—unconditionally to put ourselves into the hands of the Divine Gardener, who will not only keep the garden, but occupy it Himself."

Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, followed, speaking on those well-known words, "Rest in the Lord." "His sufficiency can so fully meet our needs, and is inexhaustible." Mr. Spencer Walton closed. "A Christian life ought to be a restful life. The world will not look at their Bibles, but look at Christians. If restless, what is the outward difference between them and a restless world? Two important lessons to learn: 'Insufficiency in self, but complete sufficiency in Christ.' 'Let the peace of Christ rule in your hearts' (Col. iii. 15). Unbelief will not let it. Have not I to fight? I fight resting in my Captain, his armour, and strength." He closed by an earnest appeal to put all into his hands, and "Rest in the Lord."

In the evening the large Park Hall was well filled, and the singing was led by the Blue Ribbon Choir. The Chairman introduced the subject of the Holy Life, with some blessed truths. He dwelt upon God's purpose and God's provision. He purposes we should be holy, and provides all to make us holy.

Rev. J. Sloan, of Glasgow, followed with some very forcible remarks, well backed up with Scripture; all felt the word was with power, and were drawn very close to the Lord.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse followed. His address was listened to with breathless interest. It was a wonderful attack upon selfishness, and cut deep into many hearts. Hardly a corner but was looked into, and many hidden sins were brought out to be judged. He led us on to our all-victorious Saviour, and closed with a very powerful appeal, resulting in a large after-meeting, at which Mr. C. H. Judd dealt very lovingly but faithfully with the many seekers after holiness, Rev. J. Sloan conducting that meeting. This was a blessed beginning to our three days' Conference.

SECOND DAY.

On the morning of the second day, "The Victorious Life" was dwelt upon, our beloved chairman opening with a blessed note of victory. Rev. J. J. Luce followed, contrasting the wilderness and Canaan experiences of the Israelites, maintaining that the latter is a type of what our present experience ought to be. He certainly grappled with many difficulties, running over many Scriptures to prove his assertions. This and the address from Mr. Judd which followed were remarkably owned of God. He followed up Mr. Luce's train of thought most blessedly, making nothing of man but all of the Lord.

In the evening the large hall was full, about 2500 present, and right from the beginning the power of the Holy Ghost was felt very markedly.

The Chairman's remarks on "Active Life" were most stimulating and encouraging. He was followed by Rev. Colin Campbell. "Power from God" was the key-note of a most helpful address, and true consecration was urged as the first decided step.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse followed with an address few will forget. He was very practical and outspoken, backing up all his remarks by Scripture. He dwelt upon the lives of the Apostles before and after Pentecost, bringing down the truths set forth, in a very homely way, to the present time, and showing how men of mark, however humble or high up in society, are full of God the Holy Ghost. These are the men the infidel fears, and the world stands in awe of, men of power, men of victory, holy men. Oh! if all the Churches' members were such, what a change would spread over the world! He led right on to the after-meeting, which was conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton, the vast congregation, at the close of his address, kneeling while they sang—

> Take my life and let it be.

THIRD DAY.

These two days were a wonderful help to the last; numbers of sleepy Christians had been aroused and received very definite blessing, and at our morning consecration meeting came in good numbers, and with much tenderness of heart. The meeting was characterised by a very real breaking down, and the speakers, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, and Mr. Spencer Walton, spoke with much heartfelt emotion. In the afternoon a similar meeting was held, and many entered the Land of Promise. The meeting in the evening on the subject of the "Evangelisation of the World" was in every way a glorious answer to prayer. The large Park Hall was literally packed with an attentive audience, numbering nearly 3000. After prayer, by Major Lawley, Salvation Army, and Mr. Geo. Hughes, Secretary Y.M.C.A., who supplemented it by an earnest appeal to those present to help on the good work being done in connection with the Cardiff branch, and inviting young men to become identified with the Association, Mr. Spencer Walton gave a stirring address on the duties of the believer, and the source of his strength.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed, vividly bringing before the vast audience the claims of the heathen. Many were moved to tears as the words were lovingly pressed home, "What have you done for Christ? What are you doing for Christ?"—soleman questions asked out of a heart full of true fellowship with the Master.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe followed with a very remarkable address. His heart was too full at times to allow him to proceed. Never before were missions so presented in Cardiff. The people were moved all over the hall by the address of this honoured servant of Christ, and not a few willingly responded to the call for missionaries. Mr. John Cory nobly offered to send them out at his own cost, providing all was in order.

It was late ere the meeting closed, and many lingered to be spoken to; backsliders were restored, and souls saved. It was a wonderful sight to see such a vast congregation so touched, and overpowering to hear them sing Bishop Heber's fine missionary hymn, "From Greenland's icy mountains," &c. Many ministers and others were present, and said it was one of the most wonderful meetings ever held in Cardiff, and the town has been moved to the centre. We closed with, and can only re-echo over and over again, "Crown Him Lord of all."

MR. SPENCER WALTON at CARDIFF.

The fortnight's special mission conducted in the lecture hall of the Cardiff Y.M.C.A., from Oct. 3 to 17, has been a time of much blessing to many. The Sunday meetings were crowded, and although there was a falling off as regards numbers in the week-day meetings, yet great blessing attended them, and many professed to give their hearts to Christ.

The Bible-readings in the afternoons were on "The Christian: his Resources, his Walk, his Victories, his Possessions," &c. Mr. Walton is evidently well acquainted with his Bible, and many precious truths were given out to believers. The Gospel messages in the evening had the true ring about them—repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Some worldly Christians doubtless had a hard time of it, the word to them being, "Cast aside your idols, give up your worldly amusements, and be out and out for Christ." Not a few names have been entered in the inquirers' book, and doubtless many of the churches and chapels in Cardiff will reap the benefit.

Mission and other Appeals.

Lady Catherine Turnour (55, Upper Berkeley-street, London, W.) appeals for help towards raising the necessary money to be invested to pay another Army Scripture Reader, to be called "The New Gordon Reader."

The Howard-street Mission (New-road, Wandsworth-road, S.W.) has been doing excellent work for upwards of thirteen years in one of the poorest districts of South London. Having had a new hall built, £30 is wanted to complete arrangements. Mr. John Soames, Hon. Superintendent, may be addressed as above.

Kentish Town Ragged School.—Commenced twenty years ago in an old workshop in a mews, this work has grown, and there is now a day school and meetings every night, besides the ragged school work on Sunday. The friends wish to open a soup kitchen this winter, and for this purpose need additional funds. Mr. George James, 42, Fortess-road, Kentish Town, N.W., is the Superintendent.

Waldensian Church Mission in Italy.—These missions are crippled in a great measure by a debt of £1600. It was incurred partly by the action of the Italian Government, which resulted in the abolition of the premium on gold, and this involved a loss of £800 per annum to the mission. Efforts are being made to remove the incubus, and last year the Church members, who number 3926, gave £2400 towards the expenses. Subscriptions may be sent to the secretary, Major M. Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

ROMISH TACTICS.—A town in East Prussia has set on foot a converts' fund, which provides a home and board to every apostate Protestant who joins the Romish Church, as well as a gift of about £7 10s. in money. A large number of candidates are anxiously waiting for an opening in the Asylum, which accommodates nineteen persons.—Anzeiger.

Y.M.C.A., IPSWICH.—On Oct. 22 this Association held its annual meeting in the Town Hall, by kind permission of the Mayor. The hall was well filled, and the addresses and Christian songs seemed thoroughly appreciated. Canon Garratt, Vicar of St. Margaret's, occupied the chair. The new general secretary, Mr. W. T. Lea, then read the report and financial statement, which was duly moved and adopted. The Chairman, Rev. W. E. Blomfield, Rev. A. J. Begbie, Mr. H. R. Hughman, and others addressed the meeting.

DISTRESS IN LUTON.—We are now in the midst of great depression in the straw trade, and, consequently, of terrible trial and want amongst the poorer classes, who are dependent for their living upon the staple industry of the locality. To maintain our missionary, afford relief to the destitute, provide breakfasts for poor children, and to carry on thorough evangelistic work amongst this class of persons, we need the assistance of sympathising friends outside. In the past God has given us much blessing. We look for greater blessing still during this winter—money, food, clothing, and hospital letters will be gratefully received.

MORE MISSIONARY NOTES

A CHILDREN'S GIFT.

A CONTRIBUTION of twelve rupees, fifteen annas, and seven pice (nineteen shillings and eightpence in English money) has been sent to the London Missionary Society from Waltair, Vizagapatam. This gift is particularly welcome and worthy of mention. It was raised in small sums by small children in an Indian Sunday-school. Rev. E. Le Mare is training his young Hindu friends to give, and is endeavouring to interest them in the great work of missions.—Juvenile Missionary Magazine of the L. M. S.

HINDU MARRIAGES.

A deputation of native gentlemen waited on Lord Dufferin, urging that marriages under a certain age should be considered illegal. His lordship, while cordially wishing every success to the movement, thought that things were not yet ripe for such a change in the Hindu social system. If Indian reformers hitherto, as a rule, have only talked, their forefathers did not even do that. It required the efforts of a whole generation to put an end to slavery throughout the British dominions. To deliver the woman of India from the thraldom of pernicious customs is a far more difficult task. —Light for India.

THE PUNJAUB.

Dr. Weitbrecht reports an active movement towards Christianity amongst the Chuhras (people of the lowest caste) in the Punjaub. Hearing rumours of a religion which had no respect of persons, but welcomed and elevated all classes alike, they appealed to the missionaries for special instruction. In response to this plea, the women are now being taught, schools have been started, catechists are working amongst the men, and hymns in Punjabi have been composed. The people have taken most warmly to Christian hymn-singing, and have assembled night after night with their rude instruments to be taught to sing and pray. "The music, rude as it is, seems to have brought a colour into their lives which they had not known before." In Fathgarh last October Dr. Weitbrecht baptized some twenty catechumens.

BORNEO.

The whole of British North Borneo is without a single Protestant missionary, neither is there any provision for the spiritual needs of the British residents. There is no reason why this state of things should continue for a single day, except the apathy of the Christian Church. . . . Already several priests are in the field, and finding a good entrance amongst the natives. These are Dyaks, Malays, and Chinese. A friend, who knows Borneo, suggests that mission work might be commenced at Sandakan, where the British merchants reside, and that itinerations by boat and overland might be made to Kudat, Gaya-Papar, Kimaur, down to Labuan. Two men of good constitution, able and willing to endure hardships for Christ's sake, would find noble work ready for them. One of them should be a medical missionary. The Malay language, with a few local idioms, is in ordinary use. The Chinese, as yet, are confined to the coast line. The interior is accessible by boat for long distances. The climate is said to be excellent. Sandakan is free from fever, and has many of the comforts of life, so that there would be no disadvantage, but the contrary, in one or both of the missionaries being married.—Medical Missions at Home and Abroad.

BLIND IN CHINA.

Mr. Murray, the agent of the National Bible Society of Scotland in Peking, has started what we trust may prove to be a great work amongst the blind in China. Having succeeded, with the help of Bell's and Braille's systems, in mastering the Chinese language, and expressing it by dots, Mr. Murray had books printed in embossed character. His first pupil, a blind beggar boy, learned both to read fluently, and "to write with remarkable accuracy within six weeks, and in turn became teacher to two blind men, one of whom could read well in less than two months." To Chinamen it seems miraculous that sightless beggars "should be thus cared for by foreigners, and endowed with apparently supernatural powers. When one was sent out to read in the streets, in company with a native colporteur, crowds gathered round to hear and buy the book. It is evident that the Mission might be greatly aided in spreading the knowledge of Christian truth by the agency of a whole legion of blind readers." A hindrance to this important branch of Mr. Murray's work is the need of providing board and lodging for the beggar pupils. £10 will defray the year's expenses of one man. Friends who may wish to know more of the history of this interesting missionary (in early manhood a humble Scotch artisan) should read Miss Gordon Cumming's account of him in The Mission Record of the Church of Scotland.

GLASGOW SAILORS ASHORE.

The terrible loss of life at sea recorded within the last few days sends a thrill of distress through our hearts, and draws out our sympathy on behalf of the many widows and orphans who are mourning the loss of loved ones. But while we are thinking of the loss of life at sea, it is right that we should be reminded of the dangers to which our sailors are exposed ashore, and which in many cases are even worse than the perils of the deep. Hundreds of sailors are annually lost, body and soul, in our large seaport towns, for want of a helping hand when they come on shore. The temptations which beset them from the public-houses, crimps, and others who seek to rob them of their hard earned money are very numerous, and it is of the utmost importance that every effort should be made to protect them from these dangers.

For many years back the Glasgow Seamen's Friend Society have been trying to do this by means of the Seamen's Institute, which is free to all sailors, in the Broomielaw, just adjoining the Shipping Office and Sailors' Home, and it has proved a great blessing to many. Last year over 100,000 visits were made to it by seamen, and it became so overcrowded that the directors have had to erect much larger premises. It was most difficult and expensive to obtain ground in that neighbourhood, but a most suitable corner site has been purchased at the corner of Brown-street and Broomielaw, and on it a new Seamen's Institute has been erected at a total cost of £7500. On the ground floor there is a large recreation-room, smoking-room, small hall for daily prayer-meeting, and the seamen's chapel is immediately adjoining. The corner shop is fitted up as a coffee tavern, and on the upper floor there is a large reading-room and library, officers' room, room for foreign seamen, and a temporary night shelter for distressed seamen. The premises are most complete, indeed such suitable premises are not to be found devoted to such work in any part of the world.

The buildings will (D.V.) be opened early in December. £5100 have been subscribed towards the £7500 needed, leaving £2400 still required, and the directors are most anxious to open free of debt. Are there not many who will help in this branch of the Lord's work? We look to Him, who has the silver and the gold, to incline the hearts of his servants to give their aid. The great object of the work is to win the sailors from a life of sin to a life of service for and with Christ.

The Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Richard H. Hunter, 27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, will gladly receive donations, or give further information.

LATYMER-ROAD MISSION, Blechynden-street, Notting-hill.—The winter work of this Mission has just opened. On Monday, October 18, Rev. H. J. Weatherhead, of Norland-road Chapel, delivered a lecture upon John Gough, and on the following evening a workers' meeting was held, when about fifty workers met in the New Hall. Dr. J. H. Gladstone, F.R.S, took the chair, being supported by Colonel Petrie, Mr. E. Blair, Mr. Aulay Macaulay, and Mr. Ireson, who gave some very interesting and encouraging speeches to the workers. Mr. Macaulay said that the gross attendances on the Mission amounted to 104,000 during the year, which would give some faint idea of the great work going on among us. Reference was made to the Sunday-school, attended by over 400 children, and one speaker bore testimony to the great attention of these poor boys, and the need of teachers. Rev. R. H. Roberts, B.A., of Ladbroke-grove Chapel, spoke about working unselfishly for God, and Dr. Gladstone brought the meeting to a close with a few words of encouragement to the workers.

A Worker

MESSRS. FULLERTON & SMITH IN MANCHESTER.

These evangelists came to Manchester on October 2, and intend continuing with us until the end of the month. Their work began with a week's Mission in Heyrod-street Ragged School, Ancoats; from thence they removed for another week to Coupland-street Baptist Church; and on Saturday, 16th inst., they began work in the Grant Circus, in the centre of the city, where they will continue until Sunday the 31st. Besides these services they have conducted the noon prayer-meeting at the Y.M.C.A. four days in each week; Mr. Fullerton has given occasional Bible readings; Mrs. Fullerton has conducted a meeting for women only, and Mr. Smith has held three most successful and interesting services for the young, besides giving addresses during the dinner hour at several large works in the city. I mention this long list of meetings that you may see that to our brethren a month's Mission means plenty of hard work.

Very much blessing has attended the Mission up to this time, and we believe the best has yet to come. Mr. O'Hanlon and his energetic teachers in Heyrod-street ragged-school are greatly encouraged by the result of the services conducted there. During the week many signed the Temperance pledge, and many others sought and found the Saviour.

Still more remarkable blessing attended the Coupland-street meetings. During five nights. from Sunday to Thursday, over 100 persons passed into the inquiry-room. Among this number were eleven out of thirty-six workpeople employed by one of the deacons of the Church. Others were children of Church members; and many were regular attendants, and have been the subjects of many prayers. The members can only say what they have had to say so often since the Coupland-street work commenced, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." Little did they think that so much blessing was in store for them, when, at the beginning of the year, many of them contended so painfully against the worldliness which the Baptist Union has so vigorously denounced. But the same God who by that painful experience brought them out from their former fellowship, had graciously provided this most suitable building for them, and has now, through the work of these two brethren, given them cause for deeper gratitude and more hearty praise.

Of the circus work we must write later on. The building was crowded on Saturday to the Song Service; but the almost incessant heavy rain from Sunday to Tuesday rendered it impossible to gather equally large congregations. Last night, however, with even a moderate improvement in the weather, there was a very great increase in the congregation. After every meeting there have been numbers of enquirers; but yet we feel that we are only at the beginning of this greater work. The meetings are full of interest and power. Mr. Smith's silver cornet brightens and sustains the singing, his sacred solos have been the means of opening many a heart; and his well told incidents illustrative of Gospel truth, have arrested the attention of all.

Of Mr. Fullerton's preaching it is impossible to speak too highly. He is intensely in earnest, knows what he has to say, and says it so clearly and forcibly that none can misunderstand. His illustrations are effective and lively, his Scriptute quotations apt and correct, and his appeals full of tenderness and power.

Will your readers join us in praise for what we have received, and in earnest prayer for more? G. W.

Manchester, Oct. 21.

SUNDAY IN THE FRENCH ARMY.—General Boulanger has decreed that Sunday is to be devoted to repose in the army, and that all military service that is not absolutely necessary on that day to be suppressed.

THE RATCLIFF BRIDGE OF HOPE.

I can never speak of God's work in Ratcliff-highway but with a heart full of praise. Our Father has always so lovingly and tenderly watched over us and cared for us. The winter is fast coming, and already there are large demands upon faith, but He who has supplied will still fulfil his word. Our wants will be doubtless many and more varied than ever, for we are becoming a centre in this East-end of London for rescue work of all kinds among young girls, the numbers we actually receive into the house forming but a small proportion of those we influence and help in other ways.

It is necessary at the present time to make known a special need. Five years ago, Betts-street, where our Refuge is situated, was one of the very worst streets to be found in all London, full of shameless open wickedness, and containing thirty-five houses of ill-fame. Now our two houses occupy nearly the centre; a Board-school and playground stand opposite; on one side of us large public baths and wash-houses are soon to be built, and the space on the other side of us has been offered to us on comparatively easy terms.

We have secured it; for my Council saw, with me, we should not let such an opportunity slip. We are paying heavily for small, inconvenient houses, and an open-all-night shelter is really needed close at hand, while we could do very much more towards our own support if we had a laundry, the accommodation we now have being barely sufficient for our family requirements. Already God is beginning to answer our desires, and to send us in help for this purpose. Nothing has been thought of or planned without earnest united prayer, and now our anxiety is in no way to go before God's leadings. We know the work is God's work, and, as it really needs, He will supply.

Our new Report will soon be issued. We have just closed a year of much blessing, but blessing does not mean exemption from toil or from disappointment, or from much heart-ache. I believe God's Spirit is especially working now among our poor outcast girls. Evil is very, very strong, and temptation never stronger than now; but "when the enemy cometh in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall light up a standard against him."

I will not drag to light the sad stories of my poor little children sinned against so horribly, that even before they reach their teens they are becoming baby temptresses—a Nemesis too terrible to contemplate; but in all solemnity I feel we dare not turn away our eyes from facts, nor dream that because we were once aroused the danger is over. We must see that the laws are carried out. I fear there is still a sad laxity and want of courage to act, on the part of those who should be their little sister's keepers.

We hear on all hands, "the times are so bad," and we feel it. We see it in the gaunt, hungry faces of the men and women around us. What is it all coming to? We know not. Perhaps as a nation we are needing the chastisement of even greater calamities to cure us of our self-sufficiency, and to make us confess our national sins, and turn again to the Lord.

Yes, indeed, we can echo the cry. "The times are very bad," and yet it does not seem as if the devil lacks money to work his will. When there is an evil plot to be carried out, funds are seldom lacking. Only this week there has come to my knowledge the case of a young woman, at the present moment placed in the direst temptation, and to compass whose fall no money is spared. £40 at once, besides the flattery and pretended affection, can be no slight temptation to a girl who has to work from early morning till late at night. Oh, how my heart yearns over the hundreds I know who are similarly situated; and I never see a poorly-clad innocent-looking girl carrying a heavy parcel of work home, but my heart goes up in earnest thanks to God for the thousands who stand the fiery ordeal, and remain pure and strong.

We are very thankful indeed for every half-crown and half-sovereign which are sent to us for God's work—joyfully thankful when it is the fruit of sacrifice, as in many instances it is, and which, bringing the blessing of the Lord with it, must make us rich. But when some such little gift comes from dear Christian people, whose houses and surroundings are so pretty, and comfortable, and pleasant, that we know such a trifle would never for a moment be considered in the selection of a bonnet, or the choice of flowers for the dinner-table, or an expensive toy for a poor little over-indulged child—we wonder if they understand what "many claims" mean. It needs money as well as prayers and sermons to save men and women, and unless we give of our own, what really costs us actual sacrifice, we can have very little part in helping to save the world for which Christ died. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor, that ye, through his poverty, might be rich."

We need Jesus Christ's "enthusiasm for humanity"; love to God, which, in deed and in truth, makes us love our brother also; love, which not only does not grudge luxuries that would be hardly missed, but which counts not even life dear, that God's unspeakable gift may be freely shared, and become life from the dead to those who are lost and out of the way.

A PLEA FOR FINLAND.

The province of Finland seems to be so far away that attention is seldom called to it; and yet it is a most interesting country. The population is about two millions, nearly all Lutherans, and the languages spoken are chiefly Swedish and Finnish. All the adult population can read, but there is very little Christian literature, except what the Religious Tract Society has provided within the last five or six years.

There is great need of good periodical literature, and Mr. F. Waldmar Lönnbeck, who is now in this country, has commenced the publication of a fortnightly paper, called Faith and Life. This paper is published in Abo, but has not as yet found a remunerative circulation. It is capable of doing much good, if encouraged. It appears as yet only in the Swedish language.

There is a proposal to get up two weekly papers in Swedish and Finnish, and Mr. Lönnbeck would take charge of the former. It would be very desirable if funds were put into Mr. Lönnbeck's hands to enable him to start this paper with energy, and, at first, to scatter it widely till it becomes known. There is no doubt of success if fairly tried. Mr. Lönnbeck and his wife, who is assisting him, deserve the confidence of those who love the Lord; and that poor country, where there is very little Christian life as yet, would be greatly benefited by judicious aid in this direction.

I have known Mr. Lönnbeck for several years. He is an earnest Christian, and a remarkably powerful writer.

SIDCUP Y.W.C.A.—The fourth anniversary meeting was held on October 21 in the Public Hall. A large number of members and friends sat down to tea, after which a meeting was held, at which Dr. Gritton presided. Mrs. Tate, of Blackheath, Miss Wardrope, and Miss Norris spoke, the latter giving an example of cases which came under her notice as missionary to the Nursemaids' Branch of the Association, of girls being decoyed to foreign lands. Mr. C. Billett, on behalf of the secretary, Mrs. Billett, gave an epitome of the work at Sidcup. Since its formation over 100 members have joined. There is a library and Bible-class, and working meetings are held at which garments are made for distribution amongst the poor.

A MISSIONARY TRAINING HOME,

10a, Drayton Park, Highbury, N.

This house, of which Mrs. Baxter is President, has been opened for the training of young men and women for the mission field abroad, and also for the help of some who need training for home work, and who would value a few months' residence in the Training Home. The time of residence must vary according to the circumstances of each case. It is not intended in any way to supersede or interfere with any existing Missionary or Training Institutions; but only to be one of many to meet the increasing need of young persons of both sexes who feel the call to devote themselves to the Lord's work abroad, and do not know what steps to take, or how to secure the Bible knowledge and experience in practical Christian work and soul winning, which are so essential to a successful missionary.

The course of study is essentially Biblical; the Word of God takes the foremost place; all other studies, whether of Christian doctrine, science, language, &c., take a second place. Full opportunity for house-to-house visitation, open-air, and other evangelistic work, is afforded: two Mission Halls being worked from the Home. As a knowledge of comon things is necessary in some uncivilised countries, and missionaries to such lands will need to turn their hands to everything, each student takes some part in the housework, and in any gardening, carpentering, &c., during hours appointed for that purpose, All students who are accepted must first come on a month's probation.

Rev. R. Turner Sole, who, for five years has been engaged at Chalk Farm and Harrow in training missionaries for the foreign field, has kindly given his services, without salary, as honorary secretary, and made himself mainly responsible for the classes. Miss Bernard, who has given the use of the house, and Mrs. M. Baxter also take part in the course of instruction as voluntary workers. Young people of either sex, over twenty years of age, who have a deep, steady conviction that God is calling them to work among the heathen, and who are willing to trust God for temporal needs, may apply to the honorary secretary, Rev. R. Turner Sole.

PRESBYTERIANS AND EVANGELISATION.

An important Conference of the London Presbytery on Evangelisation was held on Tuesday week, Rev. W. Harris in the chair. Dr. Donald Fraser read a paper on "Hindrances to Success in Evangelistic work." The paramount condition of success, he said, was that all those engaged in the work should have a single eye to God's glory. Congregations should throw their souls into the work. then hindrances would disappear. Mr. Robert Wales, in opening the discussion, said the Church was only beginning to look at evangelistic work. No congregation, was, however, worthy the name of a living congregation unless engaged in the work. Mr. Pope favoured free seats. Rev. H. M'Intosh thought the leading ministers should undertake occasional missions.

Mr. Robert Whyte hoped that the whole spirit of the Church would speedily rise to this great subject. While they gave with their whole hearts to missions to the heathen abroad, let them, he urged, not neglect the heathen at home. Dr. Dykes strongly advocated the providing of fully-equipped mission churches, in which specially ordained evangelists, aided by Christian laymen, should carry on continuous aggressive work, occasional special services being held to gather in the harvest. Rev. R. Taylor and Dr. Monro Gibson took part in the discussion, which was well sustained, and the Conference seemed destined to mark the dawn of a new era in evangelistic efforts so far as London Presbyterianism is concerned.—Christian World.

CROYDON Y.M.C.A.—Mr. T. Shuldham-Henry has been conducting a series of important and much-prized Bible-readings at this place, on Thursday evenings, during the present month.

Letters to the Editor.

PROPHESYING.

DEAR SIR,—I have read with some interest, Mr. Judd's remarks upon Female Ministry, though I fail to agree with his conclusions. I will not trespass upon your space unnecessarily, but will leave the general question, no doubt a difficult one to others, but there is just one point that strikes me very forcibly, and it is this, that Christians in trying to get rid of the obvious sense of 1 Cor. xiv. 34, by attributing to the word lalein, a meaning different to the reading generally accepted, invariably ignore the fact that the Apostle has used the same word all through the chapter, and it can hardly be supposed that he would employ a word already used some seventeen or eighteen times in one sense, and apply it in a different sense in the one instance referred to. The Greek language is not so poor as that.

Whatever lalein means, the women were forbidden to do it (34), and the prophets (29) permitted to do it; and, as if to prevent mistake, the Holy Ghost has also added, "let them keep silence." Women no doubt have a noble ministry to perform, but not in the assembly gathered at the Lord's table for worship.—Yours faithfully,

C. ASHTON.

DEAR SIR,—The word lalein occurs upwards of 280 times in the New Testament. In more than 240 places it is translated to "speak," in about eleven to "say," and about the same to "talk;" to "tell" and to "preach" each about six times, and to "utter" three or four times. But in no instance is it translated to "chatter," and a glance at some of the passages in which the word occurs will show the impropriety of such a translation.

It is constantly used of our Lord, as "He spake many things unto them in parables;" "while He yet talked to the people;" "and He preached the Word unto them;" "I that speak unto thee am He;" "These things have I told you;" "never man spake like this Man."

Again, in Heb. i. 1, 2, "God . . . spake in time past . . . hath in these last days spoken." In Rev. x. 3, 4, "Seven thunders uttered their voices," &c.

In the chapter under consideration, 1 Cor. xiv., the word actually occurs twenty-four times, and is always translated "spake." In ver. 3, "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men;" ver. 29, "Let the prophets speak two or three."

It would be easy to multiply quotations, but these are sufficient for those who allow the Word of God to speak for itself.—Yours faithfully,

T. B. MILLER.

BENEFICED CLERGYMEN WHO BECAME MISSIONARIES.

SIR,—You ask for information as to beneficed clergymen who have gone out as missionaries. A notable instance was J. W. Knott, who gave up the valuable living of Eastlieu to accompany Mr. French to India. Mr. French himself was another; also, Messrs. Blackett, Hooper, Maddox, Arden, Bellamy, Barry, Allnutt, Frost, Stone, Greaves, Newton. I have no doubt many more. A few of them gave up their livings on going out for a second time, having retired and taken livings at home, and being constrained to return to the missionary work; but none the less were they beneficed clergy who gave up their livings for missionary work.

These are all from the records of the C.M.S. I believe the records of other Church Societies would show many more instances.—Yours truly, Roxeth Lodge, Harrow. JAMES STUART.

SIR,—I would only give one noble instance of heroic self-sacrifice which we in Lowestoft had before us just two years ago. It was not indeed a "beneficed clergyman," but a Lowestoft curate, a Cambridge man, whose prospects were as bright and promising as any young minister's could be. One day, in October, 1884, Bishop Hannington came to Lowestoft and asked Mr. Fitch if he would go out to Africa with him. In two days came the answer, "Yes," and in three weeks he sailed as the Bishop's chaplain, leaving behind him an aged father—the well-known Vicar of Cromer—and a large family circle. For a nature such as Mr. Fitch's this was a tremendous wrench—only God knows what it cost him; but he never hesitated, because he said those words—

> Love so amazing, so divine,
> Demands my soul, my life, my all,

eemed burned into his soul.

Your constant reader,

A LOWESTOFT CLERGYMAN.

SIR,—In my own limited experience, I know of several. The late Bishop Steer, of Central Africa, gave up his "living" to be a missionary, and two of my own personal friends gave up their "livings," one in Ireland and one in Scotland, and are at present labouring in the foreign mission field. Such cases I have no doubt can be and will be largely multiplied.—I am, yours faithfully,

Edinburgh. W. M.

DEAR SIR,—I would mention two (and I am sure there are many more in our beloved Church). (1) The son of a rich man, who refused his father's offered gift of a "living," and went out to India—his wife died from real hard work. I have known of many a privation cheerfully endured for the love of the poor dying souls round them. (2) I clergyman who gave up much more than a "living" to devote his life to mission work amongst the poor coolies, spending the most of a large income in his Master's service.—I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,

Newnham-park, Plympton. I. W.

U.K.R. TEMPERANCE UNION.

THE fourth anniversary meeting of this Union was held last Friday evening at the Holborn Town Hall. Mr. H. Tennant, General Manager of the North-Eastern Railway, presided. The proceedings were opened with singing, and then Rev. G. Howard Wright offered prayer.

Mr. C. E. TRITTON said on behalf of the great travelling public he appreciated the great strides which temperance and total abstinence had made amongst railway men. He believed in taking high ground on this question, and if it was rightly undertaken and carried out in the true spirit, it was a distinct work for the Lord Jesus.

Mr. H. C. THOMPSON, the Secretary, read the report. He said that steady progress had been made during the year. Two new societies had been affiliated—York United (Midland, North-Eastern, and Great Northern Railways), and Selby and District (North-Eastern Railway). The total number of branches in the union was eighty-three, thirty-one of which were on the Midland Railway, the numbers of members was 10,012, compared with 7497 in 1885, being an increase of 2515. Several conferences had been held, and had proved very beneficial, but not much progress had been made with regard to libraries, few of the branches having the necessary funds. Books would be thankfully received at the offices, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster. The receipts were £279 10s. 3d., and the expenditure, £221 2s. 2d.

The CHAIRMAN in his speech emphasised the importance of bringing up their children as total abstainers. Messrs. C. Brooker, T. J. Clevely, H. Tedbury, and G. Wrightson also addressed the meeting.

BELFAST Y.W.C.A.—The annual meeting of this Association was held on October 14, in the Association Hall. Rev. Dr. Hannay presided. After Rev. George Shaw had offered prayer, Miss Ewart (Hon. Sec.) read the report. During the past eleven months 101 members had joined. There are a library and reading-room, an employment agency, which are open every day except Saturdays; boarding-house and Bible-classes, all under the care of Miss Marston, the lady superintendent. The financial statement showed a balance of £29 3s. 7d. in hand. Addresses were given by Mrs. Pigott and Miss A. Smyley. In the evening a social meeting was held in the Exhibition Hall, at which Rev. John M'Ilveen presided. A large number of ladies were present, and after tea the Chairman gave an address; subsequently Miss Ewart, Miss Smyley, and Mrs. Pigott also addressed the assembly.

OBITUARY.

REV. T. T. KILLEN, D.D.

WE regret to announce the death, in his sixtieth year, of this devoted minister, who for nearly twenty-five years has been the pastor of Duncairn Presbyterian Church, Belfast. On Wednesday, the 20th inst., he conducted the prayer-meeting, and passed away the following afternoon, the cause of death being a clot of blood in the heart. He edited The Evangelical Witness for four years, and his "Sacramental Catechism" has passed through several editions, and been republished in America.

THE LIVERPOOL "CABMAN'S BISHOP."

Last Thursday there passed to his rest, full of years and of ripe experience in Christian mission work, Mr. Edward Sunners, long engaged in the duty of evangelisation among the cabmen of Liverpool, and known to a large circle of friends as "The Cabman's Bishop." He was a great favourite with all the Liverpool cabmen, and had great influence with them. He was never slow in preaching to them in homely language the truths of the Gospel, and was the means of bringing many a cabman to a knowledge of the truth. He died at his residence, 39, David-street, somewhat suddenly and quite unexpectedly, after only a brief illness; but no more beautiful or characteristic close of life could be recorded, for he was found on his knees in the act of prayer. Some interesting particulars of his life are given in a chapter called "Happy Ned" in John Ashworth's "Strange Tales from Humble Life."

A SERVANTS' HOME for respectable girls between the time of leaving one situation and entering upon another, has been opened at Bank-buildings, 435A, Norwood-road, West Norwood. There is also a Registry Office, and a room where servants may spend their evenings. Rev. W. Fuller Gooch gives a Bible-reading on Prophetic Truth on the first Tuesday in each month. Mrs. Hodge, 14, Deronda-road, Norwood-road, S.E., is the secretary.

MISSION AT GLASGOW.—Mr. C. King and his wife have held meetings every night (Saturdays excepted) during the past fortnight in the Lyon-street Free Church. On Sabbath evenings the church has been filled, and large audiences have gathered together during the week-nights. Mr. King has succeeded in attracting the careless masses who cannot be reached by ordinary methods of Christian work, and Mrs. King has helped to increase the interest of the meetings by her singing and speaking. Their work has been much blessed here, and few, we think, are better adapted for reaching the careless masses in our large towns and cities.

REV. DAVID BROWN.

THE UNITED CABDRIVERS' GOSPEL TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION was started about two years and a half ago. Since that time a considerable amount of good has been done; about 600 pledges have been taken in connection with the meetings, and deputations of cabdrivers have addressed about 150 meetings. The Committee are anxious to be more extensively useful during the coming winter, and are ready to send out deputations to address meetings in any district of London. Some of your readers may be able to assist us in organising such meetings, or to help pecuniarily those who do the more active work. WYNDHAM A. BEWES.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS IN SIMON'S TOWN.—Some months ago, mention was made in these columns of a project for establishing a Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Simon's Town, South Africa. A few weeks ago three soldiers came to their pastor, asking whether a beginning might not be made in a humble way, urging as a plea, "There is nowhere to go to but the public-house." Fortunately a room in a small iron store, at the back of same premises in the main thoroughfare was available for the purpose of a reading-room. In this a modest start has been made, but the accommodation is altogether inadequate. An earnest appeal is, therefore, made for help towards acquiring a suitable building. The promoters are driven to appeal for this help outside, as their community is very small and poor, and overburdened with the tax of supporting its ministry and school. Communications may be addressed to Rev. Ellis J. Williams, Simon's Town, South Africa, or to Rev. R. Walker, Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, E.C.

[We hope this place of refuge for the well-disposed soldiers and sailors who sojourn in Simon's Town may speedily be provided].

The Book World.

STORY BOOKS.

The cry is, "Still they come." Here is quite a budget:—THE BELLS OF DUMBARTON. By LUCY LINCOLN MONTGOMERY. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. Good, wholesome reading throughout. The story is a most pleasant one, and the author writes with far more strength and originality than is generally found in this class of book.—EVA GRANT'S ESCAPE. By Mrs. H. H. B. PAULL. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stonghton. Every girl who reads the story will say, What a happy escape! Mrs. Paull has written for our elder girls, and discourses wisely of the evil effects of ungoverned temper, too much wine, and an inordinate love of money. The moral of the story is an excellent one.—EYES TO THE BLIND. By C. BIRLEY. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A splendid book for the boys. Denys is a real boy, just such a brother as sisters delight in—and the touches of humour, flashes of wit, and sweet, quaint names in the story will make it acceptable to all readers.—GOLDEN LINKS IN A LIFE CHAIN. By E. TRAVERS EVERED POOLE. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Certainly a book for the elder girls, since it enters into the Purity question—fallen and falling sisters; temperance; dancing; Christian work; and many other things that belong to our real life. As Mrs. Poole is the writer, this is sufficient guarantee that each of these subjects is well and wisely treated, and in the most womanly way.—ALLURED TO BRIGHTER WORLDS. By Rev. ROBT. HARDY BRENAN, M.A. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. A bracing, happy, loyal story about the goodness of God, and the beauty of life, and the glory of love. Not a dull page in it. There is no plot, no thrilling narratives, no startling adventures—but it is full of good things, new and old.—LIVING IT DOWN. By LAURA M. LANE. 3s. 6d. Partridge & Co. A beautiful story, beautifully told, of a girl brought up for sixteen years with and by a loving Christian mother, in ignorance of her father's existence, for that father is under the brand of shame. Her struggles, her triumphs, her resolute adherence to the will of God, and her final reward, make up the charming book.—LOW IN A LOW PLACE. By EMMA E. HORNIBROOK. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. Altogether a different class of story, less natural in its plot and treatment; but in every way healthy in tone, wise of purpose, and carefully written. It is a story of family life of the most helpful and refreshing kind. —A SAILOR'S LASS. By EMMA LESLIE. 1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. The oft-told tale of a child saved from shipwreck, brought up by kind foster parents, and proving eventually to be a near relation, ending, as a matter of course, with virtue rewarded, and all made happy.

The following are also published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co.:—UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS WITH HIS NEPHEWS, by E. J. HARDY, M.A. (2s.), cannot fail to do the nephews good, and all others who will listen to the wise and practical lessons that Uncle John teaches. A first-rate book to give to any lad who is beginning to think and act for himself. —HIGH AND LOWLY, by ELLEN LOUISA DAVIS (2s.), is dedicated to the writer's Bible-class, and will interest a wide circle of readers among both the "high" and the "lowly."—FIVE THOUSAND POUNDS, by AGNES GIBERNE (2s.), is written in the authoress's usually bright and racy style; it teaches, in a way that will not be easily forgotten by the readers, some very important lessons on the use and abuse of money, showing how powerless riches are to give happiness except when used as a sacred trust from God.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

This publishing house have favoured the young readers of their publications with the following new books:—Will's Voyages, by F. Frankfort Moore (3s. 6d.), is a tale of stirring incident and adventure thoroughly well told. The Adventurous Voyage of the "Polly," and other Yarns, by S. Whitchurch Sadler, R.N. (3s.), is another book full of the wonders of a seafaring life. These "yarns" having appeared before in the Boy's Own Paper, it is sufficient to say that the favour they met with on their first appearance assures them of a welcome in this handsome volume. Crooked, by Helen Shipton (2s.), is a very thoughtfully written tale, which will, we think, be helpful to a large class of honest doubters, whose hearts are tried by the mysteries of Providence. Josiah Hunslet's Reward, by Rev. E. N. Hoare (2s. 6d.), is a story full of improbabilities, and with no very perceptible moral. The Dawn of Day (vol. for 1886, 10d.) contains short, pithy papers, full of interest and instruction. This little volume will be most useful to Sunday-school teachers. Pictures and Rhymes for Holiday Times (2s.) is a delightful nursery gift book that will make the eyes of our little ones sparkle with delight. Robinson Crusoe, by Daniel Defoe. Illustrated with 48 chromo-lithographs and water-colour drawings (3s. 6d.). Our old friend never appeared in a more becoming garb. The pictures are a new attraction; the story itself has been considerably altered—we will not say improved—but young people generally will not stop to think of that. The Little Vagabond (1s.), by Miss C. S. Macquoid, is a little book that will maintain the interest of the young people while they follow the fortunes of Checco, and at the same time will teach them something of the value of kind words and actions. Loss or Gain? (1s. 6d.), by the author of "A Hero Poet," gives the history of an ambitious lad, to whom an accident was the means of lifting him from a self-centred existence to the joy of living for others. Jack Davie's Inheritance (6d.), by Miss F. B. Milne, gives the arguments in favour of the Establishment, wrapped up in a story of village life.

The British Weekly, a Journal of Social and Christian Progress, is the title of a new high-class penny paper to be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. The first number will appear the first week in November.

THE LORD COMETH. 1d. S. W. Partridge & Co. This booklet, by the authoress of "Joyful Service," treats of the Lord's Coming in an undogmatic manner, which is refreshing. Written for those who have neither time nor opportunity to read large treatises on prophecy, it marshals the great facts of the Christian hope under three heads: Watching, Waiting, and Working, and points the reader to the Word of God for all information. A useful little book for distribution.

ALMANACKS FOR 1887.—We have received several sheet almanacks, each of which has its own peculiar excellence. THE FIRESIDE ALMANACK (1d. 7, Paternoster-square), besides its daily texts arranged topically, has a portrait of Queen Victoria, and quotes the appropriate text, "Thou shalt hallow the fiftieth year." THE CHURCH MISSIONARY ALMANACK (1d. Church Mission House, Salisbury-square) contains a number of groups and portraits, chiefly of native workers connected with the Mission. THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION ALMANACK (1d. 31, New Bridge-street) is intensely nautical, and besides the daily texts, gives us a sketch map of that part of the Thames which its operations embrace, some appropriate illustrations, and a tide-table. The Religious Tract Society send their PEOPLE'S ALMANACK and CHILD'S COMPANION ALMANACK. They will commend themselves both by the amount of information, and the number and beauty of the illustrations they contain. The latter has a list of the International Lessons, and also of the Readings for the Scripture Union.

BOURNEMOUTH.

"THERE are no little sins, for there is no little God to sin against." So said Captain Dawson in his address at Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, last Sunday afternoon. Many other striking remarks and apposite illustrations were given in speaking of the rebellion of Absalom and the father's appeal to the captains of his forces—"Deal gently for my sake with the young man," and his subsequent anxious question, "Is the young man Absalom safe?"

Here is a bright and lively meeting from three to four of a Sunday afternoon, attended by an audience of a thousand, largely consisting of young men, with an overflow meeting in the Y.M.C.A. Why do not the churches learn a lesson? In all probability there will be many conversions at this afternoon meeting during the coming winter, partly because the meeting is distinctly with the object and expectation of winning souls, and also because those who are already anxious seek places where they expect to find definite guidance.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE.—The Paris correspondent of The Daily News telegraphs:—A Hebrew scholar, M. E. Ledrain, has published the first volume of a new translation in French of the Bible. It includes the Book of Judges, the two Books of Samuel, and the First Book of Kings. The work is to be complete in nine parts.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission at the Queen-street Wesleyan Sunday-school, Chester-road, Hulme, Manchester, from Oct. 31 to Nov. 5.——For blessing on special services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Girlington Mission Hall, Bradford, Yorkshire, from Oct. 30 to Nov. 8. ——That God would revive his work in connection with the Lewis Y.M.C.A., and guide with respect to a projected mission for that purpose.

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.—Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, Secretary of this Mission, writes:—"I leave England for a six months' tour in India, in the interests of the lepers, on November 5, and shall be very grateful if your readers will remember me and the work in prayer. All communications should be addressed as formerly to 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh, where they will be fully attended to, and where also all monies will be received."

THE GOSPEL AT FAIRS.—During the first week in November the largest fair of the year will be held at Brecon, South Wales. Business and so-called "pleasure" attract thousands of visitors from all parts of the country, and scenes of folly and wickedness abound. For the first time an evangelist of the London Open-air Mission is coming to preach at the fair, and friends at a distance could greatly assist in the good work by sending tracts, booklets, &c., for distribution, to the Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Brecon.

DISTRESS IN ACHILL.—DEAR SIR,—Some time ago you made an appeal on behalf of the distress in the island of Achill, Co. Mayo, Ireland. My sister and I once worked there for a short time by Lord Cavan's invitation. The poverty there was very great, and they must, indeed, need help. We are hoping to send them a parcel next month; if any friends would send relief, either in clothing or money, I would gladly receive and forward it.

39, Park-lane-terrace, (MISS) L. A. GREEN.
Albion-road, Stoke Newington.

WATFORD Y.M.C.A.—An inaugural meeting was held at the Watford Coffee Tavern on the 20th instant. There was a good number of young men gathered, and, after tea had been served, Mr. W. Owen, one of the honorary secretaries, took the chair. Mr. R. Burn (Secretary, Aldersgate-street) gave an address, in which he recounted the origin of these Associations, and encouraged the members to do personal work for Christ. Mr. Colin Taylor and the Chairman also addressed the meeting, and called attention to the Sunday afternoon Bible-class and the Thursday evening meetings, which were arranged.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—A large number of Sunday and Ragged-school teachers assembled at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday week. Rev. C. H. Spurgeon was announced to give a special address; he was, however, too unwell to be present, and his place was taken by Rev. James Spurgeon. In a statement of the work of the Union, it was said that in London alone there are 190 buildings where ragged-school work is carried on by day and by night, and in which 50,000 children are gathered. Mr. J. Spurgeon addressed the teachers, basing his discourse on Mark iv. 38. He urged them to more earnestness in dealing with these neglected children, and impressed the needs for habitual prayer.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 31.—2 CHRON. XIV.

The order of the events of this chapter should be noted. (1) HEARTY OBEDIENCE (2—5).—"Asa did that which was good and right, &c."—He put away evil, he sought the good. This is the solid foundation for all that follows.

(2) PEACE (5—7).—"We have sought Him, and He hath given us rest on every side" (7).—"The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever" (Isa. xxxii. 17). "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him" (Prov. xvi. 7).

(3) THE TRIAL OF FAITH.—Sooner or later trial tests the gift of faith. A schoolmaster's work has only just begun when the scholar has learnt and apprehended the general principles (or rule, as it is called). The harder work is to acquire skill in applying that rule to all sorts of examples. Hence the many hard and puzzling sums set for the exercise of the scholars. So the general lesson of faith, learnt through the Word and Spirit, must be supplemented by the application of the great principle to the many and varied difficulties of actual life. In his discipline the Great Teacher gives a large place to exercises.

(4) THE TRIUMPH OF FAITH.—This is to be connected with the foregoing obedience, for true faith is impossible, except to the submissive. Disobedience murders faith. If Asa was now great in faith, it was because he was, first, thorough in his obedience. Faith is vision; and the pure in heart only shall see God.

Asa's triumph may be analysed thus: (1) The Vision of Faith. Lord, it is nothing with Thee to help, &c.—This vision was simple, sublime, and satisfying. (2) Trust, or the Repose of Faith. We rest on Thee.—The will, acting with the illuminated mind, produces trust, and trust brings repose. (3) The Activity of Faith. In Thy name we go, &c.—The more they were assured of God's help, the greater their readiness to fight. Faith's activity is linked with faith's repose, just as the vigour of a tree depends upon the undisturbed possession of the soil allowed to its roots. (4) The Blessed Refuge of the actively obedient, trustful, and spiritually-minded man. Let not man prevail against Thee.—He boldly links himself to God, and identifies his interests with God's. He hides in God, and is safe. (5) God's response to his servant's trust. So the Lord smote the Ethiopians, &c.—It was complete and glorious, as it always is when we leave Him room in our lives.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1.—2 CHRON. XV.

3.—Now for a long season Israel, &c.—"Rather, 'Many a time hath Israel been without the true God.' Israel here is used generally for the whole people of God; and the reference is especially to the many apostasies in the days of the Judges (Judges iii. 7, 12, iv. 1, vi. 1, viii. 33, x. 6), which were followed by repentance and deliverance. Without a teaching priest.—The Israelites had never been without priests of one kind or another; but there had been occasions when none of their priests taught them the true doctrine."—Sp. Com.

7.—Be ye strong, &c.—"Great resolution and indomitable energy would be required to persevere in face of the opposition his reforming measures would encounter."—Jamieson. The removal of Maachah from her dignity of queen-mother—a dignity of peculiar value in an Eastern court—must have called for an enormous effort of will and courage. In all this Asa is a spiritual hero.

12.—They entered into a covenant.—"Solemn renewals of the original covenant which God made with their fathers (Exod. xxiv. 3—8) occur from time to time in the history of the Jews, following upon intervals of apostasy. This renewal in the reign of Asa is the first on record. The next falls three hundred years later, in the reign of Josiah (2 Kings xxiii. 3; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 31). The third in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. x. 28—39)."—S. C.

17.—The heart of Asa was perfect all his days.—Not sinless: see xvi. 2—10, 12; but free from idolatry.

19.—There was no more war until the five and thirtieth year, &c.—Chap. xvi. 1 tells us that Baasha began the new war in Asa's thirty-sixth year. Yet from 1 Kings xvi. 8 we learn that Baasha died in Asa's twenty-sixth year. The "Speaker's Commentary" suggests that there has been a corruption of a figure, and that we should read (19) "in the twenty-fifth year," and (xvi. 1) "in the twenty-sixth year." This would allow ten years of peace following Asa's victory over Zerah, and would bring Baasha's attack to the last year of his reign.

This chapter reminds us of the power of God's word, by pointing out (3—6) the misery and degradation that came when there was no teaching priest; but even more so, perhaps, by showing to what boldness and patience and zeal in reformation Asa was stirred by the message of Azariah.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 2.—2 CHRON. XVI.

This is a chapter to be read with humility and prayer. It tells of the grievous fall of a great man near the close of a splendid life. Further, it tells how he failed through lack of that very quality which hitherto had made him great. He had conquered gloriously by faith: now he fails ignominiously through unbelief. In the greater trial he had overcome: in the lesser, he is beaten. Neither his great and wonderful experience, nor the knowledge and godly habits acquired, are sufficient. He falls when man might have thought him safer. Well may each one pray, "Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe." There was no doubt a previous preparation for this fall. Perhaps he had slipped into the habit of resting on his great achievements, and of thinking much of himself. Just as his early obedience had braced and prepared him for the war with Zerah, so now the growing spiritual lassitude born of self-complacency had weakened him for this later trial.

This story reveals the desperate mischief wrought by unbelief. It led Asa to a tremendous and needless expense (2), prevented him from enjoying a most brilliant double victory over Syria and Israel combined (7), and brought him war, and not peace as he had expected. Worse still, it drove him into a fearful antagonism to God, and into most desperate sin against Him (10); it led to such a tone of mind that he treated some of his subjects with injustice and cruelty; and it led to further unbelief. We are apt to deal tenderly with unbelief, as though it were only a frailty, and we were to be pitied for it: rather let us execrate it as sin, yea, as the parent of sins. Let us fear it, and fight against it to the death. Nothing is said about Asa's repentance: we are not free to say that, therefore, he died impenitent. It is far more likely, we think, that the vessel reached port, battered, but safe.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 3.—2 CHRON. XVII.

3.—He walked in the first ways of his father David.—"The Septuagint, and several Hebrew MSS., omit 'David,' which has probably crept in from the margin; for David's 'first ways' are nowhere else contrasted with his later ways. The real meaning is that Jehoshaphat followed the example set by his father Asa in his earlier years."—S. C.

4, 5.—He sought the Lord, and walked in his commandments.—Note the connection between communion and service, between the personal seeking of, and intercourse with, God, and the doing of his will. "He sought the Lord, and walked in his commandments." Therefore the Lord stablished the kingdom, &c.—Once more Ezra points out how certainly true success will follow true service.

6.—His heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord.—I.e., he was emboldened to yet nobler service, was greatly encouraged. If we would do strong work we too must be strongly encouraged. We must be cheerful and bold in the service of God. "He never makes much use of discouraged men."

7—9.—The princes were, doubtless, the overseers who were responsible for the religious education of the people; but the priests and Levites were the actual teachers. "There is no reasonable doubt that this 'book of the law' was the Pentateuch."—Sp. Com.

14—18.—The "Speaker's Commentary" has little doubt that these numbers have been corrupted by copyists. It gives several very weighty reasons: this among others, that "they imply a minimum population of 1480 to the square mile, which is more than three times greater than that of any country in the known world."

THURSDAY, NOV. 4.—2 CHRON. XVIII.

We should ever admire the wonderful faithfulness of Scripture biography. The last chapter shows us Jehoshaphat in his greatness, wisdom, and prosperity. This describes him as clearly when he is falling from his usual nobleness through a propensity to worldly alliance. These plain statements of good men's mistakes teach, not humility and watchfulness only, but also holy independence. We see David leading off in one wrong direction, Solomon in another, Asa in a third, and Jehoshaphat in a fourth, and so are warned to follow no man implicitly, but to prove all things by God's word.

7.—But I hate him, &c.—A striking instance of the awful folly which determined opposition to God always brings, even to the wisest. It was worse than childish to hate the prophet for foretelling evil that must come. It would have been much more to the point to have hated the sins that made these evils necessary.

12, 13.—We do well to note Micaiah's grand martyr spirit. He was being fetched from the horrors of an Eastern jail to the presence of the King, whose favour meant liberty, and whose frown might involve torture and death. When told to speak a pleasant message, he answers, with the dignity of a true man of God, As the Lord liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak.

FRIDAY, NOV. 5.—2 CHRON. XIX.

2.—Shouldest thou help the ungodly, &c.—"The Speaker's Commentary" reminds us that from the standpoint of mere worldly wisdom Jehoshaphat's alliance with Ahab was most wise and prudent. The power of Damascus was growing fast, threatening the independence of both Israel and Judah. "Her possession of the highlands of Gilead was a standing menace, no less to Judah than to Israel. The cessation, therefore, of fratricidal wars between the Ten Tribes and the Two, and their close union against the common enemy, must, to mere worldly politicians, have seemed eminently fit and proper." The one only objection to this course, viz., the desperate irreligion and idolatry which reigned in Israel, was one of little moment, except to a truly godly mind. To others it would seem like the quibblings of a narrow spirit. These considerations make Jehu's rebuke the more remarkable and weighty. They show us that loyalty to God must ever be the first consideration, and that no dangers, and no plausible policy of expediency, can ever excuse an ungodly and entangling alliance. "Love not the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." This chapter joins the story of wandering from God told in chap. xviii. to the glorious history of chap. xx. by a chain of three links. These are, reproof, repentance, and restitution. God's reproof through Jehu was received submissively, and so it wrought repentance. Moved by this repentance, the King laboured to undo the mischief of the past. His people had to some extent lapsed from their full loyalty to God. To bring them back the King spared no pains. He travelled through the whole land, established courts of justice, and exhorted men everywhere to seek the Lord. He could not have prepared himself and his people better, had he known what a trial awaited him in the near future. This chapter is a telling illustration of the text, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord. See Deut. i. 17; Eph. vi. 6, 7; Col. iii. 23, &c.

SATURDAY, NOV. 6.—2 CHRON. XX.

6—12.—And said, &c.—"Jehoshaphat's appeal is threefold: (1) 'Art not Thou the true God—omnipotent, and so able to help us?' (2) 'Art not Thou our God, who hast given us this land, and so art bound to help us against invaders?' And (3) 'Art not Thou the God especially of this place—the Temple—and so bound to help those who pray to Thee here?'"—Sp. Com. The union of reverence and holy boldness that marks this great petition, is very remarkable. Its power lay in the strong grasp the King had on God's covenant, and the thought of his faithfulness; for men never fail to move heaven when their appeal is to the covenant of God. And yet, perhaps, the appeal of weakness, we have no might, &c. (12), with which the prayer closes, is as mighty in moving the fatherly heart of God as anything in the prayer. Woes are powerful advocates for those whose hope is in the glorious pitifulness of God. We may see here exemplified God's usual method of answering prayer. That answer was immediate (14). It came to faith, not to sight (14—17); it was a new promise and encouragement. How often, when we cast our burden on the Lord, does some promise start into view, having about it such a remarkable adaptation to our need, and such a solidity, that we feel that God has already answered us personally and fully. Next, the spirit of faith was given, so that the Divine promise became everything to them, and the danger nothing in comparison to it. God gave them a Divine gladness and courage, so that they rose early next morning, and went to meet the foe, singing as they went. In themselves they were as weak as ever; no hint had been given them as to how they were to be delivered. It was enough that God had spoken. They go forth to the enemy marching to the music of joyful praise. When they begin their song—the song of faith—God begins to work (22); and soon, the answer, which hitherto had been visible only to faith, is revealed to sight. When seen, it is found to surpass their highest expectations. "O Lord God of Hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in Thee!"

ON THE DEEP SEA.

FIVE YEARS AGO a visit paid to the North Sea Trawling Fleets proved, by God's Providence, the commencement of a new and happier epoch for the Deep-Sea Fishermen. Until the year 1881 thousands of our countrymen had toiled—not only in all weathers, at all seasons, and in daily perils of their lives, but —in complete isolation from all Christian or moral influences.

TO-DAY seven Mission Smacks cruise in the North Sea, serving as Church, Dispensary, Temperance Hall, and Club.

Two of these vessels were equipped at a cost of £4,550, and presented to the Institution by generous donors. The remaining five were originally private property, and merely lent for missionary purposes, and although a considerable portion of their purchase money has been defrayed during the current year, a sum of £6,000 still remains to be cleared off before they are free from mortgage and registered in the names of Trustees as the unencumbered property of the Mission.

Moreover, SEVEN VESSELS CANNOT MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF TWELVE FLEETS, and all persons on shore who revere our beloved Queen (which every one DOES) and sympathise with the storm-tossed smacksmen (which every one OUGHT to do) are invited to contribute towards a special fund, to be styled the "Queen Victoria Purchase and Endowment Fund," in order that these Mission Smacks may be sent forth as at once a Memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee and as Heralds of Mercy from the King of kings, ministering healing and comfort to the bodies, and peace and gladness to the hearts, of the fishermen.

Sums received for this object will be paid to a special Deposit Account opened in the names of Trustees at Messrs. Gurney & Co.'s Bank, Great Yarmouth, and at Messrs. Lloyds, Barnetts and Bosanquets (Lim.), Lombard Street, E.C.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

Trustees: The Duke of GRAFTON, K.G.
Sir EDWARD BIRKBECK, Bart., M.P.

Office: MISSION TO DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN, Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

No extra payment required under the Institution's Policies after this date (May, 1886), on account of Occupation or Foreign Travel or Residence in any part of the World (always excepting risks in time of war).

Solicitor—Francis Howse, Esq., 3, Abchurch-yard, E.C. Consulting Actuary—Ralph P. Hardy, Esq.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1835:—

Years.	Temperance Section.		General Section.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to

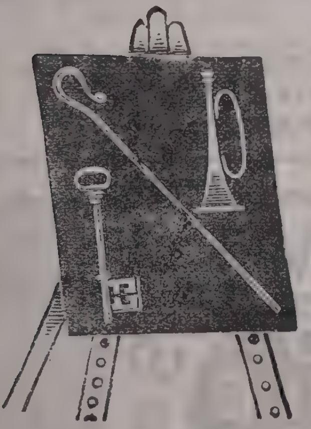
CHILDREN'S MEETINGS

AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.

BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings, which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."
Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"In 'BIRDS OF THE BIBLE' we have pleasant chats about some of the birds referred to in Holy Writ, with good illustrations and a coloured frontispiece. The volume is nicely got up."—Christian World.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."
Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

REV. F. B. MEYER, LEICESTER.

TO a large and growing circle, the remarkable labours and unique success of the subject of this sketch are known. The very many who have received blessing through his ministry of lip and pen, or by means of the philanthropic efforts he conducts, need no introduction to the kindly face we present to our readers. But that others may share the blessing that flows from this beloved servant of the Lord Jesus, and receive the help and stimulus the writer has enjoyed by converse with him, and by observing his manner of life and methods of work, we give this account to our readers. We venture to write it down as a very safe prophecy that, if the Lord Jesus tarries so long, the aroma of the memory of F. B. MEYER, who is as yet a young man, will live in the next generation, as a stimulus and comfort to many hearts. We have seen very much of Church, Sunday-school, and other Christian work on both sides the Atlantic and on three Continents, but to our mind Melbourne Hall and its pastor stand quite alone.

We narrated, in a recent number, of Mrs. Reaney, that she did not remember the time when she did not love and trust the Lord Jesus, and could not fix the time when she was born again. This brought upon us some severe criticism, as though we had ceased to assert the need of conversion. Nevertheless, it is also true of Mr. Meyer that he cannot remember the time of his conversion. The love of God broke over his heart with the dawn of thought. He was born of godly parents, and he was, from his earliest years, breathing in the sweet and wholesome atmosphere of prayer and love. As far back, too, as memory reaches there was the desire to become a minister of the Gospel. This was fostered and strengthened under the ministry of Rev. Dr. Brock, of Bloomsbury Chapel. He also was influenced and moulded by the friendship of men like James Sherman, Samuel Martin, and Baldwin Brown, who were frequent visitors at his early home.

(From Photograph by Messrs. W. Rowe & Co., Leicester.)

As a young man, he obtained invaluable experience in a city business house. To this time in his life we may perhaps trace much of that keen, quick knowledge of men which he possesses, and which is one factor in the success that attends his extended and varied Christian enterprises. We were with him one Monday morning in his prison-gate work, and observed this, as one by one he rapidly dealt with the considerable number of cases of discharged prisoners that day. He left business pursuits, and entered Regent's Park College, to receive special training for the ministry; there also he took the B.A. degree of London University.

In 1869 his ministerial life began in Liverpool, where he became assistant-minister with Rev. C. M. Birrell, of Pembroke Chapel, whose name is a household word in many an English home. His refined and cultured and deeply-spiritual ministry had a profound effect upon the heart and life and style of the co-pastor. The personal friendship of this eminent minister was one of the choicest gifts God ever bestowed upon him; it partook rather of the relationship of father to son, and only closed with his lamented death.

We now approach a most interesting period in Mr. Meyer's life, in which, through the providence of God, he was closely connected with the beginnings of one of the mightiest religious awakenings this dispensation has witnessed. In April, 1872, he became pastor of the pretty Gothic Baptist Chapel of York, where he enjoyed a happy and successful pastorate, having the joy of seeing the Church membership greatly increased, and of proclaiming the glad tidings so dear to his own soul to congregations that filled the edifice. In the spring of 1873 Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey paid an ever-memorable visit to this country. As many of our readers know, the two men who had invited the evangelists from America—Rev. W. Pennefather, of London, and Mr. Cuthbert Bainbridge, of Newcastle—had both passed away before their arrival. Being anxious, in these circumstances, to set their faces northward, they accepted an invitation to York, extended to them by Mr. G. Bennett, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of that city—an invitation that had reached them when on the point of sailing for England. Here they laboured for several weeks, and the tide of blessing soon began to rise. Mr. Meyer was one of the first to welcome the evangelists, and one of the first also to share in the blessing that attended their labours. The meetings outgrew the chapels in which they had been held, and were transferred to Mr. Meyer's, where they continued for a fortnight, with ever-increasing results. Mr. Meyer entered into the work with all the ardour of new-born zeal and unction, and it is a simple fact in his history that that was the beginning of a new epoch with him, the effects of which are manifest in his ministry to this day.

In 1874, Mr. Meyer entered upon the pastorate of Victoria-road Church, Leicester, left vacant by the death of Rev. Dr. Haycroft. The condition of the industrial classes of that manufacturing centre pressed heavily upon his heart, and in 1876 he resigned his charge, and set on foot a movement which, while not interfering with any existing church agencies, should yet be a contribution towards the solution of the vexed problem of reaching the great masses which stand aloof from our places of worship. Just at that time the Salvation Army was employing methods that seemed to him unnecessarily sensational; he was convinced that aggressive Christian effort, conducted along certain lines which he had in mind, would achieve a permanent success, by striking the happy medium between the two extremes of church conservatism and "Army" sensationalism.

The noble pile of buildings known as Melbourne Hall, whose dome is seen from afar as the town is approached, is a standing witness of this effort, its net-work of institutions, and array of earnest workers, and thronging congregations, have all grown up about this man of God in a few short years.

Melbourne Hall is a large octagonal building, whose audience-room is capable of holding 1400 persons, and from the time of its opening, in June, 1881, it has been crowded each succeeding Lord's day, the aisles being filled with chairs. The hush in this large congregation, and its attention and responsiveness, are remarkable. The present membership is over 800, and still on the increase. The seats are free and open, by which class distinctions are abolished, and the poorest enabled to occupy any seat they are in time for. Mr. Meyer's ministry is strictly evangelical, and has been fresh and interesting because of its spiritual power, extreme simplicity, and expository character. On Sunday evenings he is continuously pursuing the study of some Old Testament Book or life. The present subject night after night is "Jacob." One of his discourses appeared in our columns last week, and we hope to give others in succeeding issues. He preaches, standing on the platform, with only a book-rest at his side, and quite without notes. His style is free, unconstrained, and direct, and is marked by great simplicity, united with a certain effective chasteness of diction and action, and with yearning earnestness, suggesting the possession of much reserve power, and all penetrated with a spiritual unction which may be felt but not described. Here is surely an instance which goes to prove that the culture that will attract the educated may be combined with the simplicity which wins and holds the attention of the untaught.

While the great congregation, entirely adults, crowd the auditorium, several hundred young people (children in the morning, and youths and maidens at night) form a separate assembly in the largest of the many rooms of the adjoining "Robert Walker Memorial Schools," erected by Mr. Theodore, Mr. Ralph, and Mr. Robert Walker to the memory of their father, who was a greatly beloved manufacturer of Leicester.

There are 2300 scholars in the Sunday-schools. Mr. Meyer himself superintends them. Over 200 teachers aid him in this department. The most recently organised of these schools is one for tramp children.

There are many meetings of a religious and educational character held on week evenings; also a band of hope and temperance meetings. There are open-air and mission services, lectures, foreign missionary gatherings, classes; a coffee and reading room, &c., so that the building is never closed. Thus something is always on foot to occupy those needing new interests and ties, to replace such as they are about to break.

Mr. Meyer has also for four years worked personally, morning by morning, a prison-gate mission, by which he has come in contact with some five thousand discharged prisoners. These have been breakfasted on coming out. Many have signed the pledge. Many are now leading God-fearing lives, and may be met with in all parts of the town and county in positions of trust. This work led to his instituting a firewood factory for giving employment to the most promising cases; also a working boys' home, known as "Providence House," where destitute and friendless lads are received, clothed, temporarily employed; in time, situations are secured for them. Here Mr. Meyer may be found in the early morning conducting daily family prayer with his lads. The institutions are supported by the unsolicited assistance of Christian people.

Mr. Meyer has written some little books on Christian life, temperance, and other subjects,* which have attained a large circulation—one not less than 87,000. Worship and Work is the appropriate title of an ably edited monthly, which is beginning to make itself felt beyond the confines of the local congregation. Our brother's faith claims for its future a large place in stimulating Nonconformist churches to wiser methods of work, and especially in leading believers into a clearer perception and firmer grasp of the provision made for them in Christ.

Time fails to trace that which remains to be mentioned, the marked spiritual lifts he has from time to time received, whereby he has gained his present vantage ground of blessing, and in which is to be found the secret of his strength; for he is one who habitually walks with God—who finds and enjoys in Christ day by day all needed rest and solace, and who is evidently "endued with power from on high." Mr. Moody doubtless contributed wise and direct methods of reaching and dealing with souls, and fanned his zeal into a burning flame. At the Oxford and Brighton Conventions he first learned to know the claim that God has over the entire nature, and the keeping power of Christ. But, though deeply convinced of the Scripturalness and beauty of these truths, it was reserved for the visit of Messrs. Stanley Smith and C. T. Studd to Melbourne Hall, in November, 1884, to give them a great accession of spiritual power, which has been again and again renewed, notably at successive Mildmay and Keswick Conventions. Out of this experience sprang the little book, "Seven Rules for Daily Living," which has been greatly owned of God. He holds and lives out these higher truths with all Scripturalness, having neither the terminology nor the errors of doctrine that have marred much so-called "higher life" teaching.

He manifestly rejoices to see the tide of power and blessing setting strongly toward certain sections of the Established Church; but he is also desirous that the Nonconformist bodies should not sacrifice their spiritual power at the shrine of mere intellectualism. We believe God has fitted him, and is calling him to go forth from time to time, as he can leave his well-organised local work, to other churches, and seek to unfold the privileges and power stored up in Christ. He is eminently fitted for this, as he is not in the lead of any "school of the prophets," and has not the "Shibboleth" of any party, but has so yielded himself to God as to have had his own spiritual life and individuality developed under the genial quickening of the Spirit through the Word.

AN APPEAL FROM THE VILLAGES.

"AH, sir! we dreads the winter nights; they be so long and dreary, and there never is nothink hardly a-goin' on. It's all very well for people as has got plenty of books and sich like; but we ain't a got nothink but the same old uns, and we knows them a'most by heart."

These and such like words have rung in our ears for many a day, till we felt determined to do what we could not only to help the villages in our own neighbourhood, but nearly a score in other places known to us, by establishing a library in each. Will your readers look upon their bookshelves, and see what they can spare or sacrifice in the shape of sound, safe, and religious books. In all sorts of ways foul literature is being sold even in our villages, and yet all our village folk love sound reading, if they can get it. This is a way that many may help the work of God without its being any extra drain upon what may possibly be an already severely taxed purse (except it be the trifle for carriage, which friends will gladly prepay, I am sure). Blessed as are the pages of THE CHRISTIAN to its regular readers, they would be more so if, remembering the great need of our villages, they would hunt up a parcel and transmit to us without delay.

While we are desirous of securing bound books, yet there may be many who could send us unbound periodicals, which would help us in distribution. Please send direct to

S. WATSON, Evangelist.

GOSPEL MISSION TO DEAF MUTES.—In 1858, an unsectarian work called the South London Mission for the Deaf and Dumb was commenced to provide these unfortunate people with Scriptural instruction. Services are held, conducted in the "sign" language, and employment is provided for some, while others are assisted to obtain work. A bazaar and exhibition of work done by the deaf and dumb is to be held at the Peckham Public Hall, from November 23 to 25, in aid of the funds of the Mission. Any articles for the benefit of these deaf mutes, of whom there are said to be five hundred in South London, may be sent to Rev. E. Abraham, 29, Clifton-crescent, Asylum-road, Peckham, S.E., who will also supply further information respecting the Mission.

* SEVEN RULES FOR DAILY LIVING. WHY SIGN THE PLEDGE? BELIEVERS' BAPTISM. THE LOST CHORD (S. W. Partridge & Co.). THE PERILS OF YOUNG GIRLS (Dyer Brothers).

MASSACRES AT UGANDA.

Dear Sir,—Fearful persecution of Christians has again broken out in this country. People have been brutally murdered, clubbed to death, slowly roasted alive, shockingly and shamefully mutilated; beaten, hunted, persecuted, afflicted, tormented, killed by the score; the survivors, to the number of perhaps two hundred, are in hiding for their life. Will you give publicity to this appeal, which we, as Christ's messengers here in Africa, make to Christ's people in England? What they do, they must do promptly, ere the fire break out again with renewed fury. The following is nearly a copy of what I have written to our society—the Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square, London:—

Let Christians bring their whole weight to bear upon the Government to secure an understanding with the chief of this country (Uganda), that Europeans, travellers, traders, and missionaries shall have free ingress and egress to and from the country; that people, for adopting Christianity, shall not be liable to be done to death with every circumstance of sickening cruelty. Let Christians in England consider that these African Christians are a living part of a living Christ—a living Christ's living body, mutilated, dishonoured, burned. This is not only the wail of the Macedonian heathen for help, but it is the agonising cry of a crucified Christ. Christians in England are strong, are many, are rich, are powerful. Have they not often thought that, had they been standing in the Pretorium, they would gladly have interposed their own bodies between the Saviour's body and the lash? Can they, then, calmly hear of the cruelties perpetrated upon Christ's people here, and not make a mighty effort to put a stop to them for ever? "Half-crowns and halfpence for the 'poor blacks'!" What? Are they not bound to us in the very body of Christ? For Christ's sake, let your response be far more than pity or a passing sigh!

Who can read, in Bishop Hannington's last journal, that woeful story of an heroic heart crushed and broken with the cruel treatment and the weary prison, without being deeply moved? But this comes far short of the anguish which has been suffered by these poor blacks for the Master's sake. I would say it most tenderly for the sake of the dead, but if Bishop Hannington had heard that the white men in Uganda had been murdered, would not he have waited a few days more to receive confirmation of the news, or a definite contradiction of it? But all he heard was that the "poor blacks" had been done to death, so he did not think it necessary to wait for any definite news about them. Only five days after his start our letters reached Zanzibar, with the strongest warnings to avoid the very route which he took, and which ended so disastrously for himself and his porters.

I do not claim for black people such a high degree of intelligence or of excellent qualities as for white races, but I do claim that they are the same kind of being. My heart is hot within me for the wrongs of these brethren. May God kindle such a righteous indignation in the breasts of English Christians that they will never rest till this awful wrong is redressed! If Christians had but half the zeal in preventing persecutions which is shown by the perpetrators of the crimes —by such people who bind themselves under a curse not to eat or drink till they have killed a Christian—the desired end would soon be gained.

Full accounts of this fearful persecution will doubtless appear in the Church Missionary Society's publications. Possibly, such of your readers as are interested will obtain these, and make themselves acquainted with the facts. They can then help intelligently, both by protest to man and prayer to God.—Your brother in Christ,
Robert P. Ashe.

Natch, Uganda, Victoria Nyanza, June 27.

Mr. Eugene Stock has kindly furnished us with advance proof letters from Mr. Ashe and Mr. Mackay, that will appear in the December number of the Church Missionary Intelligencer, giving detailed accounts of these deplorable massacres. We give some extracts. Mr. Stock says in an accompanying note:—"The whole Church of Christ should be called to special prayer and praise in the face of tidings so sad and yet so glorious."

Writing on June 26, Mr. Mackay says:—"It is now a full month since the bloody persecution of Native Christians began. Those who were at the capital, and best known, were of course first arrested. About a dozen were butchered at once. Several were mutilated (Asiatic manner) afterwards; many were speared or otherwise killed in the endeavour to capture them in various parts of the country; while thirty-two were burnt alive in one huge pyre, after having been kept prisoners over a week. Of course the great body of our people (as of the Frenchmen) took warning and fled into hiding. A few of them have since come to light, having got influential friends to intercede for them, and have been pardoned on the understanding (i.e., on the part of the king) that they renounce Christianity. But a large number still remain in hiding, able to move about only under cover of darkness."

From individual cases detailed by Mr. Ashe we select the following:—"Kidza Musali Fredi Wigram. Baptized Sunday, September 21, 1884. An earnest Christian and very regular attendant, has caused us deep thankfulness; most zealous in teaching others; one of those last baptized was one of his winning. When our dear children were murdered he was standing by. The cruel chief who was his over-lord (he himself having a small post called Musali), and who was carrying out Mwanga's fearful command, threatened to burn him and all his household. Fredi replied, 'Very well; do so. I am a Christian, and I am not afraid.' This was merely a threat. When the chief heard that his Musali was to be seized this month (June, 1886), he warned him to fly, but Fredi refused, and was taken and unmercifully clubbed to death before being flung into the flames. When I found heart to visit the scene of our children's murder, it was he who led me to the place. When we reached it, he knelt with me, and poured out his heart to God, that He would bring his salvation to those in darkness. In no long time he was to be a partaker in that blessed death: 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.' Fredi was elected a member of the Native Church Council, was married, and a regular communicant."

Writing on July 12, Mr. Ashe says:—"Most of our work is now carried on in secret and under the cover of darkness. At first, when the storm broke upon us, all was darkness and fear. We knew the slaughter had been terrible, but who the slain were we knew not. After awhile, at dead of night, one well-known face was joyfully welcomed, and then another. Soon many came, and with thankful hearts we found that though many had fallen, many, many more had escaped and are now hiding. On June 30, Bekweyamha, the young chief whom I mentioned of the royal family of Unyoro, came, as also an old reader named Lukai, and were baptized; also a boy named Mudembuga, who is a very earnest little reader, and would have been baptized some months ago, but was hindered from coming on the day fixed." The same letter contains the account of other baptisms, making twenty-three in all subsequent to the massacres.

The Church Missionary Society have issued the following note, dated October 18:—"A telegram has been received from Zanzibar, dated October 16, stating that Rev. R. P. Ashe has been dismissed from Uganda by the king, but that Mr. Mackay has been forcibly detained. Will all our friends pray earnestly for his preservation, and that much grace and wisdom may be granted him in his difficult position."

BRITISH MUSEUM LECTURES.

On Wednesday, October 20, Mr. W. St. Chard Boscawen, the well-known Assyriologist and explorer, commenced a most interesting course of lectures at the British Museum on "The Ancient Civilisations of the East." Putting on one side the legendary and poetical mythologies of early history, this course of lectures deals more particularly with the sources of knowledge brought to light by the decipherment of cuneiform inscriptions. The lecturer first drew a parallel between Egyptian and Babylonian records, showing the greater reliability of the latter, owing to the practice of keeping everything in duplicate; and, moreover, that with regard to many of the events recorded in the reigns of the principal sovereigns, there was a double check, inasmuch as the great mercantile houses kept careful records of their own histories and transactions. The records of the House of Egibi, the Assyrian Rothschilds, confirm in every particular those of Nebuchadnezzar, Assurbanipal, and Sennacherib.

The researches of Professor De Laconperie show that these ancient languages and the modern Chinese are nearly related. The Babylonians and Chinese have many other characteristics in common, more particularly that of veneration for their ancestors, and care in the preservation of family and other records. Mr. Boscawen gave a most interesting account of the successful experiment made by Grotefend to decipher these inscriptions, and cause the inanimate stones to testify trumpet-tongued to the truth of the statements made in the Holy Scriptures.

Mr. Boscawen then referred to the discoveries of Sir Henry Rawlinson at Behistun, which enabled us to complete the decipherment of the cuneiform alphabet, and has enabled archæologists to construct a chronology for Assyria, ascending to 3730 B.C., and to obtain the most minute data for history and social life, transcending in fidelity and value anything written by later authors. He paid a high tribute to the remarkable achievements of Mr. George Smith, who startled the world by deciphering the great Deluge tablets, and enormously enriched our historical resources by his discoveries at Carchemish.

The second of Mr. Boscawen's new course of lectures was delivered on Wednesday, Oct. 27, the subject being "The Civilisation of Ancient Chaldea." From the earliest period, Chaldea was one of the highly cultivated and fertile spots of Asia. The monumental evidence indicates that the original home of the most important section of the early population was to be looked for in the mountain regions to the north-east of Chaldea. It was evidently this Chaldean Olympus to which Isaiah refers as "the mountain of assembly" in the uttermost parts "of the north." The most ancient inscriptions show that the king held sway over a dual population, the people of Suiner and Akkad, or North and South Chaldea, the former being the Land of Shinar of the Bible. The language was Turanian, with a strong admixture of that of the Semitic nomads who settled in this fertile delta at a very early period.

The lecturer described the social life of Chaldea as inscribed on tablets dated 3000 B.C. The religious life of the people was then dealt with. The belief in spirits and demons was universal; every object, animate or inanimate, being controlled by some spirit or fetish. The British Museum is extremely rich in tablets containing fragments of the liturgy of these temples, and some of the prayers are most poetical. In conclusion, Mr. Boscawen sketched in a very detailed manner the way in which the highly developed civilisation of Chaldea was diffused throughout the East.

Those desirous of being in a position to bring forward incontrovertible proofs of the genuineness of the statements told in the "old, old story," and to confound the atheist and sceptic, should avail themselves of this opportunity, and attend this course of lectures, where most valuable information is to be obtained. The first lecture will be repeated by general desire at the end of the course.

THE CHURCHES and the HEATHEN.

BY REV. DR. J. L. WITHROW, BOSTON.*

SHOULD not the last command of Christ be enough to urge our work of foreign missions? Whether it should or not, of one thing we are sure, that some who profess to be his followers, like the whole denomination of the Universalists, know as well as we do those words of his, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel;" and yet the Universalists have never gone to the ends of the earth. It is asked if the love of Christ in our hearts should not be a sufficient incentive to prompt us to the enterprise of preaching it over the whole world. We will not dispute it. Neither can we dispute this, that many, who would count it a hard saying if you should deny that they have the love of Christ in their hearts, do not feel impelled to either go, or give that others may go and proclaim his Gospel to the perishing Pagans. Why do they not?

What, then, may we depend upon as the one sure and lasting motive to this Divine undertaking of turning the Gentiles "from darkness to light, and from the power of sin and Satan unto God?" Just this: this which first begat the blessed enterprise of foreign missions,—viz., the heathen are perishing for lack of knowledge; the Son of God was revealed that He might reveal the Father; and seeing that of "the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world" we in Christian countries have more than we are using, if not more than our share, therefore, it is our solemn, imperative, and instant duty to carry this light to our heathen brothers, that if possible we may turn them "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," and so prevent them from stumbling into hell.

So far as we know, the preaching of the law and Gospel of God is the only influence that is adequate to the conversion of the heathen who now live on the earth with us. And it is only with these that we are concerned. No attentive reader of the Gospel forgets the sharp rebuke which Jesus gave to one who sought to get excused from duty to the living by asking leave of absence to go and bury the dead. "Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." And so we have to do with living heathen in their present miserable plight! Whether their ancestors were better or worse than they are, whether their predecessors were less under "the power of sin and Satan" than they are, and whether, if they were less entirely blinded by the god of this world, many of them were saved, it is all idle to inquire. A Pagan Emperor fooling with his fiddle while his capital is in flames is not guilty of such criminal folly as the Christian Church will be if she entertains herself with debates about the dead, while before her face and eyes myriads of souls are sinking into the bottomless pit. We have the living heathen—a thousand million of them living with us now in this world. And as neither the progress of modern civilisation, nor the presence of the secular knowledge which that civilisation has introduced among the outcast and lost, has ever transformed the moral character of any Pagan people or tribe, therefore we are left to choose whether we will make haste to give them the Gospel, or whether we will let them die in their sins.

At what awful peril of their eternal welfare do we spend one cent or one second inquiring whether they may not be saved, although we should do nothing. Can words state or eternity calculate our responsibility, if, without clear warrant from the Word of God, we wilfully do anything to minify the importance of proclaiming both the warnings and the wooing invitations of the Gospel to those that are ready to perish? The very fact that those who have been among them give such unvarying testimony to their hardness of heart and enmity against God, should be enough to enlist the last energy in us to bring to bear upon them the holy light and love of the Lamb of God! But for that love we should most probably never have turned from sin. Then what have we to do with speculative theories of possible methods of salvation for them? We have had our own eyes opened by a saving light, which we are bidden to let shine! How can we then waste that light in illuminating a debating room, where we may discuss theodicies and theologies, the while that "gross darkness" every day deepens upon the perishing millions?

We need not inquire what men might do without the Gospel if only they did their best. The fact still remains that the unevangelised of our day and generation appear blind, beyond seeing anything, and in bondage to sin and Satan below the power of anything to extricate them, unless it shall be the attractions of the Cross! But with the Gospel faithfully and effectually preached the encouragaing fact is: the Gentiles are turning "from sin and Satan unto God." It may, in one view, seem a long time since the Moravian and English missionaries, with our own starting a little later, struck the first light in the dense darkness of South Africa and India. But what has been one century of our giving them and others everywhere over the earth the light of the Gospel, compared with the dismal and degraded centuries which preceded? And what have we yet done, seeing that, if every soul in China were suddenly to confess Christ, each Christian missionary in that empire would now have 600,000 members in his church? All the same, the workmen on the mission fields are receiving such wages for their work as preachers of the Gospel at home might well rejoice over if they had even the half of it. As fruit and effect of the kind of men and the manner of Gospelising in the past in the dark lands, we now see the average missionary winning twenty-four times more souls to Christ in a year than does the average Protestant minister of the Gospel in Europe and America.

Never as now the words of the Master apply for our encouragement: "Lift up your eyes, and behold the fields, that they are white to the harvest." When the earthquake shook open the doors, shivered the shackles, and quenched the lights in the Philippian jail, the agitated keeper "called for a light," that he might see just what the ruins around him were. Something mightier than an earthquake, but not noisy, has shaken the nations and agitated the peoples. If not all, then many. And these many are calling for a light. How can we be careless or cold-hearted in carrying them the light we have, now that theirs has gone out? There are among those masses a vast number, who have not, as the foolish virgins, slept until the cry of the coming bridegroom awakened them. They are stirred already; and are asking us for oil-lamps, too—because their old idolatries are fast going out in universal darkness and doubt.

* From a Sermon before the American Board of Foreign Missions. (New York Independent.)

THE JUDGE OF ALL THE EARTH.

"SHALL not the Judge of all the earth do right!"

Who is the Judge of all the earth?

The living God—the Almighty God—the eternal God—the only true God—the only wise God—the righteous God—God who is Light—God who is Love—the covenant-keeping God—God our Saviour—the Lord of lords and King of kings.

God is a Person—the personal embodiment and manifestation of goodness. Every virtue in its perfection and in exact proportion consists in the nature and character of God.

God could not be other than He is. A being different in the least degree from what God is would not be God.

As God could not be otherwise than He is, so neither could He do otherwise than He does.

To every question there is only one answer which is absolutely true. When God answers, that is the answer that He gives. In any circumstance or set of circumstances there is only one act or course of action that is absolutely right. That act God has always done; that course of action He has always taken.

There is only one point or period of time in which it is right to do any special righteous act, or to pursue any righteous course of action. God has always acted at that right point of time; the dispensations of his providence have always been exactly fitted to the period in which they have taken place.

From eternity God has never moved out of the straight line of absolute holiness and righteousness; and to eternity He never will.

His silence and his words, his stillness and the exercise of his power, his goodness and his severity, are the necessary outcome of his nature; and as the light, which is white, is composed of the seven colours, so the Divine nature is composed of every holy attribute in individual perfection, and in perfectly harmonious proportion.

Abraham appealed to the nature of things, to the constitution of the universe, when, appalled with the revelation of what God would do on Sodom, he quieted his troubled spirit with "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right!" He subpœnas every created intelligence, he calls upon the stars in their courses, upon every moment of eternity, to bear witness that the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, that righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne.

God's government of this world is a mystery to men; and his government of the universe is a mystery to the angels. But we may well be sure that these have no opposing theories, and that, concerning things they desire to look into, but do not yet understand, they rest, as the friend of God, the father of believers, rested, on "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right!"

If it be the very necessity of his nature, and the condition of his reign, that God can and will only do the right, it follows that our differing opinions as to what He ought to do only prove our inability to grasp all the circumstances of the case, and our incompetence, even if we could grasp them, to decide the issue.

Is it not evident that the Scriptures were written, not to give us full and definite information as to the eternal future, but to give us so much of the counsel of God, in law and in grace, as to induce us to shun the evil and to choose the good, to present our bodies a living sacrifice to Him, which is our reasonable service?—not to satisfy our curiosity about the world to come, but to lead us to walk with God in this?

We have observed through many years how very few Christians have attained to a well-balanced judgment on even the fundamental truths of our salvation; much less upon abstruse or difficult subjects. Not one professing Christian in five can give an intelligent account of the doctrine of the Atonement, or of Justification, or of Sanctification, though many occupy themselves with much more mysterious subjects.

It appears to us that untold mischief is done by putting forth controversial arguments as to the secret things of God, each advocate quoting the Scriptures which seem to uphold his own view and explaining away those which seem to contradict it.

We have before us the arguments of three opposing schools on the solemn subject of future punishment.

1. Those who believe in "Conditional Immortality" argue that God only hath immortality; that only those among men who become the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus are possessed of immortality; and they conclude that therefore the impenitent will be destroyed or annihilated. But, allowing the first two propositions,[*] the conclusion does not necessarily follow. Satan is not immortal, as God is immortal; but there is no proof that he will be annihilated; and condemned men as well as condemned spirits, if not possessed of inherent immortality, may be continued in being without end.

2. In a book recently published it is argued, in contrast to the above, that condemned souls will be restored in ages to come, if not in this or in the succeeding one. The author says, "That God is able to change the greatest sinner upon earth or in hell, no one doubts for a moment, for all things are possible to Him." We reply that God's power cannot contravene his righteousness; nor does He use his power to overbear the creature's will. If it be impossible to renew to repentance those who in this life have become Gospel-hardened, is it certain that death will remove that impossibility? Are not the testimony of Scripture, and such evidences as we have from experience, all the other way?

This writer thanks God that the number who have abandoned the popular view is fast increasing, and is persuaded that if Christians would but give the question a thorough and unprejudiced examination, conversions would be multiplied manifold. So far as we have any means of judging, this anticipation is not justified by facts. If the number holding the new faith is increasing, have conversions increased? and, if so, has it been by their means? On the contrary, the most successful evangelists have ever been those who have held what is here called the popular view, and not a few have seemed to lose power rather than to renew their strength, when they have exchanged the old teaching for the new.

Another says: "I disbelieve the endlessness of misery and wickedness, because that belief is (to my mind, at least) irreconcilably contrary to all that we know of God's will, purpose, and nature." Our knowledge of God's will, purpose, and nature is too slight and superficial—and our own finite powers of judgment are altogether insufficient—to justify us in coming to any conclusion on such a question, apart from the declarations of the Scriptures, and these are far from denying the endlessness of misery and sin. The R.V. in Mark iii. 29 reads, "is guilty of an eternal sin."

We come now to what is called above "the popular view." A well-known and deservedly-esteemed author makes the following uncompromising statement:—

> That God should lay such a burden (the burden of our guilt) upon his Son implied that there was something very awful in store for sinners. If that something was the mere extinction of being, it is difficult to see what the Son of God really bore, or for what He made atonement. Did God's displeasure against the sinning object exhaust itself in depriving him of existence—in reducing him to nothing? If this is all that is symbolised in the fire of the altar, or implied in that which Scripture calls "wrath" and "the curse," the whole institution of sacrifice is unmeaning, and the Cross a mockery—nay, a useless piece of cruelty to One whose innocence deserved far other treatment. Nay, the Cross is not only "made of none effect," but is the greatest injustice that was ever perpetrated on earth—an injustice enough in itself to dissolve all law, to make void all equity and fairness, to subvert every idea of Divine goodness and love, to efface all distinctions between right and wrong, between the innocent and the guilty. That God should not spare his Son, and yet spare all his rejectors and all impenitents from all the pain flowing from their misdeeds by extinguishing them for ever, seems an unrighteousness amounting to an impossibility.

These assertions seem to us without any sufficient foundation in the Scriptures. In speaking of the death of the cross as a mockery, a useless piece of cruelty, an injustice, if God's displeasure against the sinning object exhausted itself in depriving him of existence, the great purpose of the work of Christ appears to be overlooked. Surely, whatever becomes of the rejectors of his grace, the incarnation, death, resurrection, and ascension of the Christ of God was the highest expression of every attribute of the Eternal Love, i.e.—of God. Its main purpose was not punishment, but redemption; and if it results in raising fallen sons of Adam to the Paradise of God, in crowning the Lamb of God with many crowns, and in adding new lustre to the glory of God, it cannot be right to speak of it in such terms as are used above.

It appears to us that all this argumentation is speculative and unreliable. Each writer fails fully to represent, if he does not misrepresent, the opposite opinions; and each by implication claims to understand the requirements of everlasting righteousness and to comprehend what it is becoming and necessary that God should do. If one should happen to be right, the others are committing the serious offence of charging God foolishly. And if, as is probable, all are wrong (inasmuch as they are endeavouring upon insufficient data, with infinitesimal experience and limited capacity, to solve an infinite problem), then all are guilty of misjudging God, and, like Job, of deciding upon things too wonderful for them.

The ambassador is not called upon to expound his message. His duty is to deliver it. He is not a barrister, but a witness: "Ye are my witnesses," said the departing Saviour. "And with great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." If Paul reasoned out of the Scriptures, it was to prove that the Messiah, the Anointed One, the Christ, must needs have suffered, and that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ. The reasoning consisted in the collation of facts which were evident and undisputed. He never reasoned from things revealed which belong to us, to secret things which belong to God.

All argument of this latter sort is human and not Divine, and is calculated to lead souls astray, substituting for the steady light of Scripture statement the ignis fatuus of our own reason.

There are few who think and feel who have not been deeply exercised as to the future penalty of sin, but we have never found any one who had attained a soul-satisfying rest concerning it on any other ground than the appeal of Abraham, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right!" There will not be a dog in the universe to wag his tongue against the judgment of the great white throne, on which He sits whose garments were seen white as the light; who is the Light which maketh manifest, for whatsoever doth make manifest is light. The saints will all be manifested before the judgment-seat of Christ; the dead, small and great, will all be manifested before the great white throne; even as the mothers were manifested before Solomon. God will not condemn any whom it is possible for Righteous Love to save, nor inflict a stroke more than everlasting righteousness and everlasting love require.

"As ye go, preach." "Preach the word"—"the word of the Kingdom," "the Gospel of the grace of God." These are the marching orders of the King. Let them be obeyed. And if your message of New Covenant grace be rejected, let it be sealed, as Paul sealed his, by quoting without expounding the penalty of the Old Covenant, "Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the Prophets: Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish. For I work a work in your days which ye will in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you."

"Let him that is unjust, be unjust still; and let him that is filthy, be filthy still; and let him that is righteous, be righteous still; and let him that is holy, be holy still." No human argument could add emphasis to these solemn words. Are they not the simple declaration of the laws that lie in the constitution of things? They are almost the last words of the Book of God. They need not be explained; they cannot be explained away. M.

A CHURCH IN THE BUSH.—Mr. L. Fear writes from Wandin, Yalloak, Lilydale, Victoria, to express his pleasure at reading the biographical sketches given in these columns from week to week. He adds:—"In this far-distant bush township we have a prosperous church. There is an earnest Gospel Band and a thriving Band of Hope in connection. Our present minister, Mr. Hounsell, United Methodist Free Church, is a zealous preacher, and an untiring pioneer bush missionary. We have no public-house in the immediate district, but we have that which is far better: an industrious, hard-working, and well-to-do population. English friends may be pleased to know that they will find in Lilydale and its neighbourhood a cool and healthy climate, picturesque scenery, and many advantages of city life, as it is within easy access of the city of Melbourne."

[*] It must not be overlooked, however, that the purpose of the Apostle here appears to be, not to deny eternal future existence to created beings, but to affirm an immortality in God which no creature can possess. Justin Martyr says: "God is said alone to have immortality, because He has it, not from another's will, as all other immortals have, but from his own essence." Another says: "Who only hath underived and independent immortality—life without beginning and without ending."

MINISTERIAL EFFICIENCY.

THE month of October has been marked by utterances on the part of ministers of religion and others which deserve to be noted before the memory of the meetings where they were spoken has passed away. We shall refer to them without comment on our part, as their significance will be at once apparent.

At the Oxford Diocesan Conference a debate took place on clergy discipline. Complaint was freely made of the cold and lifeless sermons which in some parish churches are preached; of gradual assimilation on the part of incumbents to the ways of the worldly families of the neighbourhood; and of social clerical habits, whereby people are scandalised. The subject, in all its bearings, was fully and candidly discussed, and ultimately a resolution was passed that measures must be taken in order to provide a remedy for clerical incapacity and indifference.

In connection with this a paper was read at the Church Congress by Mr. Cropper, late M.P. for South Westmoreland, on the subject that heads this article, and which boldly met the case of rural clergy in the midst of a small population, and with long intervals of time on their hands. Mention was made of a clergyman in these circumstances who, with success all round, took the entire charge of the parish school. It was strongly suggested that a clergy-house, in a central position, might not only arrest the evils of loneliness, but meet the recent decline in the incomes of the rural clergy; and a weighty remonstrance was uttered against early marriages of curates in these retired and ill-paid places.

With a view to the promotion of a higher efficiency, the Bishop of Lichfield has addressed a letter ad clerum which recommends fixed time for private devotion; six hours a week at least for definite theological study; a daily record of work done for the Master; time resolutely made for self-examination; and at least a day a year devoted to absolute retirement, and the re-kindling of the spiritual life.

At the Baptist Union, in Bristol, the address of the President, Rev. Charles Williams, on Puritanism, is said to have "evoked more sympathy throughout the churches than any recent address from the Chair." The essential principle of Puritanism, its unworldliness, and its intense religious life, is apparently held by many to be a question of life or death to the Nonconformist British churches.

A quotation from a letter by "A Layman," on this address of the President of the Baptist Union, appears in The Nonconformist of the 20th ult. Speaking of some Dissenters, it says:—

> The truth is, we laymen are at our wit's end to know our theological whereabouts. Our leaders are all at sea in the matter—not one in ten apparently being sure of a single article of his creed, and the great majority prepared to swallow whole the great American Iconoclast, Mr. Henry Ward Beecher. . . . A misty heaven and an abolished hell leave little worth bearing the cross for, and so our young people swing off as their respective tastes may dictate. . . . I should be false to my convictions if I were to deny a very profound sense of uneasiness at the present position of British Evangelicalism. . . . There is a rush and restlessness everywhere. The water that Christ gives gets spoilt of its satisfying qualities somehow. The religious life is not enough. The Bible palls. If read in the family it has to offer a sort of apology for itself, while privately it is severely left alone.

At the Autumnal Meeting of the Congregational Union at Norwich, an address was delivered by Professor Cave, of Hackney College, which appears to have awakened considerable interest. To this there followed a paper by Rev. J. F. B. Tinling, which urged the holding of mission services, and the setting apart of special men for this work, without which it was contended that the denomination would sink into insignificance as an evangelistic agency, and which would bring a richer reward than vast sums spent on costly places of worship. Rev. R. Balgarnie, in a succeeding paper, urged pastors to begin with individuals if they would reach the careless and undecided.

We close this notice with a brief summary of Professor Cave's address. Evangelical convictions, he maintained, are indispensable to spiritual life. The faith held by former generations of Nonconformists has the power to touch, to convert, to save, to sanctify. Instead of revising faith, to do its work is what is needed, and to aim to meet a tide of evangelical revival by seeking that the old instrumentalities should be armed with a greater potentiality. Divine truth, preached by inspired men, should be the loudest demand; and for this there must be prayer—prayer not restrained, but in its believing and expectant attitude.

WALKING IN THE LIGHT.

1 JOHN i. 5—7.

BY REV. GEORGE WAINWRIGHT,
BIRMINGHAM.*

THE aim of the Apostle in this chapter is to lead us to a life of continued fellowship with God. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us" (ver. 3); and lest we should prejudge the matter by deciding that a life of unbroken fellowship is impossible, he adds, "and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." He not only calls us to it, but declares the possibility of our attaining it.

It is manifest also that our joy depends upon our maintained fellowship with God. "These things write we unto you, that your joy may be full." The measure of our intimacy with God is the measure of our joy. Not he whose circumstances are most favourable, but he to whom God's companionship is a constant reality, has fulness of joy. If you are an unhappy Christian, it is because you have got away from God.

But if "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all" (ver. 5), how can fellowship with Him be maintained? With solemn emphasis the next verse says, that by an unholy Christian it cannot be maintained at all. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" If you profess to have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness," you are not self-deceived, as is the man referred to in ver. 8; but John says, "you lie." Your profession is an intentional falsehood; you "do not the truth." An unholy professor is a liar.

"But if we walk in the light"—do not forget that our fellowship is to be maintained in our "walk," a term which comprehends the whole of our life—not only in all manifestly sacred duties, but in every secular engagement, too, your fellowship can be maintained. The term "walk" includes your business life, your home life, your recreations, your companionships; and your communion with God is to be maintained in all. You are to keep step with God everywhere and in everything.

But if the fellowship is to be unbroken, the walk must be "in the light." About certain parts of a man's life we sometimes use the term, "they will not bear the light;" does not this help to explain the term before us? Many a life has in it nothing manifestly sinful, but unless we are prepared to bring every part of it to the searching light of God's holiness, as revealed in his Word, and in the character of Jesus—if there is any part of it about which we do not want too searching an inquiry, our fellowship cannot be continually maintained. The maxims by which you conduct your business; the pleasures in which you indulge; the companionships you form; the books you read—will these bear the light? Your communion will be broken at that point where you do not want the light to shine. Not only what is sinful, but what is doubtful, will destroy your fellowship with Him who is light.

Who does not tremble before the words, "as He is in the light"? Yet they are there, not to be toned down to accord with the low experience of Christians, but to be fulfilled. They do not stand alone: "Be ye holy, as I am holy;" "Be ye perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." But can I really take in all the light of God? Trapp answers, you have "the same in quality, but not in equality." The same light as that which shines round the throne of God, and which was expressed in the life of Jesus, may shine upon all my life. The size of a vessel does not determine the nature of the liquid with which it is filled, it only limits the measure of it. However small the vessel, it may be filled with the same water that fills the ocean. And however small our life, it may be wholly filled with obedience to the will of God, and every part of it may manifest his Spirit.

But if we are really walking in such light, is not that sinless perfection? Are we not then beyond the need of the cleansing blood? This verse says not, and we need the blood to cleanse in at least two ways. First, if we bring everything to the light of God (and all are not prepared to do so, for "he that doeth evil," in any matter, "hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved"), every man coming to the light finds much to be reproved. But will the sin which the light reveals destroy the fellowship? It would, but for the provision God has graciously made. What the light reveals the blood cleanses, and we are kept in communion with Him. But if the light is revealing nothing manifestly sinful in our daily walk, are we not then sinlessly perfect? How carefully, and with what infinite wisdom, the Spirit of God has guarded this truth from error! If you say you have no sin, because you have not been conscious of committing any, "you deceive yourself." You are not stating a deliberate falsehood as in ver. 6, but you are drawing an unwarrantable inference. Even when you do not knowingly commit sin, you have sin, and are every moment dependent upon the cleansing blood to maintain you in fellowship with God.

Guard, on the one hand, against the God-dishonouring thought that you must sometimes sin, and lose your enjoyment of God's companionship. But, on the other hand, guard against the not less dishonouring inference that there is any attainment in holiness so high that you do not need the constant cleansing of the precious blood of Christ.

A GALILEAN PICNIC.

An Address to Children, in the Agricultural Hall, Oct. 24.

BY REV. DR. J. THAIN DAVIDSON.

"There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, nd two small fishes: but what are they among so nany?"—JOHN vi. 9.

Do. you know what is meant by a picnic? I hink it may be described as an entertainment in he country, a number of people meeting together o spend the day and have a meal in the open ir. I confess when I was a boy nothing gave ne so much delight as a picnic. Many a time have I gone to the Pentland Hills, out from Edinburgh, with a number of friends, carrying vith us several baskets. Then when the time ame we spread a white cloth on the grass, and partook of what we had brought; and somehow he bread seemed sweeter, and the eggs and meat nore tasty, out in the open air on the hill-side han on the common table in the house.

When I was in Palestine, recently, for three veeks together we took our midday meal in this ashion, sometimes on the naked rock on the igh lands of Samaria, sometimes on the soft and around Tyre and Sidon, and sometimes on he grassy slopes around the town of Tiberia, on ur way from the Lake of Galilee to Nazareth. Vhen being rowed on that beautiful lake, I saw he very spot where, I believe, the wonderful icnic mentioned in the text, if with reverence I nay call it so, took place.

Let us try to picture the scene. The place is t the north-east corner of the Lake of Galilee, nd at the head of the lake is the site of ancient Capernaum; but we could not persuade the oatmen to row us over the lake, so infested is he other side with wild Bedouins and dangerous rabs—men who will seize the unwary traveller, nd either put him to death or demand a ransom or his delivery. So we had to be content with ooking on the spot at a distance of two or three niles. I looked with great interest as I tried to icture this scene. I fancied I saw Jesus, sitting n retirement, with the crowd before Him. He ad been on the north-western side of the lake, ut, taking boat, He, with his disciples, crossed ver to the other side. One reason, I think, vhy the crowd were so intent upon following Him was that they had heard of Him not only s a great preacher, but as healing all manner f persons of their diseases. Another reason vas, that the Passover was nigh at hand. The eople flocked from all parts of Palestine to o up to Jerusalem at this season, and no doubt nany of this great multitude were from distant arts

As the day wore on, Jesus was anxious, knowng that the people must be getting very hungry. The nearest place was the village of Bethsaida, nd that was some distance off, and a very mall place. I think I know why Jesus adressed Himself to Philip: because, as we read lsewhere, Philip was of Bethsaida, and, thereore, the likeliest to know where to get victuals; hough Jesus knew that all that could be btained there would not suffice for so great a umber of people, and He Himself had made up is mind what He would do. But there was nother reason. This He said to prove Philip: o see whether he had any true knowledge of Himself as the Messiah, and of his power to vork miracles.

This miracle is so notable that it is the only ne recorded by all the Evangelists. My notion, lso, is that each of the disciples carried a basket nder his arm; and this was very necessary, for hey wandered together for days. In travelling n those regions you must be well provided with ood, as you will get none for miles, and someimes days together. It was the custom of the Jews of old every man to carry a basket, so that veryone had a supply of such plain fare as he vas able to get. Philip, we read, answered, "Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little." Of course, the Roman penny (the denarius) was not the same as is our penny; it was worth 8½d., and therefore the sum required in our money would have been £7 2s. 4d.—a sum which would have seemed very large to those poor fishermen; they had not so much amongst the whole lot of them, and if they had had the money, there was no place near where they could have got so much bread. Bethsaida means "the house of fish," as Bethlehem means the "house of bread." Bethsaida was near the head of the lake, and no doubt was so called because there were plenty of fish to be had there.

"There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes." Every word here, let me say, is in the diminutive form. The lad was a little wee boy, a mere child; the five barley loaves were mere rolls, or cakes—they very seldom speak of loaves, and certainly would not talk of breaking such loaves as we are accustomed to see; and the word used for fishes means a relish—as a sardine or sprat—to make the bread go down pleasantly. The verse might be translated thus: "There is a very little boy here, and he has five barley cakes and two sardines; but what are they among this great assembly?"

THERE ARE ONE OR TWO LESSONS

we may learn from the story. First, even a little child may be very useful. Among the thousands of people there was not one so useful as this little boy, and there were, no doubt, ten thousand people there, for the Scripture tells us there were five thousand men, and we always find at any gathering there are at least as many women as men. Probably this little boy had his home in the humble village of Bethsaida, and his mother was, perhaps, a poor widow; or I can fancy his father was a fisherman, not able to lay by anything, but just to eke out a living as best he could. So this little boy, probably about nine or ten years of age, was sent out with his basket filled with barley cakes and sardines. He had almost sold out—all but just these few were consumed when the disciples called him.

How much better to be engaged in helping father or mother than in idling about. Some boys in Islington are good for nothing but to play and to eat and to sleep—this is all they can do. For all the good they do they might just as well be thrown into the dust-bin, and then carted away with the refuse. But sometimes little children can do a lot. I once knew a gentleman who had a beautiful property in the country. At one end of the estate a huge tree stood in the way of the prospect, and so he wanted that tree cut down. He got two men, and they sawed half way through the trunk of the tree, and then they fastened a rope to the upper part, and pulled away as hard as they could, but all their efforts were in vain. Just outside the field there was a little village school, and at one o'clock the children came out for their dinner hour. So the gentleman asked them if they would help, and the boys and girls were delighted, but would not put a hand till the gentleman and his gardeners gave up. Then they all pulled together at the long rope, and down came the tree.

When in Egypt lately I saw something as I was sitting on the hot, burning sand, and I said to myself, "I will remember this, and tell it at the Agricultural Hall." After visiting those great wonders of the world, the Pyramids of Egypt—after I came down from the top of the Great Pyramid—I went to see that most marvellous thing, even older than the Pyramids, the Great Sphinx. This is a colossal figure, with the head of a man, the body of a lion, and wings as of an eagle. You can judge how big it is when I say that from the chin to the top of the head is thirty feet, and from ear to ear fourteen feet. The great body of the animal—the lion part —is covered with sand, the head and neck only rising out of the sand. Again and again efforts have been made to clear away the sand, so as to reveal the whole figure, but hitherto all have failed. But another attempt is being made, and I saw hundreds of lads carting away the sand. Each little boy had a wicker basket, which he filled, and then a large number of them, with their baskets on top of their heads, would run together up to the top of a hill, where was a cart to receive the sand, which then was carried off to a distance. The boys all sang as they ran, and I think I never saw such a happy set of children —almost naked, of course—they did their work right merrily.

YORKSHIRE WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

THE Ninth Annual Meeting and Conference of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union was held at York on October 19 and 20. The report of the committee, read by Mrs. Fielden Thorp, stated that eight new Associations had affiliated with them since the last conference. Mrs. Atkinson, of Selby, read a report of work done in the formation of new branches. Mrs. Cumberland read a paper on "How to commence work in places where no branch exists," in which she strongly recommended house-to-house visitation, drawing-room meetings, and mothers' meetings.

A paper on "The World's Women's Temperance Union," written by Mrs. Costello, of London, was read, and the first piece of work proposed for the different branches of that Union was the circulation of a petition, to be signed by women all over the world, appealing to the Governments to do all in their power to stop the drink traffic. Miss Gray, of London, superintendent of the organisation in Europe, pointed out that a great many people held erroneous ideas as to the need of temperance on the continent. In Belgium it was the principal topic of the day, and she had been assured that 45 per cent of the deaths in Antwerp were due to delirium tremens. Mrs. Fielden Thorp said that drinking had increased very much in Switzerland during recent years. Miss Mary Howard, of Castle Howard, also referred to the increased drunkenness on the continent; she had visited the asylum at Siexagirgluta, where the number of lunatics was greatly increased by the use of strong drink.

Mrs. W. W. Morrell, of York, read a paper on "The present licensing laws," in which she urged that efforts should be made to raise public opinion against the granting of additional licenses, and that the existing law in the case of present holders of licenses should be more strictly watched, as magistrates were apt to be unduly lenient at breaches of the law. A report of the Sanitorium at High Flatts near Huddersfield, for the reception and reclamation of women suffering from dipsomania, showed that it had been a great success.

The reports from the different branches showed a steady rate of progress. Dr. Gill, of Bristol, delivered an address, in the course of which he said if all the people of London would give up strong drink for one week, they would save sufficient money to endow that city with a supply of pure water from the north of Scotland. The next conference will be held at Hull.

LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY.

THE twelfth annual narrative of this Society is of a character to stimulate charity during the fast-approaching winter. One feature of the Society's work is that of feeding the children. "Our Helpers" in their letters tell the same doleful story of children in many schools who have had no breakfast or dinner, who are cold and faint from want of food. One teacher says that ninety come to that school daily without their dinner, and as many without breakfast. Another says, "Some ar dying of starvation;" another, "The food tickets have saved many lives." The Society last year gave 40,000 free dinners in twelve places in the metropolis, besides articles of new and second-hand clothing. The destitute adults are reached by means of Sunday morning free breakfasts. The Society has Convalescent Homes at Sandgate and Bournemouth, which are much prized.

Thus, it will be seen, a large amount of work is done on behalf of the very poorest. Such a work may well excite the sympathies of all. The office is at 98, High-street, Homerton, E.

IN THE WILDERNESS.

BY MARGARET SCOTT MACRITCHIE (MRS. HAYCRAFT).

"The people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty, in the wilderness."—2 Sam. xvii. 29.

THEY move across the desert-sand,
  These wandering ones of mine;
There is no Elim in the land,
  Nor cluster of the vine.
They feed on ashes, seek with toil
  For that which is not meat;
Ye have the bread, the date, the oil,
  Go, give ye them to eat!

My children, whom I satisfy
  With manna from above,
Ye will not let your brethren die
  Who have not known my love?
They need my strength their souls to cheer
  In this their pilgrim strife;
Bring them to Me, yea, bring them near
  The broken Bread of Life!

They faint for lack of living streams,
  They drink some poisoned flood,
And ye are wrapped in tranquil dreams,
  Nor lead them to your God.
Oh! hearts that, helpless, drank of Me,
  Nor thirsted once again,
Gather them near, where they may see
  The waters of the plain.

Have I not made your Marah sweet?
  Have I not proved my word,
Your inmost yearning to complete
  With fulness of your Lord?
Then, if you love Me, offer up
  A gift of richest cost;
Go ye, my chosen, take my cup
  Of blessing to the lost!

Oh, wearily, so wearily,
  They wander all the day,
Those sheep, so dearly loved by Me,
  That in the desert stray;
They know no shepherd, have no fold,
  They faint by waste and rock;
And when the night falls, dark and cold,
  What of that wandering flock?

Ye, my belovèd, go ye forth,
  And win them home from sin;
From east and west, and south and north,
  Oh, bring your brethren in!
Oh, bid them freely, freely come,
  My deathless love to take;
I yearn, I thirst, to have them home,
  Go, find them for my sake!

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS.

THE recent terrible storms have brought vividly before us the dangers of the sea and the sorrow caused thereby. The forty-seventh report of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society shows how constant and considerable are the efforts to alleviate this sorrow. During 1885, 940 British vessels were lost, besides 1624 lives. This, it is pleasing to note, was a decrease on the previous year of 132 vessels and 313 lives. The Society, during the same period, through its central office, and by means of some 1000 honorary agencies, relieved 11,379 shipwrecked sufferers of all nations, fishermen and mariners, dependent widows and orphans, and aged parents, this number bringing up the total of those succoured in various ways since the formation of the Society in 1839 to 373,239.

Far-reaching, indeed, is the help so beneficently accorded by this Society, including aid, not only to shipwrecked men, but to fishermen who have lost boats or gear, and the relations of those who have been drowned. One most gratifying feature of the Society's plan of operations is that no fewer than 53,500 fishermen and mariners are annually co-operating in this great work by being members, that is, subscribers of 3s. each, and are thereby helping others as well as themselves. The Society also gives pecuniary rewards, as well as medals, for saving life at sea. The central office is at Sailors' Home Chambers, Dock-street, London Docks, E.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Promise for Nov. 10 (Isa. xli. 10): "Fear thou not, for I am with thee: be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

ON Monday evening the quarterly meeting of the members and friends of the Open-air Mission was held in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, Pimlico, and was well attended.

After tea, Lord RADSTOCK took the chair, and based his remarks on Isa. xlii. 2, 3: "He shall not strive, nor cry," &c. The burden of his exhortation was that the preacher should not run before he was sent; that waiting upon God should precede every message, and that the message should be of a tender rather than a stern and dogmatic kind. He often grieved over the hard and contentious preaching he heard in the streets.

Colonel PASCHKOFF, whose touching story of exile from Russia for conscience sake is well known, told of the need of workers in that vast empire, and begged the prayers of the audience for his country. The need of Gospel light there may be conceived when it is stated that there are only thirty-three missionaries working among ninety millions of people, and most of these workers either are, or have been, in prison for their faithful testimony.

The address specially announced was then delivered by Lieut.-Gen. Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, nominally on Acts xvi. 13, but really on the whole chapter. The characteristics of the three conversions were pointed out, and the prominent teaching enforced. In the case of Lydia the gentle influence of the Spirit was dominant; in that of the damsel possessed of a spirit of divination, a stronger influence was needed; while an earthquake alone sufficed for the jailor's conversion. Some strong words on modern Spiritualism were used in applying the central case.

CHATHAM SOLDIERS' HOME.

MOST of your readers are aware that the work originated at Aldershot by Mrs. Daniell has since her death spread to several other garrisons, and I have now, in connection with the parent Home, four branch Homes—at Colchester, Chatham, Plymouth, and Manchester.

The Lord has graciously blessed the efforts put forth, and we can look back thankfully over these twenty-four years, praising his name for all that He has effected through this simple instrumentality. Every regiment in the British service has been more or less influenced by the Mission, and there are officers and men now all over the world who are testifying to the power of that grace which they first learnt to know at Aldershot or one of the branch Homes.

Just now I am enlarging the Home at Chatham, making a better refreshment bar, reading and game-rooms, and also adding bed-rooms for letting, which latter accommodation is much called for. The cost of this will be about £2400, and I should be thankful indeed for any help that friends can give. This Chatham Home was specially built as a memorial to my mother. Any to whom her name and memory may still be dear, might feel an additional interest in giving a helping hand to this work of improvement and enlargement.

All the branch Homes, though framed on the Aldershot model, have more or less their distinct features. Perhaps that which is most marked at Chatham has been the number of young officers who have received spiritual help through the instrumentality of the Home.

I most earnestly commend this work to the prayers and practical sympathy of your readers, especially to any among them who may have sons, brothers, or other relatives in the army, or intended for the service.—Yours faithfully,

G. F. S. DANIELL.,

Soldiers' Home, Chatham.

VAUD.—The village of Missy, and the Free Church of the locality have suffered a great loss in the death of Mdlle. Quillet, on October 12, in her 70th year. She was a true friend to the poor, and a mother to the young, whom she delighted to gather around her.

PROGRESS IN PARAGUAY.

ALTHOUGH there are signs of improvement since the war, the spiritual and moral state of the people here remains at a low ebb. The Romish Church is dominant, and even her own priests in other parts have pointed to their brethren in Paraguay as affording fair ground for the complaints of their enemies against the Church. The immorality of the priests is proverbial.

In August the writer was able to assist at the opening meetings at Asuncion, of the first Reformed Mission in Paraguay. It is under the control of Dr. T. B. Wood, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the River Plate, and Señor Villamura, a converted Spaniard; the former is starting the Mission, and the latter will remain in charge. Dr. Wood applied to the Municipality of Asuncion for ground on which to build a church; but, after much discussion, the application was refused, owing to the opposition of the priests. A subscription was then opened to purchase a piece of land, and before the writer left it amounted to 1500 dollars.

Finding that the matter was attracting public attention, Dr. Wood decided to give a lecture, and the use of the Atenio was obtained for the purpose. Over 300 persons were present, including the President of the Republic, and several of his ministers. All listened breathlessly, while the lecturer in excellent Spanish drew their attention to the fact that although the country had been Christianised 300 years ago, and was known as a Christian country, no advance had been made, and that although the Gospel was read in the churches, it was not in the language of the people, and so was not understood by them. At the close of the lecture Dr. Wood said that he had received several queries, which he would answer then, or if the audience preferred he would give another lecture. The latter proposition was accepted, and on August 18 the same place was again filled.

The lecturer took for his subject, "What will the Evangelicals do in Paraguay," and based his remarks on Gal. v. 1, and showed how Christ had brought liberty. Although by their laws they were a free people, yet, unfortunately, this freedom did not touch spiritual things. How could they have spiritual knowledge and liberty without spiritual teaching? This liberty comes only by the Gospel. Then he dealt with the confessional, showing that it was an unwarranted interposition between God and man, and concluded by repeating his text.

The following Sunday the Bishop addressed an encyclical letter to the people, which was read in the cathedral, and afterwards published. It denounced the Protestants, and requested the people not to attend their services or discuss their pernicious doctrines, and accused them of endeavouring to destroy the religion of the country. Dr. Wood replied to this manifesto, and offered to discuss publicly with anyone the Bishop might appoint the points which the Bishop had mentioned, and requested that permission might be given to all Roman Catholics to attend.

Several services have been held since, both in Spanish and English, as there were a number of travellers in the city. Señor Villamura, who is visiting the inland towns, told the writer that at Paraguari, the present terminus of the railway, sixty persons were present at a service he held. Thus the word is spreading where darkness has reigned. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for the outpouring of the Spirit on the inhabitants of that country. W. B.

SERVANTS' HOME, NORWOOD-ROAD.—In connection with this Home, Rev. R. P. Downes delivered to a full audience in the Roupell Park Wesleyan Lecture Hall, October 25, a lecture on "Jesus Christ: the Greatest Character in History." Mr. Woodford Fawcett, after explaining the work carried on in connection with the Home, and the success that had attended the efforts of the Committee, said it was their intention to start a soup kitchen as soon as the weather rendered such an institution necessary. They had in course of formation a "General Employment Brigade," to assist workmen of good character in need of employment.

MR. MOODY'S SEMINARY.

We lately mentioned that Mr. Weston, of Boston, had gifted a sum of money to Mr. Moody for the erection of a new dormitory in connection with the Young Ladies' Seminary at Northfield. A correspondent of the Worcester Spy sends to that journal a sketch of the laying of the corner-stone of the new building, on October 13. We extract some portions of his account. Our friends across the Atlantic do not let the grass grow under their feet. We ought to add that another friend (Mr. Talcott, of New York) has given a handsome sum to Mr. Moody for the erection of a library for the two schools at Northfield and Mount Hermon. The visitor to next year's Convocation will doubtless see both these buildings adorning the landscape of the Northfield section of the Connecticut Valley. The Spy correspondent says :—

"This has been a red-letter day in Northfield, the occasion of laying the corner-stone of a new dormitory for the Seminary bringing here together many of its patrons and friends. The beauty of the ever beautiful landscape was greatly enhanced by the brilliant autumnal foliage, but a more beautiful sight still was the 427 girls and boys, the pupils of the Northfield and Mount Hermon Schools. Just before eleven o'clock the Mount Hermon boys arrived, marching to music by a brass band made up from members of the school, and under command of a negro, a fine, soldierly-looking fellow from General Armstrong's Hampton school. Their marching was fine, and their music creditable. The large hall in the stone building was filled to its fullest capacity; quickly and quietly, and without delay the exercises opened with the anthem, 'God is our strength and our refuge,' sung by a choir from both schools. Then followed a short, earnest prayer by Rev. Mr. Reed, of Pallisades, N.Y., after which the 'Gloria Patri' was heartily sung by the whole assembly. Rev. Mr. Reed, of Springfield, read the parable of the vine and the branches, from the Gospel by St. John, and the latter part of the last chapter of St. Matthew. The reading was followed by a song by the boys, Our dear Mount Hermon Home,' [which is given on this page], and prayer by Rev. Mr. Shields, of South Hadley Falls.

"President Seelye, of Amherst, gave a short but excellent address on 'Consecrated Education.' He thought many of the evils of our time were in a great degree due to the separation of education and religion. Dr. Agnew, of New York, gave an address on the importance of physical culture, along with the cultivation of the mind, the heart, and the soul. Then came an excellent address by Mr. William E. Dodge, of New York. The gist of it was: 'Let your light so shine that men may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.' After another hymn, Mr. Moody proceeded to fill the box to be placed in the corner-stone. First he put in a copy of the Bible, then a copy of Gospel Hymns, Book of Common Prayer, Gospel Choir, names of the students, 217 in number, old coins, a book of Northfield views, New Testament, Catalogue of Mount Hermon School, new one-dollar silver certificate, a poster giving the programme of the exercises of the day, copies of various newspapers and religious papers, a small manuscript prepared for the purpose, having appropriate quotations from Scripture and poetry, and a memorandum stating that it is just fifty years since the Mount Holyoke Seminary was founded. The box having been taken away to be sealed up, the Doxology was sung, Benediction pronounced, and the assembly repaired to the site of the proposed building.

"The exercises there were brief: a prayer by Rev. Mr. Baldwin, of Springfield, a few words by William E. Dodge, who at the request of Mr. Weston performed the ceremony of laying the stone, the Doxology and the Benediction. All were then invited to a collation at Marquand Hall, most excellent and bountiful, which had been prepared by the students. The exercises of the day were extremely interesting to all who were gathered from near and from far."

Learned to love his mountain sermon;
Learned to love those words sublime;
Learned them here, on dear Mount Hermon,
In the early golden time.

A CHURCH IN HUNGARY.

Sir,—Having finished my thelogical course in Buda Pesth, and having afterwards spent two years in the College of the Free Church of Scotland, I asked God that he would give me a place where I could do something towards spreading the Gospel truth. He heard me, and sent me here, to N. Becskerek, in the south of Hungary, where a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries. The door is indeed great: 1500 souls of the reformed Protestant Hungarian Church are entrusted to my care, scattered over 6280 square miles, in 171 towns and villages. In many places the good seed has been sown; there are really believing Christians, several converted Roman Catholics, one from the Greek Church, and one Jew.

But I cannot work as I ought to do. I have neither church nor school-house. In Nagy Becskerek we are holding our services in the Lutheran church twenty times in a year; in other places we are holding our services in schools. I went from congregation to congregation preaching the Gospel truth, and collected, in 120 places, 20,000 florins. Everybody says it is a wonder, and I say, also, that it is the wonder of the Lord. Coming back with the money, with 4000 florins we have built this year a manse, and in addition to the 16,000 florins, we must collect yet 9000 florins for building a neat little church close to the County House. The King gave us a very good site for building a church and manse.

I am working for the conversion of souls, not only by preaching, but also through the press, and God has blessed very much my little books and writings, and the newspaper which I edited this year, to the spiritual good of many. Thanks be unto God there will be more evangelical ministers in Hungary, and so I hope that very soon a great revival will be here. Pray for this, for me, and for my scattered people, who are hungering and thirsting for the truth, and pray that my work may be pleasing to God and useful to many souls. Help may be sent to Rev. W. Wingate, 100, Talbot-road, Westbourne-park, London, W.

Joseph Szalay.

PARIS.—The Mission Intérieure, which seeks to evangelise France, has issued its sixth report. It contains some encouraging accounts of the way in which the evangelists and their messages are received. Much ignorance is met with, but no hostility to the Gospel. There is, unfortunately, a deficit of nearly £120.

Clapham Missionary Conference.

October 27 and 28.

This gathering, held at the Clapham Conference Hall, was convened by Mrs. Meredith and other well-known Christian workers in the South of London. A prayer-meeting was held on Monday evening, at which Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27.

At the morning meeting the President, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, said that at these Conferences we want to throw ourselves more manifestly upon God, and to make more room for prayer at each. He read James v. 17, 18, and reminded us of a prayer of Elijah's before the priests of Baal, when he asked that the people's hearts might be turned back again. The answer came straight, and they cried, "The Lord, He is the God." The Lord taught us to pray, "Thy will be done on earth, even as it is done in heaven." Africa and China are on the earth. We have his command, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth labourers into his harvest." Mr. D. M. Cameron led in prayer, and others in the audience followed. The subject for this morning was

AFRICA.

Rev. J. Walton said Africa has a special interest for English Christians. We can never think of that Dark Continent without remembering our sin—our complicity with the slave trade in former years. It has passed into history, and educated Christian Africans now read the story. England repented, and brought forth fruit meet for repentance. Twenty million pounds and the Gospel for African churches were substantial fruit, and England is still striving to repay in the best possible form. Eighty years ago, God sent us to the Cape of Good Hope, not merely to establish a naval station to watch our commerce in those seas, or to keep the water-way to India, or to provide homes for our surplus population. God had a higher mission for us. The Cape is to be our base from which to carry our evangel to the dark North.

He said he had some missionary experience, having spent fourteen years among the Hindoos. He had read a great deal of missionary literature, but, considering the circumstances, he did not know of a mission anywhere more successful than the mission of South Africa. The missionaries went among the Kaffir races when they seemed to be at their worst, and most people would have despaired, as they had sunk so low. These races were then savages, treacherous, and in the thraldom of witchcraft, while horrible license prevailed in family and social life. There was not a school, chapel, or minister; to-day in one communion there are 20,000 native Christians and seventy native ministers, and these native ministers have the same status as their English brethren. Recently, South Africa suffered from a protracted drought, and the natives were scattered over the land in search of work, reduced almost to starvation. Many sheep were killed and eaten, and some of the natives were caught and punished. Not one of the transgressors was a native Christian, and this fact has been admitted in the public prints. There are many schools, and the Government are spending £20,000 a year on education. Many of these schools are under the superintendence of missionaries. Mr. Walton referred to the terrible state of the women of Africa, and the iniquity of forcing the liquor traffic upon the people.

Mr. Edward H. Glenny, having given some interesting particulars of the work of the Kabyle Mission,

Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an address, urging greater consecration in connection with missions. We can only help others as we lay down our own lives. It was the life-blood of Christ that redeemed the world, and it is the life-blood of personal service that is going to save men. There came, said Mr. Meyer, into the Secretary's room of one of our Societies this week, a man with a patched dress. He might have come to beg, but instead, he laid down a bundle of crisp bank notes—£75. He was a market gardener, and said he thought that was the best bank. Mr. Meyer concluded with an appeal for Christians to yield themselves entirely to God. In a closing prayer he besought the Lord for special blessing and protection for Mr. Mackay, imprisoned at Uganda.

THE JEWS.

In the afternoon, the work amongst the Jews was the subject. Sir John Kennaway, Bart., who presided, said we want a deeper sense of individual responsibility with regard to those who are without the knowledge of God in Christ. The missionary spirit is a great test of spiritual life in each one of us. Do we think of those who have gone forth, leaving us to find the means for them, and support them by our prayers? Missions to Jews have difficulties which none can understand except those who have laboured among them. God hath not cast off his ancient people, and we want to brace ourselves up to bring home to them the great privileges still open to them.

Dr. Thomas Chaplin, of Jerusalem, described in outline the persecution to which the Jews have been subjected since the destruction of Jerusalem. The Gentile world have agreed in nothing else but to persecute the Jew. Medical Mission work in Jerusalem began in difficult circumstances. It was seen that medical work would open the way to more direct Christian teaching. The headquarters of the Mission is at Jerusalem, where there are now about 15,000 Jews, speaking various languages, and nearly all poor. In consequence of the efforts thus put forth old prejudices are passing away. Rabbis and educated Jews have now a considerable knowledge of the New Testament Scriptures. They have learned to distinguish between Christianity true and false, and to know that in true Christianity there is nothing like idolatry. During the last twenty-five years many Jews have been led to see Jesus as the true Messiah, but they hesitate to acknowledge Him openly because of the persecution that would follow.

Rev. J. M. Eppstein, lately a missionary at Smyrna, spoke of a recent meeting in London at which about one hundred and fifty Jews and Jewesses were present, praying for the conversion of their countrymen. A few years ago there were not ten converted Jews in the kingdom; now there are three thousand, and a Hebrew Prayer Union has several hundred members. Rev. Isaac Levinsohn told of wonderful work in Breslau. One missionary says that, during the past year 137 Jews have been received into the Church by baptism. He referred to the work in Russia. Fifteen years ago, if a missionary had gone into some Russian towns, many a Jew would have considered it a high honour to kill him, but it was very different now. Only twelve months ago, a missionary had an interview with students in Wilna. As a consequence, some young men have been converted and baptized. Testaments have been distributed, and to-day thousands of them are reading the New Testament. Some have formed themselves into a society to make inquiries concerning the kingdom of heaven.

INDIA AND CHINA.

Mr. Radcliffe again presided at the evening session.

Rev. J. Smith (late of Delhi) believed that a great deal had been lost as to the world's evangelisation by our questioning the practicability of obedience to the command, and also the results of missionary effort. We may be quite sure the Lord never sends his children on a fruitless errand. He referred to Mr. Johnston's pamphlet, and said that by the numbers tabulated we do not realise anything like the work that has been done. A hundred years ago we knew nothing of many lands, or the habits and customs of the people. We had no experience as to the best methods of approaching them, and, of course, we made blunders. He remembered a time in India when the people, by their ignorance of the meaning of words, could not understand the Gospel. The people of India are steeped in the superstitions connected with their religion. When the Christian Church attacked this Hindoo faith, they essayed the greatest task they ever undertook; but there have been precious results. In Calcutta a little time ago there were natives preaching to large crowds in English. When we consider the past and the present we are lost in astonishment. Only the other day, a procession of 2000 Sunday scholars took place at Lucknow. In Travancore the London Society have 20,000 Christians, and in Burmah, in the Karen mountains, there are 100,000 native Christians. Not only are there churches and schools, but a theological training institution, and now there are many well-trained native Karens at work. A great movement is going on all over the land. After referring to the growth of the work at Delhi, Mr. Smith appealed for men and women to go and preach the Gospel to the millions of India.

Rev. C. G. Moore said God had wonderfully blessed the labours of the Inland missionaries in their journeyings, so that all over China there is more or less a knowledge of the outlines of Christian truth. God is giving our brethren marvellous blessing. They are having repetitions of Pentecost. God is also blessing the native churches. On Saturday afternoon a telegram was read at our prayer-meeting which only left China that morning. How astounding that would have been to our forefathers. How vast are the resources at our command. Let us ask God to teach us how to utilise these. Mr. C. H. Judd said there are 1000 cities in China without a single witness to the Saviour. He had travelled twelve months in China and met one solitary Christian, though passing several large cities.

Mr. Radcliffe, after narrating the incident of Christ feeding the five thousand, said we had only been feeding eight ranks, and leaving the ninety-two hungry. We have resources in Christ, and we are well able to feed India and Africa and China. Christ is not paralysed; his arm is almighty. We want to lean heavily upon Him. He is the multiplier, and He will be with us to the end.

Several young men and women remained after the close of the meeting for conference with Mr. Judd.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28.

WOMAN'S WORK.

This morning Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided. Having read Rom. xvi. 1—16, he commented on the number of women who are there mentioned as labouring in the Gospel. He thought that the obstacles which had been put in the way of women's work was one of Satan's most successful devices. We have a great surplus of unmarried women in this country, and these might be a force for Christ at home and abroad.

Miss Thompson (Syria) said it seemed a natural thing that we should send the Gospel to Syria, since we were indebted to Syria for it. There are now about ninety teachers constantly engaged in connection with the British Syrian Schools. This work has grown to such dimensions that more than 3000 children are being daily instructed in the Word of God. Miss Thompson entered into some interesting details as to the interest shown by the women, and as to the witness-bearing of the converts.

Miss Baumann (India) said the question was not now how we should get into the Zenanas, but how sufficient workers could be sent out. On every hand there are open doors. In Lucknow the work is amongst three different classes of people, so that the missionaries have to know three languages. There are the Bengalees, the Mohammedans, and the Hindoos. Zenana work embraces much more than household visitation. It embraces schools, Zenana visitation, village work, and medical work. Each department is necessary, and God has given a blessing on each.

Mrs. Gardner James, who had to speak as to the work in Europe, gave an encouraging report of the work of the Y.W.C.A. in France and Germany.

Mrs. Mentor Mott said they had to thank Mrs. Meredith for two workers—Miss Walker and Miss Lord. Miss Walker is now in charge of the Mission at Damascus, where there are four schools and four Bible-women. Miss Lord is stationed at Tyre, where there is a blind Scripture-reader and schools for blind children. Many of the people listen to the blind Scripture-reader, tracing the lines with his finger, who might not otherwise hear the truth. A good work is also going on among Mohammedan soldiers.

LABRADOR.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. J. E. Mathieson spoke of the Moravian Missions, which he considered were carried on largely according to Apostolic methods. Their missions are scattered over the world; the total cost to the Society is £18,000, and about one-third of this is used to give pensions to the widows and children of those which have fallen in the field.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe having read John xvii. 21, said there were mountains in the way of the evangelisation of the world, but God could easily remove them, so that they should "skip like rams." With prayer and faith we shall have not merely floods of blessing, as on the Congo, but flood after flood all over the world.

Rev. B. La Trobe, of the Moravian Mission, described the difficulties and ultimate success of the Mission in Greenland. The work in Labrador was a result of that in Greenland. In Labrador the average temperature is five degrees below freezing point. The southern shores are inhabited by fishermen and a few Indians. The missionaries endeavour to bring the Gospel to the wandering tribes, but their chief work is with the Esquimaux. Their principal work is on a part of the coast about three hundred miles long. In 117 voyages not once has the mission ship from London failed to reach the Labrador coast; it has been protected through all dangers. The Harmony now lies in London Docks after the 117th voyage. She brought back a missionary, some children, and a young man, who is a representative of the seventh generation of unbroken missionary service. What have been the results? These Esquimaux are naturally treacherous, cruel, and bloodthirsty; now they are a Christian people, and throughout the century there has only been one murder committed.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Mr. H. Mahoney, of the South American Mission, described the early history of missions in this land under Captain Allen Gardner, telling of his death and that of his comrades. He himself went to Keppel Island in 1880, and had seen the work in various parts of the Continent. The work of the Society is largely educational. There are many Spanish-speaking people without any knowledge of Christ. Numbers of young Englishmen go out to fill business situations, but in most cases they fall into the prevailing style of life and habits. In the great towns infidelity is very strong.

INDIA.

At the evening meeting there was a large gathering, when Major-General Sir Robert Phayre presided. He said that he thought the turn of the tide had come with respect to the work in India by Christian women. He read three testimonies from lady workers on this point. There are, of course, many obstacles, but the seed sown will yet spring up and bear abundant fruit.

Rev. H. M. Hackett (Allahabad) mainly confined himself to answering certain objections with reference to foreign work. Rev. Henry Seeley, of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, spoke of the ignorance even of earnest educated people in England at this day with regard to India. This arises partly from mistaken views as to the purity of the ancient religious systems. The accounts of travellers are often misleading. The Christian work is nearly all in the great cities and on the seaboard. Ninety-nine per cent. of the masses of India belong to the labouring classes: there is great need of better education and of good literature.

JAPAN.

Rev. C. F. Warren said the treaties with foreign countries had been revised, and when the new provisions come into operation, missionaries will be able to live in any part of Japan. New ideas are fast permeating the masses of the people through the public press. There is still opposition to Christianity, but it is growing in favour. It is now or never with Japan. She is ready to receive the Gospel; are we going to send it?

Mr. Radcliffe having made an earnest appeal for volunteers and offered prayer, the Conference was brought to a close. We are glad to learn that as a result of the Conference a missionary prayer meeting will be established.

SUNDAY MORNING IN BIRD FAIR.

On a recent Sunday it was my privilege to spend the day with Miss Macpherson and her helpers. We were to hold an open-air service in Bird Fair, where Miss Macpherson has been working for the last twenty years. We left the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, about 10.15, with two American organs on small wheel trucks, and five minutes' walk brought us to the railway-arch which is one of the entrances to the Fair.

Here we found a densely-crowded street of small shops, or "shanties," and stalls, with innumerable cages filled with birds and fowls of every sort. Not a shop was closed, and business was going forward briskly. Besides the birds a brisk trade was being carried on in shellfish and various kinds of fruit. One was reminded of the pictures of Vanity Fair in "Pilgrim's Progress," such was the crowd buying and selling. Evidently the fourth commandment has not found its way into Bird Fair, except to be broken.

We divided ourselves into two parties, each taking up a position under a railway arch. We commenced by singing, and it was such an open-air meeting as I had never seen before. First a few children stopped, then a few grown people, and by the time we had sung three hymns we had a fair congregation. Men stopped to listen with live fowls held tightly under their arms, women with vegetables, and children with fruit and nuts. We had a few short addresses, with hymns interspersed, the crowd (chiefly men) ever increasing, and intently listening. From the back could be heard all the while the discordant cries of the traders. I noticed that many who stopped just to see what was going on became interested, and drank in the story of the love of God. Even the policeman on his beat stopped for a few minutes to listen. Some of us walked down the "Fair" distributing tracts, which were eagerly received.

It was now almost one o'clock, and we had been two and a half hours in the Fair. Miss Macpherson, who is evidently well known in the locality, spoke a few earnest words in conclusion, and with the doxology the meeting was brought to a close. We had a chance of speaking to individuals for a few moments, and we believe that some will look back to that Sunday morning as the time when they passed from death unto life.

LAMBETH RAGGED-SCHOOL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this Society was held last week in the Vestry-hall, Kennington, when the chair was taken by Hon. Lionel Ashley, President of the Society. The Hon. Secretary (Mr. Edwin Nichols) read the report, which stated that the average attendance of children on Sundays was—morning 78, and evening 278, and on week-nights 668, giving an average weekly attendance of 1024. There are ninety friends engaged in the schools, but this number is found to be inadequate for the work. The city missionary reported that the Gospel meetings had been very successful during the past year. The various engagements carried on besides the school work comprise parents' prayer-meetings, mothers' meetings, the institute, girls' sewing class, mission services, temperance society, band of hope, library, penny bank, and choir. It is gratifying to find that these various classes have been working very successfully throughout the year, and in many cases they have increased both in numbers and usefulness.

MR. TOYE'S ORPHAN HOME.

The seventeenth anniversary of this work was held on Friday evening, October 22, in the school-rooms situated at the rear of the Homes, Lewisham-road, Greenwich. Tea was provided at 5.30, after which a tour of inspection was made of the different houses, of which there are five. Great satisfaction was expressed at the admirable manner in which everything was arranged for the comfort and happiness of the children.

At seven o'clock a public meeting was held, at which there was a very large attendance of friends and visitors, when Mr. Toye, the founder of the Institution, gave a very interesting account of the Lord's dealings with him during the past year. He spoke of God's great faithfulness, and how help had been afforded him day by day, sometimes hour by hour; still, all their needs had been met. To cite one instance out of many, he said one morning he was without any money for the day, and the taxes were then due, when a lady called and left £100; just as she was leaving the door, the tax-collector was outside waiting for his money. The work had its origin in the deep distress which prevailed at Millwall in the year 1866, and which continued till 1869. Mr. Toye commenced by feeding a few poor starving children, and now there are 148 children in the Home. From the commencement of the work until now there have been nearly 500 children in the Home.

Rev. G. Elder (Presbyterian), Rev. A. C. Gray (Baptist), and other gentlemen, gave short addresses.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

"The sixteenth brief narrative of facts concerning the Lord's work on the Blackdown Hills contains many interesting incidents in connection with Mr. George Brealey's work. The Lord's injunction to go out into the highways and hedges is literally obeyed, and in reading the account we are deeply thankful that God has so blessed this work. There are, however, some passages that make us sorrowful, for they tell of ignorance so dense as to be almost incredible. Mr. Brealey and his wife were driving to a distant place, taking some books to distribute on the way. He says:—

> "We stopped at a cottage on the roadside to inquire the way to a certain place. A decent-looking woman gave us the information we needed, and then we asked her if she knew where she was going.
> "'Bean't going anywhere,' she said.
> "We reminded her she was certainly on a journey, and that the journey would soon end, and she would find it out, perhaps, too late to alter her way.
> "I said to her, 'We were in a place where the road divided, and there was no directing-post to tell us; so we did the best thing we could, and that was—inquired. You were kind enough to tell us, or we might have gone quite astray; and we thank you for telling us. So we would like to tell you there are two roads leading in opposite directions—one leads to hell, the other to heaven. Which of these roads are you going? And in which of these places are you to spend eternity?'
> "She looked at us with the stare of ignorance, and replied, 'Don't know; never heard. Nobody ever told me.' I handed her a Gospel, and she said, 'I can't read; niver went to school in my life.'
>
> "My wife said to her, 'But you have heard about heaven, and God's love to the world?'
> "'No,' she said, 'nobody ever told me; and I never went to school.'
> "My wife repeated a part of John iii. 16, and asked her to finish the verse. No, there appeared to be the darkest ignorance. We asked if she could tell who God's Son was, if she knew his name. No, she said she never heard. So we felt we must stay awhile with her, and at least tell her about her state; for even this she did not seem to feel."

With such facts before us, and knowing how many blind guides are scattered abroad, we must thank God for some faithful heralds raised up to carry the Gospel throughout the land. In connection with this work there has been difficulties and trials, but they have led to triumphs. We, however, refer our readers to the narrative, which may be obtained from our publishers (4d.), who also receive contributions towards the Mission.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain portrait and biographical sketch of the late Rev. Clarmont Skrine, of Wimbledon.

Two facts from Spain have their lessons. The current Sunday at Home quotes a leaflet sold in Madrid which gives the measurement of the foot of "the most holy Virgin." The measurement may be copied, and whoever kisses the copy and repeats Ave Marias three times can obtain 300 years' indulgence!

The other fact is communicated to The Times of October 26 by Miss E. J. Whately, who quotes from a letter by a pastor at Puerto Santa Maria, near Cadiz. On a late Sunday the Alcalde entered a Protestant chapel in that place, in which services have been conducted for twelve years past. He commanded the preacher to come down from the pulpit; then with men of his corps flung children and old people out of the chapel, and in a most arbitrary manner cleared the place and set a guard before the door. The chapel is in the house of a British subject, so we ought to hear more of this matter.

A correspondent in the north of Scotland writes as follows:—

> Being a small farmer, and having got all my crops secured before the rains came, I send £5 as a thankoffering. I want this sum to go for Scripture pictorial leaflets for the children of China. As the result of reading a small book, I think by Mr. Hudson Taylor, several years ago, I have pledged myself to give all I can for China. I first wished to go myself; but being then in poor health, and being so still, I thought the best I could do was to give all I could for carrying the Gospel to China's millions.

A correspondent writes:—"An extraordinary statement appears in your last issue which demands immediate notice. In a review of 'The People's Bible,' by Dr. Joseph Parker, the following occurs: 'It is argued, on the authority of the Speaker's Commentary, that ver. 14 of Num. xxvii. is a gloss, not belonging to the history at all, and importing into the narrative an element that does not belong to it. In this view the death of Moses outside the land of promise was no penalty.' The 'Speaker's Commentary' has been misrepresented. It suggests no doubt whatever as to the main fact of the verse. No scholarly critic durst have done so with Deut. iii. 26 and xxxii. 51 before him. It is a few words at the end of Num. xxvii. 14 that are said to 'look like a gloss,' i.e., a mere explanation of what was meant by the narrative of the water referred to. The words thought doubtful are—'that is, the water of Meribah in Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin,' which may have been transferred from the margin into the text. The Scripture teaches that the transgression of Moses and Aaron was the cause of their dying outside Palestine, and it is a very serious matter to set aside the plain teaching of Scripture because it does not fit in with our notions."

While some of our readers have been discussing the teaching of the Bible as to female ministry in the Church, a vigorous, and in some respects pathetic, controversy has been going on in The Daily News on "Lady Companions." Representatives of that modern "guild" have bitterly complained of the lack of sympathy and consideration on the part of mistresses; on the other hand, these latter have expatiated feelingly on the inefficiency and hypersensitiveness of their "helps." One lady companion went so far as to beseech all her serving sisters to avoid Christian households. Her experience may have been an unfortunate one, but the sweeping nature of her remarks are sufficient to put her out of court as an impartial witness.

In all likelihood, the faults may be equally divided between housekeeper and help. There are thoughtless and unreasonable people in all classes of the community. But a little mutual respect and mutual forbearance ought to prevent most of the household jars that are too common. Let those who serve in a family recognise the fact that they are under authority, and let them get rid of the silly notion that there is anything undignified in honest labour, however menial it may be. At the same time, let mistresses remember that those who serve them have the feelings and aspirations and weaknesses common to the sex, and let every reasonable liberty and indulgence be accorded to them. Above all, let both live in the fear and love of God, and they will learn to study each other's interest, rather than be over anxious about their own.

A perplexed correspondent sends to us a communication, from which we extract the following sentences in the hope that some of our readers may be able to furnish a suitable reply:—

> "Laying all on the altar" is a phrase much used in the present day in connection with meetings for the promotion of "the higher Christian life." I should be glad to learn in what sense the words are used by those who, while professing to have laid all on the altar, yet retain the possession and use of the property professedly given to the Lord. I have never heard any explanation as to what was really meant, or how it was done. This question is not asked in a captious spirit, but with an honest desire to know the truth, and to keep back nothing that the Lord requires.

The recent meetings of the British Association at Birmingham, and of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, have done much to roll away the reproach of any supposed antagonism between the revelations of God through his works and through his Word. It would be interesting to all who study the relations of science and religion if some capable Christian scientist would state what is the actual attitude of the scientific world, as a whole, towards revealed truth. We have reason to believe that such a setting forth of the facts on this point would be most gratifying to all devout thinkers.

The report of the Directors of the Convict Prisons contains the pleasing information that there is a continued decrease in the number of convictions for serious crimes in Great Britain. Not only was there a great falling-off in 1885-6 as compared with 1884-5, but there was a most remarkable diminution apparent when the figures were compared with those of 1859. In that year the population of England and Wales was over nineteen millions, and the number of people sentenced to penal servitude was 2589. In 1885-6, however, the number was only 1027, although the population has increased to twenty-seven millions and a half. The number of women now in convict prisons is only 821, as compared with 1509 in 1859. This is surely something to thank God for.

Do Christians give sufficient thought to their choice of investments? We fear it is the case that many who would shrink from any idea of direct responsibility for unchristian institutions and concerns are indirectly and thoughtlessly connected with both, because they have, without due consideration, aided in supplying the funds without which the companies or governments could not be carried on. The parable of the talents is capable of wide application, and doubtless the talents would be better employed if they were wrapped in a napkin and buried in the earth, than if they were put out at usury in ways and methods upon which the Divine sanction could not be looked for.

To those of our readers who have funds to invest, we would recommend the perusal of a thoughtfully-written little pamphlet, by Miss Caroline Haddon, entitled, "Where does your interest come from?" and published by Mr. John Heywood. We are sure that few, if any, will rise from reading it without having derived benefit and help in directions which only too often are altogether overlooked.

A correspondent has forwarded to us a printed paper purporting to be the Summer Number of a notorious secularist publication; but, as we have no wish to advertise the abominable compilation, we abstain from giving either the editor's name or the place of publishing. We can only say that we have never before seen the printing press so far degraded as it has been in the production of this utterly unholy paper. The ordinary stream of secularist and atheistic literature is vile enough, and its effects sufficiently pestilential, but it is pure and reverent by the side of this horribly blasphemous "Summer Number." Now that depraved pencils have leagued themselves with defiled pens in an attack upon everything that is holy, surely it ought no longer to be impossible to protect by law our young people from the vile influence of such a satanic combination.

Instead of repealing the Blasphemy Laws we need to have them intensified and amplified, so as to meet the needs of today. The liberty of the Press is so rapidly becoming licence that it is necessary the Christian conscience should be protected against it. We can invoke the aid of the policeman to guard our young men and women from indecent prints, and it seems somewhat inconsistent that the same agency cannot be employed against blasphemous papers and pictures.

A paper has been sent by the Royal Commission on Education to the managers of public elementary schools. It seeks to elicit popular opinion on a variety of topics. It is to be hoped that managers will not let the answers be supplied in a perfunctory manner. Especially should there be carefulness in replies to queries in relation to domestic and practical instruction. In this aspect of teaching, America and Switzerland are in advance of us. Technical and industrial training for boys, and household for girls, might well come in the place of some subjects which are taught, and would materially tend to the welfare and domestic happiness of the people.

"If our statements be true,—and we stand to every one of them,—we are verily arrived at a critical and solemn crisis; and it is only the part of folly to shut our eyes to it and ignore it. We are persuaded that most earnest Christian men will take a different view of the part it becomes them to act, at this hour, to their country and their Church. We are in the midst of a great revolution; we are in the thick of a great battle. There is advance, great and rapid, along the whole line of the Roman Church; and along the whole extent of our Empire at home and abroad: and we can bestir ourselves not an hour too soon. We do not despair. We hear the voices that still cry, 'The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!' It is not against us only that Rome fights. She makes war on that Great King who sits on the 'Right Hand of Power': and He will overcome her. The modern Babylon is as certainly doomed as was the ancient Babylon: and the cry shall yet go up to heaven, 'Babylon the Great is fallen! is fallen!'"

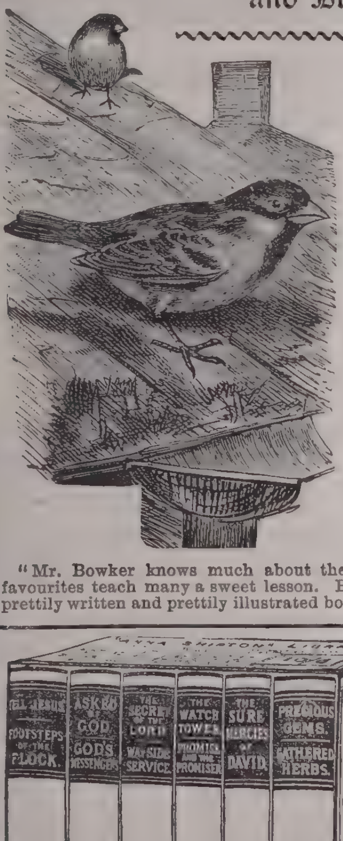
With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.



"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."

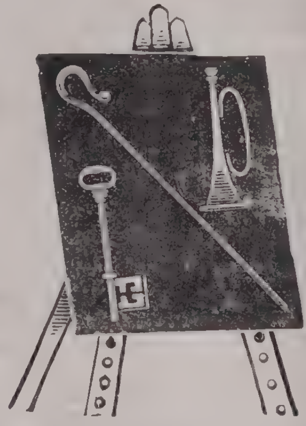
Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the black-board; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. WINTER MONTHS OF 1886.

The Committee are putting forth renewed and extended efforts to check Immorality throughout the Land, and to Rescue its Victims. They are most anxious to repeat the Meetings in Glasgow and Edinburgh.

FOREIGN FALLEN WOMEN, unhappily a numerous and neglected class of evil-doers in London, have been brought under the Gospel of the Grace of God. Suitable Tracts and Appeals in Foreign Languages have been judiciously distributed, in addition to the holding of Special Meetings.

BREAKFAST MEETINGS have been opened to gather in those who, though impressed by the Over-Night Meetings, still remained Undecided!

The Town Agent of this Movement is employed in Missioning among the Lowest Outcasts in the London Parks; and throughout the entire metropolis Meetings for the Rescue of Outcast Women are being held.

£5 will cover the expense of Missioning a District and holding a Meeting.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing toward the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or to Financial Secretary.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

THIS Society was established in 1860 for the reception of the less degraded class of penitent fallen young women for whom little provision had been made. Young women are admitted on any day, and coming from any quarter whatsoever if there be room in the Homes. Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied. A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character, and position, to mix with others.

Since the Homes have been established 2670 have been admitted; of this number 910 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 292 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others. While inmates of the Homes, the young women are trained in household and domestic duties, with a view to their becoming good and useful members of society. The great object, however, kept most anxiously before the Committee is, to afford them opportunities of religious instruction, and to impress upon them the extreme importance of turning to God with all their hearts.

The applications or admission are painfully urgent, and the charity is wholly dependent upon voluntary contributions.

The Secretary will be happy to forward the last annual report.

H. THOMPSON, Esq., Treasurer, 38, Mincing-lane, E.C.
W. HORNIBROOK, Secretary, 4, Regent-square, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—(1) For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day. (2) For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five shillings would pay for a child for a week. (3) For law expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support. The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED IN 1844.

THE Funds of this Society greatly need replenishing. If liberal aid be not speedily forthcoming, the present number of 125 grants to poor and populous metropolitan and suburban parishes must be still further reduced. The Readers visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, and the erring; and they help generally in the Spiritual work of their respective parishes.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Annual Subscriptions, Donations, Collections, which are greatly needed.

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The Seamen's Chapel, opposite the London Docks, was well filled with seamen and others on Thursday last to hear an address from Mr. Wm. Green, of Highgate, on "Why I destroyed my Cellar of Wine." The particulars of this destruction are known to our readers. Mr. Green closed with an earnest and eloquent appeal to the sailors to give up whatever was standing between them and Christ. At the close a number of seamen signed the pledge.

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

NEW EDITION. JUST READY. Seventh Thousand.

The Veil Lifted:

OR,

The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

AUTHOR OF

"Personal Experiences of Roman Catholicism."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"The style in which the narrative is written is at once simple and elegant, bearing in its natural form of expression, almost on every page, the impress of truth. There is no raving, no exaggeration, nothing that savours of dark and mysterious insinuations; nothing but the expression of deep regret that, under the sanction of the religion of Christ, such a system should be tolerated."
Berwick Warder.

"Convent life is death to all the finer feelings of our nature, and an outrage upon the plainest teachings of the blessed Gospel which has come to us to make us free. And here is a chapter on 'Righteousness by Works,' which is, of course, the great aim of the miserable bondage of the poor prisoners. The book is elegantly written, with a feeling and a pathos becoming such a dismal subject. Ye lovely maidenhood of England, beware of the fearful convent!"—The Christian World.

NEW EDITION. JUST READY. Tenth Thousand.

Personal Experience of Roman Catholicism.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON,

Author of "The Veil Lifted."

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly denominination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is . . . effective and invaluable."—The Freeman.

"Now, more than ever, ought books like this to be diligently circulated, for not only is Rome as busy with her wiles as heretofore, but in what was once a Protestant Church we have converts and the Confessional too. As for the book of Miss Richardson, we can answer for the accuracy of many of its details."
Evangelical Christendom.

"Any of our readers who may have friends or neighbours journeying Rome-ward, will do them a great kindness, and perhaps save them from much suffering, by giving them a copy of this pleasantly-written book."
The Christian World.

Price Sixpence, post free.

Babylonianism:

OR,

The Devil's Travesty of the Kingdom of the Son.

By ROBERT BROWN,

Author of "Jesuitism," "Gospel Truths," &c.

"An interesting comparison of the salient principles and practices of Popery, and those of the 'Babylonian Mother,' showing very clearly why the Apostle applied the name of Babylon to Rome."—The Rock.

"A most admirable treatise upon the subject, showing that the system of Rome is but the renewal of the idolatries and iniquities of Babylon."
Gilead.

Price One Shilling, post free.

Jesuitism:

OR,

The Devil's Travesty of the Son of the Kingdom.

By ROBERT BROWN,

Author of "Babylonianism," "Gospel Truths," &c.

"Mr. Brown is doing right good service to the Churches and the country by his faithful exposure of the awful atrocities of Popery. Anyone who wishes to know what the Jesuits really are should procure this pamphlet."—Christian Miscellany.

"The author has evidently studied the subject carefully, and in these pages he lifts the veil, and shows the utter rottenness of the system which he well terms 'The Devil's Travesty of Religion.'"—The City Press.

Rome, the Murderess.

A Four-page Tract, suitable for general distribution, 1s. 6d. per 100, post free.

"We fervently hope our Protestant friends will scatter broadcast the important tract which lies before us; setting forth as it does the true character and bloodthirsty aims of the Papal Church—for good assuredly will thereby be done. The price of the publication is only 1s. 6d. per 100."—British Protestant.

Popery and Protestantism

Brought to the Test of God's Holy Word in the form of a Catechism.

By Rev. THOMAS PHILLIPS.

Twenty-fifth Thousand. Tinted covers, 3d.

"Sets forth the distinguishing features of the two forms of faith in a manner at once simple, lucid, and comprehensive. The conclusion in every case is condemnatory of the Creed of Rome."
Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald.

Complete in One Volume. 1083 pages.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Early Christian and Protestant Martyrs, in all parts of the World.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Cloth boards, 10s. 6d.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know."—Primitive Methodist.

"We are pleased to see the 'Book of Martyrs' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of Foxe in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. Morgan & Scott an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

"We strongly advise our readers who do not already possess this truly national standard work to secure it in the attractive form in which it is now produced."—Fireside News.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

At a recent evangelical mission some wise words were spoken with regard to the injunction "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." It was stated that the majority of middle-aged women found in the inquiry-rooms at missions in England are backsliders, being Christians who had married ungodly husbands, and who had been led back into the world. Only too frequently this important point is set aside when what is considered "a good match," is in prospect. In this respect, as in all others, to disregard the injunctions of God's Word is to set out upon dark and dangerous paths.

The new edition of The Imperial Gazetteer of India, just issued, after a revision which has occupied nearly five years, contains much information of interest to all those who are earnestly looking for the fulfilment of Christ's assurance, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." One of the volumes has several chapters with regard to Christianity in India. The editor, Dr. Hunter, who is Director-General of Statistics to the Government, is peculiarly qualified to deal with the subject. In summarising the condition of Christianity, he says it is now the faith of over two millions of the Indian population—a number twelve times as large as that of those who follow the teachings of Buddha. The Doctor states that whereas in 1830 there were only 27,000 native Protestants in all India, Ceylon, and Burmah, in 1871 there were 318,363. It is interesting to note also that the Government of India expends £160,000 per annum in supplying the spiritual wants of the troops and civil service.

A few weeks ago it was stated in the newspapers that large quantities of fruit, perfectly fit for food, had been taken away from the markets in Manchester and destroyed, there having been too large a supply. It was added that in some portions of the country fruit was permitted to rot on the trees. More recently tons of fish, which could not be sold at certain rates, were, it is stated, sent away from a London market to be used as manure, not, however, until an effort had been made to hand it over, free of cost, to several workhouses, where it was refused, as being "against the regulations of the Poor-law Board."

In these days of so much bitter privation there can be no excuse for such wilful and wanton waste of articles of food, and it is to be hoped that some arrangement will be found possible, under which so shameful a proceeding would be, if not impossible, at any rate unnecessary. Will not managers of some of our charitable institutions look into the matter, and aid in preventing a lavish harvest of either the land or the sea being ungratefully cast back to either the earth or the water.

Those Christians who have so earnestly been advocating the wisdom of preventing crime may find an argument based upon economy in the fact that, for the past few years the average cost per annum for each prisoner has been, in Scotland £25 9s. 7d., in Ireland £37 1s. 8d., and of the convicts, in Scotland a varying sum from £18 to £54, in Ireland £31 to £54. When to this outlay is added the loss of labour, and in many cases the cost of maintaining the prisoner's family in the workhouse, it is not difficult to see that the adoption of preventive rather than remedial measures is true economy, and that, even if no higher interests were involved, our Prison-gate Missions and Prisoners' Aid Societies deserve all possible encouragement and support.

The Dublin Evening Telegraph of October 12 gives the following information:—

> This morning Rev. Henry Ward Beecher left Dublin for Queenstown, en route to New York. He spent last evening at the Gaiety Theatre, enjoying the excellent performance of "The Mikado."

A grave responsibility has been incurred by those ministers and leaders of the people who have introduced Mr. Beecher as the great teacher of the age, and vouched for his "orthodoxy of heart." Are the speech and prayer at the Memorial Hall consistent with the Lyceum in London and the Gaiety in Dublin?

We have before us the Report for 1885 of "The Little Home for the Care of Friendless Girls, 15, Fearnley-road, Camberwell-grove, S.E. It records the death of Miss Farnham, and declares that—

> The glorious experience which made the beauty of her life so manifest to all was the result of her accepting the testimony of Christ as the Son of Man having come in the spirit of judgment, and so cast out her enemy, as in Zeph. iii. 15; and so seeing all evil in the evil one, and not in the Christian.

We have good reason to believe that this is incorrect, and that Miss Farnham did not receive, but rejected this Agapemone doctrine, which teaches that there is no evil in the now sinless flesh. If this be true, walking in the flesh and in the Spirit must mean the same thing!

THE CHRISTIAN is mentioned three times in this Report. We, therefore, feel necessitated to disclaim any sponsorship for "The Little Home." We find in the list of donations the names of two young ladies of the Agapemone. The Home is said to be conducted by Miss Ker and Miss Cobb. The balance-sheet is audited by a resident in the house of Mr. Ker, who is the chief propagator in London of the teaching in which Miss Farnham is erroneously stated to have lived and died.

"The following servants of God have kindly given their names as referees: Revs. C. H. Spurgeon, Marcus Rainsford, C. A. Fox, George Wainwright, Thomas Lardner (Battersea)," and other gentlemen and ladies. We are sure those above named would not endorse the errors we have noted, and we hope they will make inquiry, for the sake of others to whom their names are a password. This is the Home referred to by a correspondent, in our issue of September 16, as having imbibed these errors.

Next week we shall have something to say about Rev. J. W. Wood, of Australia and Brighton in this connection.

A Dublin daily paper finds in the sensible utterances of the Archbishop of Dublin at the recent Christian Convention "indications of the growth of a larger influence, which must overcome and quench sectarian sentiment in its meaner forms." With our contemporary, we recognise the tendency towards a common platform in spiritual work, which, we trust, will develop by and by into closer Christian union. Evil is marshalling its forces, and the powers of darkness are attacking humanity, not only through its passions and vices, but on the higher ground of mind and intellect, and it would seem as if the final struggle were not far off. It is therefore lamentable to see divisions in the Lord's army, and differences in almost every camp. Surely in these days, when God has so unmistakably shown, in the abundant blessing poured out upon his children labouring in so many different sects, that He does not recognise our sectarian names, there is less excuse than ever for disunion and strife. What a blessed time will that be when we come to recognise the full force of the Saviour's words, "He that is not against us, is for us."

A remarkably painful statement was made by Archdeacon Crosthwaite, of York, at the recent Church Congress, at Wakefield, to the effect that one of the greatest difficulties to be contended with in the examinations for ordination is the limited knowledge the candidates possess of the Scriptures. Surely this ought not to be the case.

An almost equally noteworthy utterance came from Canon Maclure, who presided over the sectional meeting upon "Recreation and Literature," and who stated that in Lancashire they had "Sunday-school dances," which were conducted with the utmost propriety. He also proclaimed his "belief in a parish play, provided the vicar acted as censor," and, perhaps it is unnecessary to add, he went on to denounce the Puritan view of the matter as cant. We do not need to comment upon these or other singular admissions and statements made at the same meeting, they speak for themselves, coming, as they did, from professed followers of Jesus, but it is interesting to note that an Irish contemporary briefly calls attention to the remarks we have quoted, and says, "Thank God, we are not so far advanced in Ireland yet!"

Canon Moore has recently told an interesting story of a young man who attended a lecture against the Bible, given by an atheist, in the Midlands. The lecturer quoted only part of 1 Kings xv. 5: "Because David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from any thing that He commanded him all the days of his life," and proceeded to base upon this incomplete quotation an argument against the Book and against God. "Finish the verse," cried the youth. "I have no Bible," replied the lecturer; "finish it yourself." "Nor have I one," said the youth, "but I can finish the verse;" and he at once completed the text: "Save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." The result was that the meeting rose against the lecturer, who, it is stated, left the hall. The Canon says that the young man had been brought up under the care of the Protestant Orphan Society in Kerry, Ireland.

The anecdote is all the more remarkable from the fact that the text was one by no means of general use, and we should be glad to believe that there are many young men with so close and intimate a knowledge of the Word of God as to be able thus to defend it from wilful mis-quotation and mis-representation. And why should not such be the case? There are many who have the classics at their fingers' ends, and who are able to "cap" any number of lines; surely the Bible is far more worthy to be committed to memory.

BIBLE STUDIES.—36.

PRECIOUS THINGS IN THE EPISTLES OF PETER.

1.—The trial of faith (1 Pet. i. 7) precious because of (1) the character formed. "The trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing" (James i. 3, 4). "When He hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold" (Job xxiii. 10. (2) The reward. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love Him" (James i. 12).

2.—The blood of Christ (1 Pet. i. 19) precious as (1) the ground of acceptance. "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev. xvii. 11). "When I see the blood, I will pass over you" (Exod. xii. 13). "Made nigh by the blood of Christ" (Eph. ii. 13). (2) The means of cleansing. "The blood of Jesus Christ . . . cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7). "White in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. vii. 14). (3) The measure of love. "The blood is the life" (Deut. xii. 23). "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" (John xv. 13). "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. v. 8). "He loved me, and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20).

3.—The living stone, the corner stone (1 Pet. ii. 4, 6, 7), precious (1) in God's sight. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 17). "The Son of his love" (Col. i. 13, margin). (2) To man. "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in Him" (Phil. iii. 8, 9). "He is altogether lovely" (Cant. v. 16). "Christ is all" (Col. iii. 11).

4.—Faith (2 Pet. i. 1) precious (1) to God. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him" (Heb. xi. 6). "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear Him, in those that hope in his mercy" (Ps. cxlvii. 11). (2) To man, as (a) the element of life. "The life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God" (Gal. ii. 20). "We walk by faith" (2 Cor. v. 7). (b) The organ of vision. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. xi. 1). "We look . . . at the things which are not seen" (2 Cor. iv. 18). "By faith (Moses) forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as seeing Him who is invisible" (Heb. xi. 27). (c) The means of victory. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 John v. 4). "Taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked" (Eph. vi. 16).

5.—Promises (2 Pet. i. 4) precious because of (1) their Giver. "He is faithful that promised" (Heb. x. 23). "All the promises of God in Him are Yea, and in Him Amen" (2 Cor. i. 20). (2) Their nature. "Exceeding great." (3) Their effects. "That by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Pet. i. 4). "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Cor. vii. 1).

RAILWAY MEN'S BIBLE UNION.—The cards for 1887 will be ready in December, with the New Year's Letter. Applications should be made to the Hon. Assistant Secretary, Miss Kingstone, 40, Beresford-road, London, N., enclosing penny stamp. All private correspondence and applications for tracts to be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. John W. Probyn, Oakfield, Three Bridges, Sussex, who will gladly answer them as far as her strength will allow.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME AND INSTITUTE.—Last year the number of soldiers, their wives and children, and members of the Royal Irish Constabulary, accommodated with beds was 3732, and including this number, the total number of visits to the Institute was 36,437. Much blessing has attended the Gospel and temperance work regularly carried on; ninety-nine soldiers signed the pledge during the year, the total number on the roll being 1039. The one desire, we are told, of all connected with this work is, "that any who come to our Home may, if they will, hear the Way of Life, and receive the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour." The Institute is situated at Conyngham-road, Phœnix Park Gate.

RESCUE WORK IN LIMEHOUSE.

On Tuesday afternoon, October 19, the first general meeting in connection with Miss Forsaith's work among friendless girls was held at the Rectory, Limehouse, where a number of friends assembled in response to the kind invitation of the rector, Rev. W. Donne and Mrs. Donne.

Mrs. Walsham How had consented to preside on the occasion, but on account of serious illness in her family, was unable at the last to attend. Her place was kindly filled by Mrs. Percy Bunting, who, in a deeply interesting address, urged upon her audience the importance of re-establishing and maintaining small Preventive and Rescue Homes to which young girls could at any time be transplanted from positions of temptation and peril.

The question of individual responsibility with regard to the salvation of these poor girls was urgently pressed upon the meeting. Each had a part to do in this great work which could not be deputed to another. All could not take the charge of a Home, but each one had a circle which they could influence and educate, a few girls they could protect, and many probably would be in positions which would enable them to provide for the rescue and training of at least one or two, who otherwise must inevitably fall victims to the vice and degradation of their surroundings. Miss Steer, of Ratcliff, Rev. A. E. Dalton, vicar of All Hallows, and other friends, afterwards addressed the meeting.

There is accommodation in the Home for twelve girls of from sixteen to eighteen years of age; it was opened last June by the Bishop of Bedford, since which time thirty girls have been received, some of whom are now in situations; others have been passed on to more suitable Homes, while the inevitable proportion have proved, humanly speaking, failures, and have returned to the old life, the power of evil gaining the victory over an enfeebled will. A laundry has been opened in connection with the Home, which is working very satisfactorily.

Any ladies who can assist in visiting or taking evening classes for the girls in connection with the Home would find a large field of labour, as yet unoccupied, for the Master. Address, Miss Forsaith, Mitre House, 8, Three Colt-street, Limehouse, E.

RICHARD WEAVER AT WIMBLEDON.

At Haydon Hall, South Wimbledon, a ten days' mission closed last Thursday, conducted by Richard Weaver with his accustomed earnestness. Mr. Iles and other workers assisted in the inquiry-room. Mr. Iles is a small local builder who, almost entirely at his own expense, erected Haydon Hall, and keeps its platform well supplied by faithful preachers. Many persons could testify to the power of God's Word, as set forth during this mission by Richard Weaver, some having been brought under conviction of sin, and some to decision for Christ.

Mr. Weaver related thrilling personal experiences with saints and sinners which were parables of instruction, encouragement, and warning, delivered with an irresistible pathos that will not soon be forgotten. He is preaching this week at Mr. Hatton's Chapel, Little Wild-street, St. Giles.

SOLDIERS' HOMES, ALDERSHOT.—These Homes, and the meetings held in connection therewith, have proved the first step to a new life in many cases. The parade services are made as evangelistic as possible, and the voluntary are also well attended by the soldiers. "Thank God," it is added in the report for this year, "we have many brave Christian men—true to their Captain, an honour to their country, and a joy to us;" while "the peaceful expedition of Sir Charles Warren in South Africa, and the Royal Engineers, like the good Centurion, building a beautiful house of God for the old African chief, are blessed and important facts in the history of the year." In both Homes, by means of Bible-classes and religious and social meetings, with the help of Scripture-reader and chaplain, much spiritual work has been done, for which there is abundant cause for thankfulness.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The President of the North Pacific Railroad has prohibited the sale of liquor on the Company's premises.

The New York Observer says: "Close to the saloon, and scarcely less formidable in its proportions, stands the tobacco shop."

The Aberdeen United Trades Council have determined to ask municipal candidates if they will support Mr. McLagan's Local Veto Bill.

Writing on "Tippling Wines," a correspondent of The Temperance Record says many households are blighted and cursed by drunken women.

Owing to the re-union of the Good Templars, the English Grand Lodge Charter law-suit, Lees v. Malins, begun nine years since, is to be abandoned.

A correspondent in Victoria writes to The Temperance Record that an indispensable factor of success in the colony is to prohibit the alcohol curse from entering the home.

Eleven students of Southlands (Wesleyan) Training College offered for examination for the training college prizes of the National Temperance League, and not one failed.

A Brewers' Exhibition was opened last week at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. Amongst numerous exhibits was an invention to prevent the peculations of barmen.

Referring to the London school fees question, The Times suggests that "a half-pint of beer the less during the week is surely not a very great sacrifice for the future good of a child."

At its recent meeting, at Manchester, the Alliance decided to summon a conference of representatives of all the leading temperance organisations. It is expected the gathering will take place early in 1887.

Montsora, the Bechuana chief, said to Rev. Owen Watkins, "These English towns and this brandy will kill us, and we shall have to remove to the desert in order to get away from the white man's drink."

A medical correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says he has lately had half a dozen cases of delirium tremens in young men under twenty-one, and in each case has traced the habit to the bad example of parents.

Revs. S. F. Pearson and J. Collins, Portland, Maine, are now in England prepared to conduct Evangelistic and Gospel Temperance Missions. They bring warm commendations from General Neal Dow and others.

In Ceylon, the right to retail arrack is sold by Government officials at public auction. It is made from the sap of the palm of the cocoa-nut, and not from the milk, as many suppose. Its evil effects on the community are painful.

A drunkard signed the pledge and was converted about three years since. Recently he fell away; on being questioned, he traced his fall to a glass of beer pressed upon him by a gentleman for whom he was working.

The United States Commission on the state of the Indians in the north-west reports them in a terrible condition owing to "America's continental curse—liquor." So demoralised are they that they sell their women to shameless white men.

At a recent meeting, Lady John Manners said the sight of a woman drunk in the streets, in Germany, caused the greatest astonishment. The physician to the Empress of Germany had told her that they never allowed a woman to take alcohol.

Sir Charles Warren, in a recent address at Oxford, said that in South Africa there are many thousands of natives who have been reduced to the lowest depths of poverty and an early death by the drink traffic, forced upon them by the laws of this nation.

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the State of New York, held recently, is said to have been "the finest ever held by the organisation." A similar gathering of the Massachusetts State Union was also a great success.

NEW ZEALAND NATIVE TRACT INSTITUTION.—A correspondent, referring to Mr. Blakeney's recent speech at the Mildmay Conference, sends a copy of the report of this Society. He suggests that some Christians in England may, perhaps, be disposed to help on the work of this Institution. Already two tracts have been translated; 2000 copies of the one and 3000 of the other have been printed. It is encouraging to know that they are welcomed wherever distributed, even by those who will not listen to the Gospel message.

A HOME for the children of necessitous clergymen, barristers, medical men, &c., has been opened at Tunbridge Wells. Mrs. Ladds, the foundress, was led to begin this work, by hearing of the numerous cases of acute distress amongst parents who, having commenced life with bright prospects, have, through change of circumstances, been reduced to actual misery, and are unable either to educate or provide for their children. A lady and her sister are in charge of the Home under the direct supervision of Mrs. Ladds. The amount charged for each child being exceedingly small, it is to be hoped that the effort will receive support from many friends. Mrs. Ladds, Ellington Cottage, Tunbridge Wells, will gladly give further particulars.

EVANGELISING IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THERE were brave doings among the Wesleyans of Birmingham last week. For a year it had been their cherished design to hold a great Gospel mission, and at length, after long and prayerful preparation, their object has been happily achieved. To Rev. William Middleton, of the Bristol-road Chapel, belongs the credit of having projected the great scheme. Coming to Birmingham about a year ago, fresh from the work of a revival at Sheffield, he rightly imagined that Birmingham was a suitable field for such cultivation. He brought this suggestion before the monthly meeting of ministers. It found favour, and Mr. Middleton was empowered to make arrangements for putting his project into practice. He entered into correspondence with a number of well-known revival preachers, with the results that the past week have shown.

In the borough and its suburbs, there are more than forty Wesleyan Methodist churches and preaching places. The Theological College at Handsworth contributes its quota of twenty-five church members. For purposes of church organisation, Birmingham is divided into seven circuits. There are twenty-four ministers, and six supernumerary ministers. These have formed a sort of committee of preparation for the great mission, and have in prayer and person helped forward the good work. The mission has been under the general direction of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, to whose skill and tact it owes much of its success. Mr. Hughes has been located at Islington Chapel, the religious resort of cultured and wealthy Edgbaston. The villa residents of Moseley-road have been approached by Rev. Thomas Cook, who, as one of the Connexional evangelists, has been greatly blessed. Rev. J. G. Stuart, of Nottingham, who has had ten years' experience in circuit ministry, and six as an evangelist in Cornwall and Northumberland, was stationed at Bristol-road; and his brother, a London missioner, at Belmont-row, Newton-row, was apportioned to Rev. H. T. Smart, who is active with pen as well as voice, and is peculiarly in sympathy with the working classes; Smethwick to Rev. J. H. Hopkins, circuit minister, and successful evangelist throughout Lancashire and Yorkshire; and Wesley to Rev. E. Davidson, a young Connexional evangelist.

For a long time past the local ministers had been preparing the soil, and a week before the mission opened an elaborate scheme of house-to-house visitation was carried out. On Saturday, October 23, the ministers met in prayer and council to discuss their plan of work. On Sunday the mission began in earnest, when each of the special preachers met the congregation of the chapel to which he had been appointed, to plead for special aid during the coming week. Especially Mr. Price Hughes pleaded that the enthusiasm which Birmingham displayed on all public questions might not be withheld from the cause of God.

For daily afternoon services, the Town-hall was lent by the Mayor, and there, from three to four each day during the week, there has been a large and orderly congregation. To most of us the vast hall is best known as the scene of fierce political contention, and so its newer aspect of last week has presented a remarkable contrast. Capable of holding some five thousand people, it has each day been more than respectably filled by devout, attentive worshippers. A choir, drawn from the four or five hundred choristers of the various chapels, has furnished the music, and a little band of students from Handsworth College has day by day been a prominent feature of the gathering.

Strong faith, simplicity, homeliness of simile, and the strong force of personal experience, have characterised the addresses. That they have found their mark is abundantly proved already. At an early stage of the mission Mr. Hughes was able to make the joyful announcement that inquiring sinners were coming to God by hundreds.

Mr. Hughes himself has proved a good general. Under his skilful direction the interest of the meetings has never flagged; not a moment has been wasted. Then his own remarks have been singularly appropriate, and he has been prompt to turn every incident to account. The evening meetings have brought the various preachers even more closely into communion with the people. Night after night the chapels have been crowded by congregations drawn from every class.

A very pleasant characteristic of the mission has been the steady daily increase in the attendance. Day by day a number of volunteers have been at work, in some cases forming themselves into singing parties, bringing in from the highways and byeways as many as could be prevailed on. It is at present impossible to estimate the numbers that have attended the many services. This much only may be stated—that more than eight hundred have presented themselves in the inquiry rooms.

The daily meetings in the Town Hall were brought to a close on Friday, when Rev. H. T. Smart, speaking of the mission, described it as something in the nature of a Pentecost, and asked why the Church should not enjoy a perpetual Pentecost? He indicated the class meeting as an underworked field of Methodism, and said every day there were many wounded by the Spirit's sword for whom Gilead balm might be found in the institution to which he referred.

Mr. Price Hughes followed, and then the mission was practically at an end. But it has stirred up a greater enthusiasm among Birmingham Methodists. They are eager to carry on the work and loth to part with their mission visitors, to whose aid they owe so much; so Rev. Thomas Cook and Rev. E. Davidson stay on for a time to continue the special effort.

Requests for Prayer.

PRAYER for blessing on mission services to be held at Charlton Kings, by Mr. Herbert Francis, from November 7—21.——For blessing on a conference of Christian ministers at Minchinhampton, Gloucestershire.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings in Huntly, N.B., conducted by Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, under auspices of Y.M.C.A.——For mission services at the Assembly Rooms, Hornby, Lancashire.——For blessing on a mission at Gamlingay Heath, from November 7—16, by Captain Warner Dennis.——For rich blessing on a mission from November 5—22, at Christ Church, Derby, conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris.——Prayer is asked for Miss Reade on her return to her labours in India; that blessing may be given her during the voyage, and that the Lord may continue to prosper her work.——For blessing on special services at Hazelbury Plucknett, by Mr. John Bennett, of Evangelisation Society.——For blessing on Newport-Pagnel, a small market-town, the centre of many villages.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has had successful meetings in Dublin during the past two months. Those held in the Tent were crowded, and many professed to find the Saviour. The services in the Merrion Hall have been greatly blessed to all classes.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—The Christian Medical Mission, which was begun here in January, 1885, has grown beyond the most sanguine expectations of its most enthusiastic friends. Over 5000 cases have already received advice and medicine, and on the general working expenses the Treasurer has a sum of over £167 in hand, which will be used chiefly towards defraying the expense of a new Mission House, which has been erected in Clarence-road, Southend, at a cost of between £600 and £700.

SUMMERS TOWN MISSION.—Amongst other particulars contained in the seventh annual report of the work in this straggling Surrey hamlet, we see that the number of Sunday scholars has outgrown the accommodation, and the committee desire to erect another class-room as a memorial to the late Mr. S. Morley, who was interested in the Mission. Besides the Gospel services and Sunday-school, there are a mothers' meeting, provident club, girls' sewing class, and temperance meeting carried on, while systematic district visitation has been a means of getting into closer contact with the people. Mr. P. F. Proctor, Glengariffe, Nightingale-lane, S.W., is the Treasurer of the Mission.

WITNESSING IN MANCHESTER.

UNDER circumstances of peculiar as well as painful interest, Rev. G. Wainwright lately became pastor of a little flock of believers in Manchester. Until February last he had the pastoral oversight of the Baptist Church meeting in Grosvenor-street in that city. An inroad of worldliness among his congregation in one of its most fascinating but most perilous forms—that of a dancing class—moved him, and others like-minded, to enter a strenuous protest. This testimony, which was endorsed by a large majority of the members, having failed to exorcise the evil, Mr. Wainwright felt constrained to resign the pastorate. One deacon and a number of the congregation adhered to Mr. Wainwright, and severed themselves from the Church in Grosvenor-street. The subsequent order of events may be stated in the pastor's own words from a brief narrative in The Sword and Trowel for September last:—

"Our action threatened at once to plunge us into difficulty. What were we to do? The way was dark; yet my conscience approved the step I had taken, and I had every confidence that God would open some door for me. Early in the previous year the United Presbyterians had vacated a very excellent, commodious, and well-furnished building, situated most conveniently for our friends, and in the centre of a largely-populated district Communications were at once opened with the view of renting the place; the trustees were exceedingly favourable to our application, and in less than a fortnight we found ourselves again united, and in a building very greatly superior in all respects to that in which we had formerly worshipped. About a fortnight later the friends, numbering 105, gathered together to constitute themselves a Church of Christ, when we sang the two verses beginning, ''Tis done, the great transaction's done,' and 'High heaven that heard that solemn vow;' the motto text for the Church was given from John xv. 16. Then a season of holy communion followed as we gathered around the table of our Lord, after which, with hearty unanimity, I was invited to the pastorate. A union, commenced under circumstances so impressive and solemn, promises to be of lifelong duration, and has in it the assurance of much blessing, of which not a little has been already received."

Mr. Wainwright proceeds to state, as another element of deep personal interest, that the church building in which he now ministers is the same as that in which he received his first spiritual impression, twenty-five years ago. He is led to exclaim very devoutly and very gratefully, "This is the Lord's doing, and marvellous in our eyes." God has set his seal on the faithfulness of his servant by adding some fifty to the membership of the Church since its formation in February.

Mr. Wainwright and his fellow-workers are desirous of purchasing the building, which is offered at a very low figure. In this effort Mr. Spurgeon and others have expressed their hearty and practical concurrence. At a time when the line of demarcation between the Church and the world threatens to be obliterated by the incoming tide of unspirituality, such self-sacrificing fidelity to conviction ought to have the sympathy of all earnest followers of Jesus Christ. We will gladly take charge, on Mr. Wainwright's behalf, of any help that our readers can render him at this juncture.

SAN REMO.—A sale of Italian goods in aid of the Presbyterian Church, erected at San Remo, Italy, took place in the College buildings of the United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, on the 18th and 19th ult. After paying cost and carriage, over £100 was realised. Towards the cost of site and building Rev. Alex. Robertson, the pastor, had succeeded in raising nearly £2500, which, with grants or loans from the Continental U. P. Board, leaves only a few hndred pounds of debt to be extinguished. It is proposed to hold a similar sale of specimens of Italian antiquites and workmanship in Glasgow in December.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

If there is one movement more than another which deserves the fervent prayer and genuine sympathy of the Christian public, it is rescue and preventive work such as Miss Steer carries on at Ratcliff-highway, London, E. Abundant testimony of the importance and fruitful results of her noble efforts was borne at the annual meeting held at the headquarters of the Mission in Princes-square, Ratcliff-highway, on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided, and there was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. Ranged along one side of the hall in which the gathering took place, and in front of the platform, were thirty of the youngest girls at present under Miss Steer's care, neatly dressed, and looking bright, healthy, and happy.

The Chairman touched on the necessity for more direct Christian effort, expressing the hope that there would cease to be so much proxy work, and that more individual energy would be exercised. He thanked God from the bottom of his heart that Miss Steer had been led to come to the East-end of London, and for the success with which He has so abundantly crowned the efforts put forth.

Rev. Dr. Clifford made an earnest and eloquent appeal on behalf of the Mission. "I ask not only for your prayers, but for your generous gifts, in aid of this important and necessary enterprise. A visit to this part of London is as strong an argument for the continuity and extension of the work as can be cited. The sorrow, the grief, the vice, and the sin here will constrain us to pray that the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ may be richly poured out upon us, so that we may be co-workers to the uttermost extent with such friends as Miss Steer. Very sincerely do I express my sympathy with this form of Christian activity. I pray that the new year of service upon which you are entering may be one of increased delight and increased prosperity."

Mr. Percy Bunting laid stress on the point that if the Christian Church had only followed out the example of our Lord, and paid more attention to the neglected and outcast, that numerous class would have been very much less. He claimed for Miss Steer's work the help of Christian people, on two grounds—pity and justice. Rescue work could never be effected unless it was dictated by a very strong feeling of justice. Many of those they wished to save from a life of vice and misery were not only the victims of misfortune, but of injustice, and their sin was shared by those who went unpunished.

Rev. Mr. Jones gave an interesting account of the state of St. George's parish previous to the establishment of Miss Steer's Home. "Then," he exclaimed, "the only place of escape for the poor girls who tried to get out of the miserable life into which they had been drawn was the dock. So numerous were the suicides that a policeman had to be on duty at a certain bridge night and day to prevent the unfortunate women from throwing themselves into the water. Now we have this excellent Home, where women and young girls are received at any time—night or day."

Miss Macpherson followed with a most impressive address. Her description of the vice, and misery, and the sin of the East-end was sad in the extreme, but her expression of faith and hope that God would yet change the ways and remodel the hearts of the people must have filled those present with joyous expectation. "During the last visit I paid to Miss Steer," she said, "I saw such a sight as I never saw before. A labourer came with his little lamb, who, while going on an errand, had been outraged. Let us have the joy of sharing with our dear sister, Miss Steer, in the rescue of these lambs."

After some encouraging words from Rev. J. P. Gledstone, Miss Steer made an interesting statement as to the work. We have not space for a résumé of her deeply touching remarks; but we hope all who desire the success of such work will send to Miss Steer (Bridge of Hope, Princes-square, St. George's, E.) for a copy of the report. Before and after the meeting a sale of girls' needlework took place.

OBITUARY.

SIGNOR G. MALAN.

The Waldensian Church has lost a true friend in Signor Giuseppe Malan, who died on October 17 at Turin, regretted by all who knew him. He was an active member of the Waldensian Church, and took the deepest interest in her welfare.

REV. DR. KIRK, EDINBURGH.

This Scottish divine, who for some years held the professorship of Practical Theology to the Evangelical Union, died at Edinburgh on Wednesday week, at the age of seventy-four. He was an ardent advocate of temperance and hydropathy.

MR. G. ROBINS, INVERNESS.

Widespread regret has been caused (says The Inverness Courier) by the unexpected death, after a brief illness, of Mr. G. Robins, who acted for some years as the hon. sec. of the local Y.M.C.A., and was an active worker in kindred branches of effort. He was married about two months ago.

CAPTAIN THE HON. FRANCIS MAUDE.

This well-known and warm friend of every good cause died on Saturday week at his residence in Onslow-square, at the patriarchal age of eighty-eight. Says The Rock, in a biographical notice:—"Those who attend May meetings and other religious gatherings in London, will remember the venerable white head and the pleasant face of one of the most active Christian workers of whom England could boast." Captain Maude was quite recently elected President of the Church Missionary Society, in succession to the late Earl of Chichester.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN'S LECTURES.

These addresses descriptive of life in the Holy Land continue to excite the attention and interest of large audiences wherever they are given. Miss Von Finkelstein has lately received a very gratifying testimony to the blessing that follows her words. A young man wrote to her from a provincial town stating that he had for years been leading an ungodly life. About six weeks ago he was constrained to go and hear one of her lectures; he was so much interested that he attended a second lecture on the following evening. Some earnest words spoken by her at the close of this lecture made such a deep impression on him that he resolved by God's help to lead, a different life. He sought and obtained forgiveness, and since then has been experiencing a new-found joy.

Miss Von Finkelstein gives lectures in Exeter Hall to-morrow (Friday) evening and on the following Friday. Friends of young men and young women may be doing them good service by inducing them to attend.

GLAD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY.—A special despatch to The Evening Post, dated Somerset, Ky., October 5, says:—"After an exciting contest, Local Option was carried here yesterday by 142 majority. When the news went forth, church bells of all denominations were rung. Temperance women were congregeted in the Baptist church all day, offering up prayer for success. When the news of the victory came, they sprang into each other's arms, shouting and crying for joy. Everybody seems satisfied with the result except the saloonists, who have hitherto had everything their own way."

MR. AND MRS. RODRIGUEZ, in their last monthly "Letter from Spain," give an interesting account of work during their summer holiday. Visiting San Pedro Pescador, a town some ten miles from Figueras, they obtained a room, through the kindness of a sympathetic resident, in which they held meetings for some weeks, holding Sunday-school, magic-lanterns, evening classes, &c., and many Gospel meetings. The interest of the people was very marked. The close of the Sunday-school finds a crowd of women outside the door who press in, saying, "Now it is the Women's Sunday-school." We much regret to hear that Mrs. Rodriguez has had an attack of gastric fever, which we trust will not prove to be of a serious character.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

The anniversary festival and the annual meeting of this valuable institution took place on Saturday evening last. A sumptuous tea was served to the large number of ladies and gentlemen who were present, and to the lads attending the Institute. The meeting which followed was presided over by the Treasurer of the Institute, Mr. F. A. Bevan. The hall was beautifully decorated with flowers. After the singing of a hymn and prayer,

Mr. Henry Hill, Hon. Secretary, read the report for the past year, of which we can only give a brief summary. Contrasted with the work carried on in preceding years, there has been such development as calls for hearty thanksgiving and praise. Instead of 400 lads attending as formerly, there have been 1234, and the attendance at the evening classes numbered about 300. In all sixteen evening classes have been carried on; among the subjects taught are shorthand, book-keeping, carpentry, and wood carving. A small gymnasium has been furnished with suitable apparatus. It, however, is far too small, and, while forty boys may be allowed there, provision is required for, at least, 200. This want will be met when the swimming bath is adapted for a gymnasium. For this new apparatus will be required. The lads who attend the Institute are from the working classes, their earnings averaging from 6s. to 12s. a week. With the object of promoting their social well-being and developing thrift, a savings bank has been started. There are now seventy depositors. A friendly society has been inaugurated, which supplies for a subscription of 2d. a week medical attendance in case of sickness, and 5s. every week.

Every evening a short religious service is held. The attendance is voluntary, and all are invited to come, and earnest and thoughtful lads gladly avail themselves of the opportunity. A Bible-class is held weekly, and it is believed that a work of grace is going on in the hearts of some of the lads. Out of this has grown a Youths' Christian Association; the earnestness and zeal manifested are very encouraging, and some of the members are engaged in Christian work. Efforts are being mad to make the work self-supporting. The swimming bath is nearly completed, and the walls of the new lecture hall are built. The funds are more than exhausted, and unless speedy help arrives the building will have to stop.

The Chairman said there was reason for great thankfulness to God when they thought of how He had prospered the work of the Institute, and he thought that some of the thousands who within the last few days had been flocking to Bishopsgate to lay out their money in a great beer concern might very profitably invest a portion of their means in the Working Lad's Institute. They would in the truest sense get a far richer return, though not in gold, than they would by investing in undertakings that demoralise and debase their fellow-men.

Rev. Dr. Tyler expressed the hope that the Institute might be the means of raising up a goodly number of young men to preach the grace of God.

Chief Annosothkah, of the Mohawk tribe, in the course of a brief address, touched upon the spread of civilisation and of the Gospel in his native country. Rev. J. Wright also spoke.

During the evening prizes for swimming were presented to a number of lads, and musical selections were given by several ladies and gentlemen. A swimming competition also took place in the bath.

Y.M.C.A., TOTTENHAM.—Mr. Salem C. Wilson held a week's successful services in connection with this Association. The meetings were all well attended, but on the Tuesday evening, October 12, he lectured on "Africa," in his native costume. This lecture was so successful that it was repeated in another part of the parish on the following Saturday.

Letters to the Editor.

A MISSIONARY BUREAU.

SIR,—With respect to the notice in your issue of October 14 of the proposed "Missionary Intelligence and Registration Office," which we are now endeavouring to establish, we would appeal to your readers for their assistance as follows.

If they have any useful information to give, of the special needs of any district, of any special opening existing which requires to be filled, of any suitable person who desires to be used, of any work being carried on, or any suggestion they may consider valuable, would they kindly favour us with it, addressed to Mr. W. T. Float, Secretary, "Missionary Intelligence and Registration Office," 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C. Should any of your readers incline to share in the preliminary expenses, we should be obliged by their communicating with the Secretary, as above.

We are also anxious to receive offers of assistance from ladies or gentlemen who are willing systematically to supply us with extracts from publications, or help us in other ways.

Yours faithfully, F. B. MEYER.
H. W. FRY.

PROPHESYING.

MY DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me a few lines in reply to Mr. Brooke's letter in yours of Oct. 21 His chief point is, that prophecies have already ceased. Truly the Word says, "they shall be done away," but the same is also said of "knowledge," which is "now in part," and shall also be done away, when we know "even as also we are known;" when the "in part" knowledge shall no longer be needed, and not till then. "But he that prophesieth edifieth the Church," and when the Church is glorified, and no longer needs edification, then, and not till then, shall prophecies also cease. Since the Word so plainly says, "he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and comfort, and consolation," and that he "edifieth the Church," I conclude and hope that prophecy may never cease until "that which is perfect is come," and faith is lost in sight; when love shall reign supreme in the Church, without divisions, strife, or "splits."

If prophecies, in the Scriptural sense, have ceased, then 1 Cor. xiv. 1—"desire earnestly spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy"—is a useless statement to us. I suppose Mr. Brooke would also think that 1 Thess. v. 20, 21—"Quench not the Spirit; despise not prophesyings"—is a needless admonition for us. Yet, alas, the need is still too painfully plain, for when some of the "daughters" have claimed the promise of the Spirit (see Acts i. 14; ii. 1, 4, 17, 18: notice the repeated word all) in these "last days," as did the daughters of Philip (Acts xxi. 9), some of our "brothers" have shut them out of the meeting; and thus despising prophecy, have quenched the Spirit. No wonder that such should have to complain of a want of power in their meetings, when they will not allow God to use whom He will.

Let me add that since "in Christ Jesus" "there can be no male and female" (Gal. iii. 28, R.V.), but all are one, we find in Rom. xvi. 7, "Junia (a woman), of note among (en) the apostles," and mention of Phœbe, a deaconess (Greek), and of other women, as Paul's "fellow workers."

Possibly a more fair translation would have shown, that while in 1 Tim. v. 1, presbuteros is an "elder," in ver. 2 presbutera is an "elderess," and not an "elder woman," a different word being used for aged women and men: presbutis—es. If men, as well as women, would only wait till they were "moved by the Holy Ghost," or filled with the Holy Spirit, we might be saved all the various "splits" and Babel of doctrines now in the various churches or "gatherings."

Are we to suppose that, because we now have the written letter of the Word, preachers do not need the Holy Spirit to give them their message, to guide them into all truth, to take of the things of Jesus Christ, and declare them unto us? Surely not. It would almost seem as if in "these last days" God were giving even a greater fulfilment of his promise than in Peter's time. "It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour forth of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." Yet I have some sympathy with Mr. Brooke, fearing that much of the preaching of the present day is not prophesying.

Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus,
CHAS. H. JUDD.
Milthorpe, near Towcester.

IN a subsequent letter, referring to the criticisms in our last issue on his address, Mr. Judd writes:—

The fact of the word lalein being frequently translated "to speak" does not militate against its meaning to "talk or chatter" as given by Liddell and Scott. Its use is so very wide, that, as Mr. Miller points out, it is used when "seven thunders uttered their voices." Hence it is hard to conceive how a more suitable word could be found to forbid talking and asking questions by women in the churches. Could our critics find any better word by which the Word of God could forbid the uneducated woman of the East to chatter in the churches?

Robinson's "Lexicon of the New Testament" says:—"Lalein, to speak, to talk, p.p., to use the voice, without any necessary reference to the words spoken, and thus differing from eipein and legein." Now this will cover the whole ground. For it is quite intelligible, when we read that God "talked" with Moses, and we understand it by the context. But when we say that boys are not "to be talking" in the school, we do not suppose that it is forbidden to repeat their lessons, or answer their master's questions, even though they must talk to do so. So, when the Word forbids a woman "to be talking" (lalein) in the church, it is never intended to forbid her prophesying with her head covered, when moved by the Holy Spirit to deliver his message, otherwise God would be contradicting his own Word and promise.

WOMAN PREACHERS.

DEAR SIR,—The limitation which our honoured friend, Mr. Brooke, puts upon "prophesying," may be admitted without invalidating in any way the claim that women may "preach," in the ordinary acceptation of the latter word. The prophecy of Joel, quoted by Peter, manifestly called attention to a new condition of things, introduced by the descent of the Holy Ghost and the formation of the Church of Christ. The world was to be turned upside down, not by the repetition of that to which man had been accustomed for ages, but by the inauguration of methods strange, unprecedented, and probably distasteful to the prejudices of the majority. If God in his infinite wisdom put men and women on equality as inspired "prophets" in the Apostolic age, it is a fair argument to claim that à fortiori the lesser gifts are equally placed in possession of both sexes. The burden of proof lies with those who hold the contrary opinion. Saul the persecutor haled to prison women as well as men. What for? For confessing Christ publicly, no doubt; we may fairly infer by preaching as well as in conversation, and that women preached as well as men.

If one carefully examines the reasons which militate against the full liberty of women to preach, I think they will be found to rest chiefly on the prejudice of ages, and that they form part of that great mass of oppression and of repression which we recognise as "the subjection of women." I have not read a well-known book with that title, but I feel that the acquiescence of woman has been gained over by the persistent authority of men exercised in that direction throughout the Christian ages. So much so, that now, with increasing light upon this great question, and in face of the tremendous needs of a world in ignorance of Christ's Gospel, women are more prejudiced against female preaching than men are.

When we consider that in all lands, Christian, Pagan, or Mohammedan, the custody and training of children is almost wholly in the hands of women, we can well understand how ingeniously Satan will raise objections to women becoming the messengers of glad tidings to their sisters, and through these to the myriads of children lying in darkness and ignorance. When one remembers Rowland Hill's protest against the devil monopolising all the good music, and thus putting in a plea for a happier and more melodious service of praise, may we not also protest against the thought that women may take any place, however conspicuous, without a note of objection (so far as sex is concerned), until they raise their voices aloud in public for their Lord and Saviour? I have never seen a complaint raised against our beloved Queen, when at the opening of Parliament she stands amid her assembled nobles, and delivers her speech to an admiring crowd. I am old-fashioned enough to look upon the theatre as "a synagogue of Satan;" and I pity from the bottom of my heart the men and women engaged in ministering, as actors and actresses, to the pleasures of worldlings; but who ever hears a remonstrance, on the ground of sex, against women being admitted to this particular profession?

Looking at the multitude of women who, partly from choice and partly in consequence of the artificial arrangements of modern society, remain unmarried, upon many of whom there are, virtually, no claims of home or of family, are we to deny to those on whom is laid the burden of souls the privilege of ministering the Word of Life to the extent of "the ability which God giveth" (1 Peter i. 10, 11); whether that ability be the conduct of a mothers' meeting, or a men's class, or a public service in a large congregation? The aim is that "God in all things may be glorified;" but the Church virtually decides that God in some things only shall be glorified, and takes exception to the full development of the ministry of woman.

One thing more: May I hazard the assertion that, setting on one side the official preachers or ministers in this country, we can find a host of Christian women much better instructed in Holy Scripture than any corresponding number of men; and I cannot refrain from crying, to what purpose is this waste of talent and this knowledge of the way of salvation, of which the Church is guilty, when she says to our Christian sisters, "Thus far, and no further!"

May I add that, in this matter, I am speaking in no way representatively, but only venture to offer opinions which, personally, I think are right and Scriptural.—Yours sincerely,

JAMES E. MATHIESON.

MISSIONARY PROGRESS.

DEAR SIR,—I have only recently read your issue of September 16, and if I had not known a little about Christian Missions, I should have been intensely distressed by the statements quoted from Mr. Johnston's pamphlet, "A Century of Missions." Mr. Johnston compares the number of Christian converts in a hundred years with the increase of population. I do not think that is a right comparison. It would give one the impression that Missions are being overgrown by heathendom. Of course the contrary is the fact. Every convert is a gain to Christ. I cannot see that every fresh heathen is a loss. I am also surprised to hear of this increase of 200,000,000; but I suppose these figures are from a trustworthy source. The grand mistake, it seems to me, is in taking the results of a hundred years' work. Of course we know that the annual increase now is utterly different to what it was a century ago, and that the proportionate rate of increase grows every year.

We are told that no such system as Hindooism or Buddhism has even been arrested in its progress by our modern Missions. What I read is that these very religions are being honeycombed in India, and that heart belief in them is being rapidly given up. It is an undoubted fact that the modern triumph of Christianity in Japan is marvellous, and that there and in China the whole standard of morals is being raised by it. These facts are potent. I cannot but think that such depreciation of the results of Missions weakens the hands of those who love the cause which is so dear to the heart of all true lovers of our Master.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to make a correction? I am reported to have said, at the meeting at Exeter Hall on the 20th inst., respecting the children's seaside services, that "at least five of this year's preachers were in former years converted at these services." What I did say was, "that as boys they had been frequent attendants at the services."

Yours very faithfully, T. B. BISHOP.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY (191, High-street, Stoke Newington, London, N.).—This Home for the reclamation of fallen women, which is seldom without its full complement of about seventy women, has at present a few vacancies. The Ladies' Committee meet at the Institution every Wednesday at twelve o'clock to receive applicants.

GENEVA.—Madame Buttini, whose name is very popular in Geneva, died in September, at the age of eighty-seven. She was the wife of a rich doctor, with whom she laboured for the solace of the afflicted and the advancement of the kingdom of God. Their estate at Miolan was gradually covered with establishments of different kinds—a Convalescent Home, one for Sick Children, a School for Evangelists, &c. In the immediate environs of the town there are also two hospitals, one for men, and one for women, the creation of this devoted couple. After the death of her husband, Mdme. Buttini continued the noble work.—Journal Réligieux.

BISHOP HANNINGTON'S DIARY.

The Church Missionary Society has received the diary of the martyred Bishop, and the entries made during the last week of his life appear in The Record of last week. The whole is deeply affecting, but space will only permit of our giving a few extracts. On Wednesday, October 21, after relating the demands of the chief, his seizure and struggle with his captors, he wrote:—

I said, Lord, I put myself in thy hands, I look to Thee alone. Then another struggle, and I got to my feet, and was thus dashed along. In spite of all, feeling I was being dragged away to be murdered at a distance, I sang, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and "My God, I am thine," and then laughed at the very agony of my situation. My clothes torn to pieces so that I was exposed, wet through with being dragged along the ground, strained in every limb, and for a whole hour expecting instant death, hurried along, dragged, pushed, at about five miles an hour, until we came to a hut, into the court of which I was forced. "Now I am to be murdered." As they released one hand I drew my finger across my throat, and understood them to say decidedly No. Another two or three hours' awful suspense, and I learnt that the Sultan had seized me, and simultaneously my men and loads, and meant to keep me prisoner until he had received word from Mwanga. I am in God's hands.

October 22 (Thursday).—I found myself, last night, on my bed in a fair-sized hut, but with no ventilation, a fire on the hearth, no chimney for smoke, about twenty men all round me, and rats and vermin ad lib., fearfully shaken, strained in every limb, and great pain within, and thirst, and sleep departed from my eyes. I received no news all day beyond what I expected, that the messenger might reach Mwanga to-morrow, and would return in about four days, so that I dare expect nothing under a week. I fear I am in a very caged lion frame of mind, and yet so strained and shattered it is with the utmost difficulty that I can stand; and yet, though in close confinement, there are many mercies to be thankful for. I ought to be praising God's holy name, and I do.

October 23 (Friday).—Afternoon. To my surprise my guards came kneeling down, so different to their usual treatment, and asked me to come out. I came out, and there was the chief and about one hundred of his wives come to feast their eyes on me in cruel curiosity. I felt inclined to spring at his throat, but sat still, and presently read to myself Matt. v. 44, 45, and felt refreshed. I asked how many more days he meant to keep me in prison. He said four more at least. I implored leave to sleep in my tent. To this he agreed, with two armed soldiers to sleep at each door.

October 24 (Saturday).—Thank God for a pleasant night in my own tent, in spite of a tremendous storm and rain flowing in on the floor in streams. Personally I quite forgave this old man and his agents for my rough treatment, though even to-day I can only move with the greatest discomfort, and ache like rheumatic fever. The day passed away very quietly. I amused myself with Bible and diary.

October 25 (Sunday).—Fourth day of imprisonment. Still a great deal of pain in my limbs. The fatigue of dressing quite knocks me over. One of my guards, if I understand him rightly, is making me offers of escape. I do not, however, want to escape under the present circumstances. Three detachments of the chief's wives have been to-day to see me. They are very quiet and well behaved, but greatly amused at the prisoner. Mackay's name seems quite a household word; I constantly hear it.

October 28 (Wednesday).—Seventh day's prison. A terrible night, first with noisy drunken guard, and secondly with vermin. I don't think I got one sound hour's sleep, and woke with fever fast developing. O Lord, do have mercy upon me, and release me. I am quite broken down, and brought low. Comforted by reading Psalm xxvii. . . . Much comforted by Psalm xxviii.

October 29 (Thursday).—Eighth day's prison. I can hear no news, but was held up by Psalm xxx., which came with great power. A hyena howled near me last night, smelling a sick man, but I hope it is not to have me yet.

This entry—the last—takes up but a small part of the page of the diary. The Bishop apparently expected to write more later on. It is almost certain that he was killed on this day, and there is reason to think that he was taken out to execution very shortly after he had written these words. Very possibly the ink was scarcely dry on the paper before the good Bishop had finished his warfare on earth, and was summoned by the Master to join the noble army of martyrs above.

The Book World.

Inches of Thought for Spare Moments. By G. S. J. Nisbet & Co. A collection of literary "odds and ends," containing more real wisdom and shrewd sense than many a ponderous tone. The author (a lady, we judge) has such an observant faculty, and a clever knack of turning her reflections and experiences to good account, that we hope she will some day give us another assortment of equally "happy thoughts."

India: Its Condition, Religion and Mission. By Rev. James Bradbury. 4s. 6d. Snow & Co. After thirty-four years of keen observation among the wonderful people of whom he writes, with a full knowledge of their religion, character, customs, and literature, Mr. Bradbury ought to be a most interesting authority on the subject. We have heard and read much about India, but this work contains a great deal that is new to us. Valuable for the immense amount of information it supplies, it will be read for its own sake, as a contribution to entertaining and instructive literature. In every respect, it is a thoughtful, well-written book.

St. Paul the Author of the last twelve verses of the Second Gospel. By H. Heber Evans. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This is the production of a thoughtful scholarly mind. Its object is to prove that the celebrated passage in question was written under the eye of Paul, instead of Peter as generally supposed. To establish this the author points out similarities, sometimes trivial, between the second Gospel and Paul's Epistles. What would be the gain, practical or doctrinal, if his point were proved, it is hard to see. It is suggested that as Paul's Apostolic authority was often depreciated by allusions to his past unbelief, Paul was moved to add an account of the unbelief often exhibited by other apostles. The suggestion savours little of Christian generosity or dignity.

State-directed Colonisation: The Proposal Explained and Defended. By Mr. Alfred Simmons. 6d. E. Stanford. This, the second of the series of papers, being issued by the National Association for Promoting State-directed Colonisation, is written to explain their scheme, and at the same time to point out the difference between State-aided emigration and their plans, which have been regarded as synonymous by some, so that a prejudice has been aroused against the scheme. The plans have been carefully thought out by men experienced in colonial matters. The object is one that should commend itself to everyone who has the welfare of the people at heart; and the adoption of some such means are needed to utilise the large tracts of land in our colonies which still remain unimproved for want of the labour that in England cannot find employment. All interested in the social improvement of the people should read and carefully consider the proposals of this Association.

Morning Family Prayers for a Year. By J. R. Macduff, D.D. 6s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This handsomely-bound volume supplies a felt want. Many heads of families who read every morning a portion of Scripture have not the time or the gift of applying it to private or family life. Thus the Word of God may to many become unfruitful. On the other hand, many books of family prayer have too little of God's Word embodied in their structure. In the present volume each prayer is based on the preceding passage of Scripture. Thus blessings are acknowledged, promises pleaded, holy examples aspired after, in a way that must arrest even formal worshippers. Some may think that here and there the prayers savour of "preaching," but we must not forget how instructive are the prayers of Daniel, Solomon, and Nehemiah. These prayers are brief enough to admit of the insertion of special requests, while a few "occasional" prayers are appended. Dr. Macduff's name is a guarantee for purity of doctrine and fervour of spirit. The type is so large and clear that weak or elderly eyes will find the book a special boon.

The Charter of Christianity. By Rev. Andrew Tait, D.D. 12s. Hodder & Stoughton. "The Charter" is the Sermon on the Mount. Thus the title is a happy one, and the contents of the book not unworthy of the title. Sermons and meditations on Matt. v., vi., and vii. are plentiful; expositions are rare. We know only two of importance—one by Tholuck, in German, the other by Archbishop Trench. The present will compare honourably with either. Dr. Tait brings to his task the enlarged mind of a student and scholar, the penetration of a true critic; above all, the illumination of a spiritual mind. To each section he expounds, the Greek text after Wordsworth is prefixed. Some sections are peculiarly full of information that throws light on verses too often misunderstood and misapplied. Those, for instance, on the oaths and asseverations, Christian beneficence, Manichæism, and Pelagianism. Other sections, on "The Fatherhood of God," "Christian Perfection," and "False Prophets," are also worthy of special attention. A clear map of Palestine, and an exhaustive table of contents, add to the completeness of a very valuable book.

Scotch Sermons on the Old Lines. By Rev. James Fraser, M.A. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Rev. John Brown, of Bedford, the author of the best biography of John Bunyan yet published, addressing a company of divinity students last winter, said that he should like to impress on them the fact that their work as preachers was "not to speculate, but to proclaim." If this volume of sermons were in print at that time, he could have pointed to it as an illustration of what he meant. Mr. Fraser has little sympathy with those ministers who use the pulpit to air their little theories about God and man: he has a definite message to declare, and declares it in unmistakable language. He has not got beyond the three R's, which used to be the sum and substance of Puritan theology—Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by Jesus Christ, and Regeneration by the Holy Spirit—and is content to ring the changes on these fundamental truths. Our age requires such preaching. The sermons are a selection from some hundreds delivered in the course of a forty years' pastorate, and are sent forth in the hope that, as they were acceptable to the people for whom they were prepared, they may find favour with a larger audience. If they do not contain much that is new, they have the merit of putting familiar teaching in an attractive setting.

Outlines of Jewish History. By the author of "About the Jews since Bible Times." 3s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co. From the historical standpoint, this book is admirably adapted to serve its purpose, which is, to place in the hands of families and schools a reliable and compendious history of the Jews from Biblical times to the present day. Commencing with the captivity in Babylon, Mrs. Magnus traces the progress of her race through the Maccabean dynasty to the time of Christ, and on through what she truly styles "the thick darkness" of their condition, from the destruction of Jerusalem to the "dawn" of better times, when in 1591 liberty began to be granted to them in Holland. The advance of legislation on their behalf is then sketched as it was seen in all the great States of Europe, until it reaches our own times, the book closing with the true assertion that "finis will never be written on the page of Jewish history till the light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day shall fall upon it, and illumine the whole beautiful world." From the Christian standpoint, the book is sadly defective on the ground that it disowns the Messiahship of Christ, of whom it says, "very little that is trustworthy is known." But written for, and published at, the expense of a trust which exists for the promotion of Judaism, this is, of course, to be expected.

John A Lasco: A Contribution to the History of the Reformation in Poland, Germany, and England. By Dr. Hermann Dalton. Translated from the German by Rev. Maurice J. Evans, B.A. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. John A Lasco's history is not as familiar to English readers as it should be. It is attractive in itself, and important, because of the light it throws on the motives which called into play the energies of the friends and foes of the evangelical movement in Europe at the most critical stage of its development. Such a history should be mastered by all students of the Reformation period, and we are glad that it is now placed within their reach. The translation might have been better—the meaning of some sentences is as obscure as a London fog—and it stops short at A Lasco's settlement in England, when our interest in his actions is naturally most lively; but we must be thankful for what we do get. Mr. Evans holds out the prospect of an account of the Reformer's experiences in the organisation of the Church of the Foreigners at Austin Friars, and of the noble heroes associated with him in that enterprise. He here gives us Dr. Dalton's graphic narrative of John A Lasco's earlier life—of his youth, and the land in which it was spent; of his student days and wanderings; of the steps which led to his separation from Church and fatherland, and something of his labours as a Reformer in Germany and this country. The book deserves to be first carefully read in the fireside circle, and then to be placed on the shelf for reference. It is a contribution of marked value to the history of an era about which we cannot know too much.

A CHRISTIAN PHILANTHROPIST OF DUBLIN. By HANNAH MARIA WIGHAM. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. While Ireland is occupying so much public attention, any book that throws a side-light on the social condition of its people should be read with interest. This Memoir of Richard Allen makes no pretension to grapple with Irish difficulties, yet the glimpse afforded by the long and busy life of this ardent philanthropist furnishes much matter for thought on these perplexing problems. It supplies us as well with much interesting matter concerning the Anti-Slavery agitation and the early days of the temperance movement, and introduces us to many well-known characters in the world of philanthropy during the past fifty years—Garrison, Burritt, Father Mathew, Cobden, and many more, Irish, American, and English, to whom he kept open house for many years. We have besides very graphic and interesting reminiscences of summer travel in Italy and Switzerland, America and the Holy Land; missions of usefulness in connection with the Franco-German War, and the coloured population of the Southern States of America, as well as ministerial work in the Society of Friends, of which Richard Allen was a worthy and trusted member. Estimated by the amount of matter, and the literary ability with which it is compiled, it is a very cheap book.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

FRIENDLY VISITOR. 2s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. A beautifully got up volume, which will be most useful to district visitors and Sunday-school teachers, containing a great variety of short pithy papers and anecdotes.

SUNSHINE. G. Stoneman. This popular magazine, "for the home, the school, and the world," is, as usual, well stocked with sparkling stories, good illustrations, instructive articles, puzzles, poetry, &c. A capital present for the young folks.

LITTLE STAR. G. Stoneman. In type large and clear, this volume is bright with short stories, and beaming with pictures on almost every page. The editor wishes not only to amuse, but to help his young readers in trying to be obedient, kind, unselfish, and truthful, and we think he succeeds well.

THE WELCOME HOUR. Woodford, Fawcett & Co. This monthly is full of interesting matter for all classes of readers, with much useful information on various subjects, and numerous illustrations. It is tastefully bound, and while in outward appearance a very attractive volume, is well adapted for household reading.

THE BRITISH WORKMAN. S. W. Partridge & Co. This paper maintains its prestige well, and advocates its principles bravely. We should like to see it in the hands of all our workmen. THE BAND OF HOPE REVIEW. (Same publishers.) Wherever The British Workman goes for the heads of families, The Band of Hope Review should follow for the younger members of the household. It would be heartily welcomed, and could not fail of being useful.

OUR DARLINGS. 3s. J. F. Shaw & Co. For the twelfth time Dr. Barnardo sends out this volume full of beautiful pictures and interesting stories for the happy children who are in these days so bountifully supplied with mental food of both strengthening and appetising quality. Our Darlings will be welcomed everywhere, and we trust the good work advocated in its pages may be materially benefited by the wide circulation of such a charming book.

THE FIRESIDE ANNUAL. 1886. 7; Paternoster-row. Amongst the plethora of annual volumes which appear at this season, this cheerful and instructive serial of Rev. Charles Bullock's is not the least welcome. Good scriptural teaching, accompanied by articles on subjects of truly human interest, make the volume a pleasant companion for a quiet hour. Among the contents we would specially mention the series of articles on the "Poets of Home Life," in which we are brought into contact with Mrs. Hemans. Another series, entitled "The Old House at Home," gives us many important truths conveyed in a pleasing manner.

HOME WORDS FOR HEART AND HEARTH. Home Words Office. This interesting book will be sure to brighten all the homes it enters. We wish for it a wide and prosperous sphere of influence, such as it deserves. From the same office we have the volume of HAND AND HEART. It is an excellent periodical, full of well written articles, prettily bound and illustrated.

STATE REGULATED VICE AS IT EXISTED ANCIENTLY IN LONDON. 1d. Dyer Brothers. Mr. B. Scott, the Chamberlain of London, in this pamphlet gives a large amount of information on the subject to which it refers. Having access to official records, he speaks with authority. It is instructive to find what attempts were made to regulate the evil until, in the thirty-seventh year of King Henry VIII.'s reign, evil houses were put down by Royal command.

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

THE NEW LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Few chapters in the history of nations are of such world-wide interest as that pertaining to the American Civil War, and the consequent liberation of the slaves in the South. Through much fiery tribulation the great Republic was purged of this black stain in its annals. In no aspect of that great struggle was the guiding hand of God more plainly seen than in the training and preparation of him who was to be the chief actor in the dénoûment of the national drama—Abraham Lincoln. The life of this remarkable man, commenced in the November issue of The Century (Fisher Unwin, 1s. 4d.), and written by his two private secretaries, is sure to be read from month to month with eager avidity on both sides of the Atlantic. The opening chapters are of intense interest, as showing something of the way in which a young nation is reared and moulded for its destiny.

DR. TRENCH AND THE REVISION.

The new issue of The Quiver (Cassell & Co.) contains a short but very readable sketch by Professor Roberts, of St. Andrews, of the late Archbishop of Dublin, and his relation with the Company of Revisers of the New Testament. No reviser, says the writer, was more trusted by the public at large than he, probably because of his excellent little work, "On the Authorised Version of the New Testament," published twelve years before the Revision Committee began its work. Professor Roberts considers that if Dr. Trench's cautious methods had been adopted the results would have been far more satisfactory than they are; indeed, he goes so far as to express the opinion that the Revision must be deemed "the greatest literary shipwreck of the century." Dr. Trench, we are informed, rarely attended the meetings, "alienated, it may be, as I know was the case with others, by the itch for excessive change displayed by a learned and influential section of the Company."

LONDON 'BUSMEN.

In The Quiver there is also a painfully interesting account (illustrated) of the life led by that tried servant of the public, the London 'busman. The writer states, evidently from personal investigation, that the men do not grumble so much at their wages as at the long hours they have to pass on the box (in some cases seventeen hours a day), the exposure to all weathers, and the want of a decent shelter and meal time. Many 'busmen get but twelve days' rest in the whole year; but we are glad to read that the Road Car Company's omnibuses do not now run on Sundays at all. Of course, family life is impossible with the men. One of them declared to the writer that he saw so little of his children he would scarcely know them if he met them in the street! "Surely, oh Christian civilisation, these things are not necessities of thy development!"

"GOOD WORDS" AND "SUNDAY MAGAZINE."

In Good Words, Dr. Marcus Dods discusses the effects of Christianity on civilisation. Christianity, he says, proposes "to establish the kingdom of God upon earth, or, in other words, to bring all human affairs into the happiest condition." An appeal to history will make it clear that Christianity has supplied the fatal defect in ancient civilisation—the defect of morality—and has assimilated and adapted to the uses of modern society all that was valuable in ancient civilisation. Dr. Dods refers to the gradual extirpation of slavery as an example. "No institution seemed so firmly established; to many most discerning men it seemed an ordinance of nature. But by the slow leavening of Christian sentiment, and by the vigorous assertion of Christian principle, society has at length thrown off this incubus, and in the act of doing so, has made a measureless stride in civilisation."

In The Sunday Magazine Mr. Holden Pike discourses on a century of Bible distribution, showing the marvellous advance in the dissemination of the Scriptures, and the happy augury this gives for the near future. Rev. F. Hastings writes on "Sunday observance in Copenhagen as giving signs of improvement." In a short paper by Rev. J. W. Horsley on "Drunkenness and Crime," he fortifies, by many statistics, his opinion that 75 per cent. of the crime of the country is the result of drink, direct or indirect. Mr. Horsley's statement has the fatal defect of not suggesting any cure for this sad state of things, but if the nation as a whole could only be convinced of the evil, some remedy would surely be found.

The Christmas issue of Good Words is a pathetic and realistic tale called "Edelweiss" (6d.), with characteristic engravings by Mr. H. Furniss, the well-known Punch artist. "Little Snow Flakes" (6d.) contains as usual a number of children's Christmas stories and sketches, profusely and quaintly illustrated (Isbister & Co.).

The Quiver has a portrait (indifferent) of Miss Hedenström, and a brief account of her work among Scandinavians.

A very interesting account of Sunday-school work in "the land of the midnight sun" (Norway), appears in Young England (S.S. Union. 4d.). Dr. Stables continues his stirring story, "Under the Northern Lights."

Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s budget include the first number of a new and revised edition of the Illustrated History of England (7d.), with accompanying presentation plate, "The Armada is in sight," Every English boy and girl who wishes to know the past history of his native land, should subscribe for this attractive and finely illustrated serial.

THE CHRISTIAN KARENS, says The Missionary News, have been brought into prominence during the recent troubles in Burmah. While the heathen of all other races have almost uniformly proved hostile to the British Government, they have remained loyal, and rendered almost the only effective service in the suppression of the revolt. Their influence has also had so much effect on the heathen Karens, that they have generally been kept loyal. Many of the Christian Karens have been highly rewarded for distinguished gallantry.

MONS. AND MADAME FOURNIER purpose keeping open, during the winter months, a Convalescent Home at Hyères. The Home was opened on November 1. For further information apply to Monsieur le Pasteur Fournier, Villa Bellevue, Hyères, Var.

NEWCASTLE Y.W.C.A.—At the annual soirée of the Y.W.C.A. at Newcastle-on-Tyne, last week, Mrs. Ormiston Chant gave a stirring address, proposing that everyone in the room should do with a pair of kid gloves less, and give the price to the Institution. Thus a "Glove Brigade" might be formed. She did not desire to see girls dowdies, but she did not think that anyone who entered into the spirit of the work would go swaggering about with a steel cage behind her, wear a bird's wing on her bonnet, or have her hair in a despicable fringe to cover the noblest part of her face.

RAGGED-SCHOOL UNION.—An interesting gathering of old scholars took place on Tuesday week at the Coster's Mission, Hoxton. There were representatives from twenty schools and Missions of those who had given hopeful testimony of conversion, and who would be likely to be helpful as future teachers and workers. Mr. Orsman presided, and an earnest address was given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, on "Come, Follow, Abide." This was followed by an open Conference, in which Messrs. Kirk, Montague, and several of the young people took part.

No extra payment required under the Institution's Policies after this date (May, 1886), on account of Occupation or Foreign Travel or Residence in any part of the World (always excepting risks in time of war).

MEDICAL OFFICERS—Dr. JAMES EDMUNDS, 8, Grafton-street, Piccadilly; Dr. THOMAS BARLOW, 10, Montague-street, Russell-square.
SOLICITOR—FRANCIS HOWSE, Esq., 3, Abchurch-yard, E.C. CONSULTING ACTUARY—RALPH P. HARDY, Esq.

POSITION OF THE INSTITUTION, JUNE, 1886.

Accumulated Capital, £3,817,000; Annual Income, £435,000; Amount Paid for Claims through Death, £2,518,000.

The Institution comprises two distinct sections—Temperance and General. In the former only total abstainers from alcoholic liquors are assured, and in the latter are included only "moderate drinkers" of strictly temperate habits, the same care being exercised in selecting lives for each section. The premium rates of the two sections are the same; but separate accounts are kept of the mortality, funds, income, and profit of each section; and total abstainers are thus guaranteed, in the form of Bonus, the full advantage of their principles. The following is a summary of the Institution's Mortality Experience under Whole-Life Policies during the 20 years—1866 to 1885:—

YEARS.	TEMPERANCE SECTION.		GENERAL SECTION.
	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.	Expected Claims.	Actual Claims.
1866-70. 5 Years.	549	411	1008	944
1871-75. 5 Years.	723	511	1268	1330
1876-80. 5 Years.	933	651	1485	1480
1881-85. 5 Years.	1179	835	1670	1530
Total—20 Years.	3384	2408	5431	5284

It will be seen by this that the Claims in the Temperance Section are only a little over 71 per cent. of the "expected," while in the General Section they slightly exceed 97 per cent. of the "expected."

At the Division of Profits, at 31st December, 1885, as the result of this superior vitality of Total Abstainers, the Bonuses on Whole-Life Policies of the Temperance Section were considerably in excess of those of the General Section.

A consideration of these figures will convince Total Abstainers of the desirableness of insuring in this Institution, in the interests both of themselves and those dependent on them. For Prospectus and any further information, apply to
